Mr. WEIDEMAN. So that the Members may understand the terms the gentleman uses I wish he would tell us just whom he includes in the bootleggers and racketeers, so that we can follow his argument.

Mr. MARLAND. Any producer of oil, large or small, that produces oil in violation of the laws of the State in which he is producing. All of the racketeers are not small producers.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARLAND. I yield.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman spoke of the oil-producing States. Does he include Pennsylvania in that?

Mr. MARLAND. I do.

Mr. SNYDER. Does it cost more to produce oil in the State of Pennsylvania than it does in Oklahoma?

Mr. MARLAND. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it a higher grade oil and does it sell for more than it does in the gentleman's State?

Mr. MARLAND. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Is the racketeering going on in our State of Pennsylvania the same as in the gentleman's State?

Mr. MARLAND. I cannot speak advisedly on that. I think not.

Mr. SNYDER. Is there a sufficient duty on oil being shipped from foreign countries to prevent that shipment into the United States?

Mr. MARLAND. That question is not in this bill. I think the duty is not sufficient to protect the Pennsylvania oil fields.

The purpose of this bill is to aid and assist the oil-producing States in enforcing their conservation laws passed to prevent the waste of this irreplaceable natural resource. The people of the United States are widely interested in this subject. A continuation of uncontrolled production of oil in flush fields will mean the closing of 300,000 small wells in the United States. Those old small wells are a great national asset. The old wells of the State of Pennsylvania are a great asset to this Nation. The ultimate yield of oil from the 300,000 small wells in the United States will be vastly greater than the yield from the 30,000 or 50,000 flush wells in the United States. The small wells, therefore, must not be destroyed.

No one with knowledge of the subject can predict at this time, with any degree of certainty, the amount of our national petroleum resources, or how soon the time will come when every barrel from these small wells will be needed. Anyone versed in geology of petrolium will tell you that all wells in the United States at present existing will be incapable in 3 years from this time of producing an amount of oil sufficient to meet the then current demand. Of course, we will probably discover new fields before the exhaustion of these old wells, and I do not look for a shortage of oil for many years to come. But some day that shortage is coming, and this country should take steps immediately to preserve this great natural resource.

The bill I have introduced, as I say, is the result of the work of the Interior Department. It represents many weeks of earnest study and consultation. I hope it will be possible to hold hearings immediately on this bill and have it reported out for consideration and passage by this House during this special session. If that is not done, a great majority of corporations in the petroleum industry will fail before this summer is over and an irreplaceable natural resource will be lost.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARLAND. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the gentleman to say that the purpose of this bill was to aid the State in conserving the oil?

Mr. MARLAND. That is right.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it not a fact that the purpose of this bill is to oppose the State of Texas in the exercise of its power to govern oil production in this State?

Mr. MARLAND. The purpose of this act is to protect the relative rights of the oil-producing States. The State of Texas needs protection itself from imports from Venezuela, Rumania, and Mesopotamia.

Mr. BAILEY. But it is a fact, is it not, that the oil industry is opposed to the order which the constituted authorities of the State of Texas have issued permitting production from the east Texas field?

Mr. MARLAND. The oil interests?

Mr. BAILEY. The oil industry and the oil men.

Mr. MARLAND. I think there are very few oil men who at this time seek to violate the orders of the Railway Commission of Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. But the gentleman did not answer my question. The order of the Railroad Commission of Texas permitted a total production of 750,000 barrels from east Texas. That is the thing which the oil industry is after suppressing, is it not?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MARLAND] has expired.

MARKETING OF APPLES AND PEARS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 4812) to promote the foreign trade of the United States in apples and/or pears, to protect the reputation of American-grown apples and pears in foreign markets, to prevent deception or misrepresentation as to the quality of such products moving in foreign commerce, to provide for the commercial inspection of such products entering such commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, why should a bill of this kind come up in this way out of order? I cannot understand the reason for it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the gentleman will permit me to explain, I will tell him why. This will be very helpful—

Mr. BLANTON. Has the President of the United States sent this bill here and asked that it be passed?

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE, ROME, ITALY

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution, H.Res. 149.

House Resolution 149

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 149, authorizing an annual appropriation for the expenses of participation by the United States in the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, and all points of order are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, and I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present. I think there should be a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman will reserve his point of order, I asked that the House meet at 11 o'clock today with the express promise to the House that we would take up these two rules and try to conclude general debate upon the banking bill. If the gentleman is going to make a point of order of no quorum and take 30 or 40 minutes to call the roll, we will have to stay here that much later tonight.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend that he knows he is my leader and I follow him, but I cannot follow him on something that is uneconomical and unsound.

Now, what is the use of debating an important matter like this with only about 120 Members present, when the ones now absent are going to have to vote on it after a while and will not know anything about what they are voting on?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Members will be here.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee has a way of getting them here without a roll call, and with his assurance that he will get them here, I am content. So I am still following my leader and withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for the submission of a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I yield for that purpose only.

CONGRESS—THE NATION'S SCAPEGOAT

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating therein an article which appears in Scribners for June of this year entitled "Congress, the Nation's Scapegoat," written by a former Member of this House in defense of the House, Hon. F. H. LaGuardia.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman from Oregon will not object.

Mr. KELLER. The article ought to be printed.

Mr. BLANTON. This is from our good friend LaGuardia, and is the first time a kind word has been said for Congress in a long time.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. What is the nature of the article?

Mr. KVALE. It is an article in defense of Congress and its procedure, showing the pressure that comes upon the Membership of this House from all kinds of agencies.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I understand the RECORD is reserved for speeches of present Members, not past Members.

Mr. KVALE. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman will let it go in. It is the first kind word Congress has had in a long time.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Let me see the article. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following article written by F. H. LaGuardia, of New York:

It has been my lot for the past 20 years to come to the defense of the persecuted. Invariably that meant being in a minority. It would seem, therefore, in keeping with that record, that it is timely and proper for me to come now to the defense of Congress. Congress may not be half as good as I believe it to be—certainly it is not one tenth as bad as Wall Street says it is. The drive—and it was a drive—against Congress and the well-planned, systematic, organized attacks upon it were initiated by minority groups who for a long time had been the recipient of favored legislation, the beneficiaries of legalized exploitation, the promoters of inequitable laws. The abuse of and antagonism to Congress were started by the financial interests concentrated on the lower tip of Manhattan Island. They soon became contagious. The whole country for several months has been heaping abuse upon its own chosen representatives.

Only representative government is suitable to the American people. They are not adapted to any other kind of government. Countries that have never had or have been deprived of representative government have a full appreciation of the benefits and necessity of a Parliament or Congress. There has been great clamor recently on the part of moneyed interests for a dictatorship. Extraordinary powers granted to the President in our country can be only occasional and temporary. A dictatorship simply could not endure. Even though an American dictator were superhumanly perfect and infallibly wise, there would be no stability or continuity of rights. If a dictator is despotic, the masses will revolt; if he is unduly benevolent, the classes will resist. It is not benevolence that the American people seek, but the enforcement of legally established rights.

The framers of the Constitution might have failed in detailing the necessary regulation of an involved industrial system, which at the time did not exist and which was then beyond contemplation. They did know human nature—the virtues and vices, the weaknesses and frailties of mankind. They provided as perfect a form of government as imperfect human beings could live under. They visualized an enormous population growth in this country and provided a form of government as nearly democratic as was possible in a country of extensive territory and for a nation of millions of people. Most reformers of economics are constitutional fundamentalists. Representative government is not suited to a small class who would own all the property and money and control the destinies of a country. Representative government controlled by the people will not indefinitely tolerate exploitation of the workers, concentration of wealth, and mass poverty. Economic security for all willing workers is a necessary concomitant with political freedom and individual liberty guaranteed by our Constitution. The Constitution created Congress. Its powers are well defined. Abuse of Congress is the privilege of every free American citizen. Criticism and abuse of a dictator would not be tolerated. Suppression of opinion is the first restriction the American people would feel.

Naturally, Congress has its faults. It often takes time to enact legislation. Long-drawn-out debates and discussions are the rule. An impartial review of the legislative history of this country will disclose that a great deal of vicious legislation has been defeated by what might at the time have seemed unduly protracted debates. It will also be seen that the greatest mistakes have been made when legislation was jammed through without proper and complete debates and discussion, under the pressure of unexpected emergencies. I fear some of the recently enacted legislation may prove that way.

Congress is a representative body. It is but natural that there should be every shade of thought and viewpoint in that body. That is what makes it representative. Every section of the country has its local interests. It is quite in keeping with proper representation to seek to reconcile, as far as is compatible, local interests with national legislation. Nothing short of complete hearings on all sides of a subject before committees, followed by full debate in the House and Senate, would enable final adjustment and compromise on legislation for a country of such magnitude and diversified interests as ours.

Lobbying has been going on from the first session of the first Congress. In all likelihood it will continue. There are different kinds of lobbying. Some are quite legitimate. Of the illegitimate lobbying I would say it has very little direct influence on Congress. Many State legislatures have enacted antilobbying laws when activities became too brazen and disreputable. At one time we had an epidemic of antilobbying bills pending in both Houses of Congress. I doubt if such laws really are effective. They do not hurt the faker and do not deter the rogue. A lobbying law will no more prevent lobbying than prohibition prevented drinking. The vicious lobbyist will always work under cover and he knows how and what contacts to make. Such lobbyists seldom make contacts directly with Members of Congress. So-called "big lobbyists" do not operate in Washington. Their approach is through the political boss back home. It is in this way that a legislator is very often "delivered." He may be entirely innocent, though not alert. If he is up to his job and legislates according to his judgment and conscience, nothing of the sort can be put over on him. A thoroughly honest but politically weak legislator who would indignantly spurn the suggestions of a lobbyist might willingly accept the ostensibly friendly advice of a political boss. Our political system is at fault—not Congress as a constitutional institution.

Many lobbyists receive big fees. Disclosures by a United States senatorial investigation committee some time ago revealed huge fees received by men whose names were not known to the vast majority of Members of the House and Senate. Their dealings were with the "big shots" of political parties. In the case of the sugar lobby—with the "very big shots."

Then there is the secret or implied obligations assumed by political parties. Just before election when resolution committees of political parties are formulating platforms, their financial committees are seeking contributions. It can safely be said that large contributions are generally given with the expectation of returns in some form or another. The big contributor to political campaigns makes it his business to see to it that his contribution is made through the right contact man. Perhaps nothing is said at the time the contribution is made. Later when legislation is pending that affects that contributor, the former acquaintance is renewed, the subject discussed, obligation recalled, and desired results obtained. This is true of both parties.

The control of national legislation by predatory interests began to slip after the ratification of the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution. The popular election of Senators made it difficult for special interests to control Congress. Since then these same interests which became powerful and rich through special legislation and for many years were able to check social, welfare, and progressive laws, commenced their attacks on Congress and have kept it up ever since. The attacks cease only during those periods when crises demand legislation. As soon as the legislation is obtained, the attack is renewed and a howl is heard for Congress to adjourn, go home, and "give business a chance."

Congress was directly blamed by members of the New York Stock Exchange in their circulars, letters, bulletins, and in paid advertisements for the decline of stock and security prices. Yet the greatest decline took place during the time that Congress was not in session. In the same breath in which the very men responsible for the bank crashes, security frauds, and tax evasions were abusing Congress, it was necessary for the President to call a special session of Congress to provide relief for them. When Congress authorized the issuance of currency and provided emergency measures to meet the banking situation, it was all hall to Congress. At the moment of this writing, when Congress is struggling with farm relief, the same bankers, stockbrokers, bond mongers, and floor traders are shouting for Congress to adjourn and denouncing all farm-relief measures as demagogic, unsound, and disastrous.

The Government is no longer something mysterious, distant, and impersonal. A long period of public education has been slowly taking effect. Economic necessity has hastened the process. The people have learned that the Government is in their control. The people have learned that the Representative in the House is there to reflect the views of his neighbors back home and that their Senator is there to reflect the viewpoint of his State. They demand contact with their representatives and information as to the activities of Congress.

Recently there has been coined the phrase "organized minority." This phrase was coined by qualified experts who themselves actually are an organized minority. Much has been said about the power of minority groups and of the weakness of Congress in submitting to the demands of organized minorities. Veterans' legislation is constantly cited as an example of the power of an organized minority. When veterans' legislation was enacted, it was at the demand not of a minority group but of an overwhelming majority of the American people. When this majority abandoned the veterans or left the veterans to themselves and asked Congress to change existing laws in order to reduce expenditures for allowances theretofore authorized to veterans Congress responded immediately.

The actual situation of the so-called "organized minority of veterans" can be easily analyzed. It was not a minority. The average congressional district is composed of about nine counties. There are but 65 Members of the House out of 435 whose districts are entirely within city limits. It is true that the number of veterans of the World War constitutes but a small percentage of our entire population. Yet let us look at the situation. There are thousands of veterans' posts scattered throughout the United States. There are 5 or 6 national veterans' organizations and hundreds of local service organizations. These posts are in every city, town, and village in every county of every State. The veteran is not clannish—the organizations are not exclusive. Veterans are very active in their communities. "Nothing is too good for the veterans" was the slogan of the nonservice people and adopted as a national policy. The veterans' interest became the people's interest. During that period of 5 or 6 years when most of the veterans' legislation was enacted, everybody at home was for it. There were no protests. On the contrary, from every city, town, village, and hamlet came resolutions from patriotic, civic, social, fraternal, religious, and every other kind of organizations; yes, and from business associations, and also from boards of aldermen and town councils and city officials and even from State legislatures, urging the passage of the legislation for veterans which Congress was considering. It was not the result of the activities of a minority group at all—it was Congress in its representative capacity carrying out the almost unanimous demands of the American people.

Later, there came strong protests against the immediate cash payment of the bonus. The veterans were then in a minority and the cash bonus bill was defeated during the first session of the Seventy-second Congress. As long as public opinion remains against it, there will be no such legislation.

I have also heard it said that prohibition was brought about by an organized minority. I doubt that. The fight for prohibition had been going on in Congress for over 20 years. During that period State after State had adopted State-wide prohibition. Delegations from dry States voted for national prohibition. As the number of States in the dry column having State-wide prohibition increased, likewise the number of votes in the House and Senate increased, until the number grew to the necessary two-thirds vote. I know, for I was in a lonesome minority in the early days of my opposition to prohibition and my legislative efforts for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. The change of national sentiment on prohibition was gradual. It took 10 years, five Congresses, from the time when I first exposed corruption, graft, waste of public funds, and even murder in the course of prohibition enforcement, when I was jeered and sneered at by the overwhelming majority of my colleagues in the House, to the time when the resolution calling for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment was passed with a safe majority over the necessary two-thirds vote, after only 40 minutes' discussion in that same House. It was necessary to undergo these years of trial before a large number of sincere American citizens who really believed in prohibition was convinced that as a national policy it was a failure and that as a national law it could not be enforced. When the majority of the American people realized that, their viewpoint was immediately reflected in the House of Representatives and in the United States Senate. It was not a wet minority group that brought about this change. There may be at this writing a wet minority group that will again become active in seeking to prevent proper supervision and regulation of the liquor traffic. That same minority might seek again to reinstate the liquor interests in politics and reestablish conditions of old. It cannot succeed. If it should be partially successful, public opinion of the majority would curb such activities and again the lid of prohibition would be clamped on.

The dwindling power of strong lobbies may be seen in the waning influence of the Manufacturers' Association. This association is a great organization composed of manufacturers throughout the country. In former times, when this organization or its predecessors made demands upon Congress, it generally got them. Its power is becoming less each year. It did have an isolated victory in the last tariff bill enacted in the Seventy-first Congress. That organization has written its last tariff bill. It could not now permanently block any piece of beneficial legislation. As a minority it is fighting national child labor laws. That fight is not over. The child-labor amendment to the Constitution will be eventually ratified in spite of the present setback. While I have heard the lobby of this organization severely criticized, its activities in Washington during the last 14 years have been within the realm of propriety as far as I have been able to observe. For many years it was able to defeat the anti-injunction law curbing the abuse of the Federal courts in labor disputes and ending the use of the so-called "yellow dog" contract. In 1932 when a bill was finally perfected upon which all elements of the labor movement agreed and lawyers were convinced of its constitutionality, all efforts of the Manufacturers' Association were futile.

A great deal has been said in metropolitan newspapers about the farm lobby and the farm bloc. The present plight of the farmers—and the lack of legislation favorable to them—is the complete proof that to date there has been no undue influence on Congress either by a farm bloc, farm groups, or any organized minority. Up to a few years ago concerted action by the farmers and their Representatives, owing to conflicting interests, seemed impossible. The politicians and the commodity exchanges skillfully utilized this conflict and for a long time were able to keep the farmers divided among themselves and the city Representatives aligned against all farm legislation. It would seem incredible to any student of economics that up to only a year or two ago Representatives from city districts opposed farm legislation on the ground that it would "increase the cost of living," these same Representatives and their predecessors for generations having sponsored high tariffs. Then again, along the fringe of every farm community there are the wholesalers, jobbers, and persons under the domination and control of city interests who thrive on the exploitation of the farmer. The worst enemies the farmers have had in the American Congress are the individuals here and there representing grain or cotton sections who, through their home connections, were in one way or another under the influence of the cotton exchange, the grain exchange, or the ticker broker.

The four great national farm organizations have enlarged and are constantly improving their organizations. While perhaps they might have taken active parts in bitterly contested local elections, from my observation the activities of their representatives in Washington have always been carried on with dignity, propriety, and I would say helpfulness to the legislator who wanted accurate facts. True, several farm relief bills have been passed; but it must be remembered that they have always been modified, weakened, and distorted through the selfish influence of the commodity exchanges, cotton and grain gamblers. A stabilization plan was first resisted and finally defeated by these influences. The cooperative-marketing plan never did have a fair trial. It was resisted, then emasculated, and finally passed. It could not be successful under the supervision of an administration following the Mellon school of economics.

Until the relation of the economic condition of the farmer to the country as a whole is understood by a majority of our people it will be impossible to restore prosperity. The farmers of our country have recently undergone a very liberal though costly education. They are no longer to be fooled. The professional politicians have lost control of them. It is to be hoped forever. If the commodity exchanges, along with the commodity gamblers, continue their ruinous policies of exploitation, there is grave danger that the farmers may take the situation in their own hands as they did a few months ago to preserve their homes against the greed of the usurers and the loan sharks. The farmers as such are in the minority as to population. It must not be forgotten that the majority of the population depends entirely for its food upon this minority. This unorganized minority must be reinforced by the thinking people of the cities. An understanding between railroad workers and farmers could in 24 hours tie up the food supply of this country. Is it fair that this important part of our population should be driven into a state of tenant peasantry, deprived of their homes, reduced to a low standard of living, and subjugated to abject misery because of the ruthless system of permitting a few parasites to gamble on the products of their toil? The farmers have had as a whole very splendid and loyal representation. These men were bucking an artificial system of distribution existing for scores of years and becoming progressively more vicious each year. Here and there a Representative from the farm districts would fall by the wayside.

I remember one who came from the Midwest as a great champion of the farmer and an exponent of farm legislation. What a voice he had. He was immediately recognized as a leader in the House. A charming personality and a forceful character, but alas, the boys from the Northeast soon saw the possibilities of this 250-pound legislator. My, my, how he was courted and taken into the folds of society. Before long as our friend would come into the reading room instead of stopping to look at the weather map to see how crops might be affected, he would make a wild dive for a metropolitan newspaper and turn to the stock-market reports. He is no longer in Congress.

When I say that organized labor has not influenced national legislation to any great extent, I know that such a statement will attract a howl of protest. Nevertheless, it is a fact. There is no better proof that Congress has not acted sufficiently or intelligently on behalf of labor than is the existing disastrous condition. Congress has met every year since the adoption of our present Constitution almost 150 years ago, during which time we have seen grow and develop a gigantic system of mechanized industry. Labor-saving devices have come upon us constantly with increased efficiency, so that now our industries can in 3 months produce more than the whole Nation can consume in 1 year. Industry is entirely mechanized and farming almost entirely industrialized. Yet, under an unpardonable misconception, Congress has permitted labor conditions to remain at a standstill while progress has been made in electricity, chemistry, mechanics, and transportation. It has been satisfied with the excuse that the Federal Government had no jurisdiction under a Constitution which was written and adopted at a time when railroads were unknown, steam not yet applied, electricity in the laboratory experimental stage, and manufacture limited to hand labor and man power.

Labor is also to blame. It was satisfied for many years to engage in local politics, and with this went along partisan allegiance and political control. In late years a most competent and able staff of legislative advisers has been brought together in Washington by the American Federation of Labor. The custom of rewarding local labor leaders with local political appointments in return for political support has been at a sacrifice to the cause of labor. But here, again, legislators have had a liberal, though costly, education through the sufferings of millions of people, through hundreds of thousands of bankruptcies and bank failures. It has finally been recognized by real leaders in thought that the only purchasing power of American industry is the American wage earner and the American farmer. During the period of gambling and speculation when the country was at the height of the stock-ticker prosperity, each year more workers were being laid off until the final crash came in 1929. When an inventory was taken, it was found that there were several million men and women unemployed. The number has increased ever since. It is now over 12,000,000. Industrial and economic conditions have woven our 48 States into one economic fabric. If the Constitution does not permit Congress to enact labor laws fixing the hours of labor in all States of the Union, providing for uniform factory regulations and supervision, minimum wage, inhibition against the employment of children (an interpretation which I will not concede), then the Constitution should have been amended long ago to permit such legislation. Perhaps someone may point to the 8-hour law and the recent Railway Labor Act as indicating national labor legislation. Correct, although both of these measures are but a tiny step in the right direction. The validity of these laws, as established by the Supreme Court, strengthens my belief that Congress, particularly in the face of a national crisis, could so legislate as to reconcile working conditions to our present mechanized mass-production system and bring about economic security to the producers of our country. In other words, adapt existing machinery to human beings instead of expecting 126,000,000 human beings to adapt themselves to machinery. We must distribute the blessings of science. We must equalize the enjoyment of progress.

Now, we come to the most peculiar and let me say the most effective form of lobbying in Washington. That lobby is not conducted by any private interest, but by two of the executive departments of the Government itself, that of the Army and Navy. It just cannot be beaten. The Navy had an effective lobby long before the Army even attempted to start its own in about 1920. I will not say that some of the complaints of the Army and Navy are not justified. For instance, the pay of the junior officers is wretchedly low. On the other hand, I will say that they invoke every possible influence to prevent legislation they consider inimical to their own interests. At creating public opinion by the subtle use of propaganda, the Navy is a past master. There is nothing they will not do from moving an entire fleet a thousand miles for the purpose of a spectacular entrance into a port at the time when legislation for additional ships is under consideration, to the turning over of the Naval Academy for the purpose of making a commercial film. Rest assured the Navy will get its message into that film while the company will take the profits from the box receipts.

The Army and Navy will play practical politics, too. A specific instance of politics might be seen in the consideration of the 1932 Army appropriation bill. Efforts were made to reduce the cost of the Army by eliminating a number of supernumerary and supernumerary officers. The Army put all of its resources to work and on a division vote in the House the amendment was defeated by a comparatively small margin. The entire Tammany delegation voted with the Army. Then, lo and behold, the Army and Navy Journal said:

"John F. Curry, the leader of Tammany Hall, paid a visit to Governors Island last week. This modest gentleman, who has risen by brains and integrity to the captaincy of the great political organization which rules New York, came and went unheralded. Commanders of the area have invited him to be their guest, but important business or social engagements prevented his acceptance. On this occasion, however, he went quietly to the island to see Capt. A. C. Purvis, whom he had had appointed to West Point. [Italics mine.] He has told his friends that he enjoyed himself, and we are glad he did so. Mr. Curry is a strong advocate of adequate national defense. He makes no secret of his attitude nor of the fact that Tammany, under his leadership, is determined to uphold the policy of patriotism. It was that policy which, observed by the members of the society's delegation in Congress, defeated the destructive provisions by which Mr. COLLINS sought to hamstring national defense. To Mr. Curry and Tammany the country and the Army are heavily indebted." (Army and Navy Journal, May 21, 1932.)

Brains and integrity!

As if this were not enough, there appears in the issue of July 16, 1932:

"The power and independence and patriotism of that great organization known as 'Tammany' were never better illustrated than in the matter of the officers' cut. * * * It is possible to attribute this solidarity largely to the attitude of that brilliant leader, John F. Curry. * * * The Army is grateful to Mr. Curry and the Tammany representatives in the Senate and House."

This a few weeks after Judge Samuel Seabury submitted his report on the Tammany administration.

The Washington social lobby is perhaps the most insidious. Its technique is awkward, its purpose apparent. It, too, is fast losing its influence. For a time during the "cocktail era" it looked as if the social lobby were in the ascendancy and would again come into its own. Economic conditions, however, have made the people back home too alert and the social lobby is again on the decline. There is nothing the social lobby will not do to influence legislation upon subjects ranging from a special schedule in a tariff bill to the lowering of an income tax, or the restoration of the dress uniform of the United States marines. It is ever ready to wile the doubtful, entertain the weak, lionize the prominent, and cater to the influential. Sometimes there are strange results of this mixture of the social and political. Only recently at the home of one of Washington's most influential dowagers, a home that has entertained lavishly and often for many years, where many bills were put across, over demi-tasse and cigarettes, a supposedly prominent Senator from a small Eastern State was the "ranking guest." That in the parlance of the Washington parvenu means the guest of honor. The Senator was chairman of a subcommittee, having a certain bill under consideration and giving that bill the pigeon-hole treatment of slow, painless, but certain death. The Senator accepted the invitation. The right ones were invited to give the Senator the social works. Well, it so happened that at the time that particular subcommittee had several important bills before it and the chairman was much in demand. He stopped at other "conferences" before going to the affair of the evening.

The Senator was in good fettle. He displayed his most gracious and courtly manners. An invitation from this particular hostess was the certificate absolute that "one had arrived socially." "He likes it," murmured the wise ones. Dinner was announced. The "ranking guest", of course, sat at the hostess' right. The hors d'œuvres were served and the Senator was quite talkative. The soup was served and the Senator became most loquacious. Then the Senator became quite friendly, and real clubby. Placing his arms around the shoulders of his hostess he prepared to tell one of the latest and choicest of cloakroom stories. The hostess was embarrassed, the "wise ones" startled, the young ones snickered, the butler grunted, but everyone maintained dignity. Washington always does.

Congress is not faultless, it has its defects and shortcomings. It is representative of the American people. Congressional government may be at times inefficient and often wasteful. Many forms of government may be thought of as more efficient and less costly, but they are not American. Mistakes are made, experiments are tried. As mistakes are discovered and experiments proved failures, correction is rapid and certain. The Membership of Congress is human, and fortunately has a sense of humor. It is the constant target for ridicule and abuse which it has learned to absorb quickly and good naturedly. It is the people's government and it will always be as alert, as intelligent, and as constructive as the people themselves.

INTERNATIONAL AGRICULTURE INSTITUTE, ROME, ITALY

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 149, authorizing an annual appropriation for the expenses of participation by the United States in the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, and all points of order are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana has very kindly consented to yield for consideration of the little bill called up by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SCHULTE. No; I did not. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. WOODRUM. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SCHULTE. I said to wait until we discussed some of these other matters.

Mr. WOODRUM. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, before I proceed may I say to my colleague from Pennsylvania that we do not apprehend that we will use very much of the half hour on this side, but I will yield to the gentleman the usual half hour to be used by him as he may see fit.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 149, authorizing an annual appropriation for the expenses of participation by the United States in the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy.

I am informed that the International Institute of Agriculture is a sort of world clearing house for statistical information affecting agriculture throughout the world.

The resolution provides for general debate not to exceed 1 hour, which must be confined to the resolution; and the resolution is open to amendment under the general rules of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POUL. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the situation, we have not appropriated for, and have not been a member of, this conference for several years, have we?

Mr. POUL. I think that is true.

Mr. SNELL. Have any dire results come about by reason of our not being a member?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield that I may reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. POUL. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. We have always been a member of this Institute. We are a member at the present time. We have been appropriating money right along, but in the last 2 years we have not been appropriating as much as we did previously.

Mr. SNELL. Has it only been the last 2 years that we have not been appropriating?

Mr. BLOOM. We reduced the appropriation 2 years ago. If the gentleman is interested, and cares to have them, the figures are these:

In 1928 we appropriated $54,340. In 1929, $58,000. In 1931 we reduced the appropriation to $15,260. In 1932 we reduced the appropriation to $11,060. However, we have always been in; we have never been out.

Mr. SNELL. Have we had a representative there, and have we really gotten any benefits from this conference?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes, we have secured a great deal of benefit; and it is on account of lack of information in the last 2 years similar to that received by the Government right along theretofore that they want to go back in. We have been in since 1906, and had been in 100 percent up to 1928. Then certain things happened and we had to step out.

Mr. SNELL. What are those certain things?

Mr. BLOOM. It was regarding certain management over there at the time, certain officials. That has been changed at the request of the Government.

Mr. SNELL. Why should an agricultural conference be called in Italy?

Mr. BLOOM. As soon as I get the floor in consideration of the bill I shall be pleased to explain.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. POUL. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is not the only change sought to be made in existing law by the bill which is to be made in order by this rule the creation of a $7,000 job in Italy?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. LEHLBACH. What other change from existing law is there?

Mr. BLOOM. The change is that the party who was the representative of the United States in Italy heretofore, receiving a salary of $5,000 a year, was a very wealthy man, and he was spending the additional sum of money that was necessary out of his own pocket. To secure the services of the proper kind of representative over there the Secretary of Agriculture states we ought to have at least a $7,500 a year man.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman give me the right to appoint a $5,000 man who will do the job?

Mr. LEHLBACH. With the permission of the gentleman from North Carolina, may I ask one further question of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. POUL. I yield for one more question.

Mr. BLOOM. I shall be very pleased to explain the entire matter at the time I have the floor.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I simply want to ask one more question.

Mr. BLOOM. I have not the floor at this time.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman refuses to explain the bill, well and good, but we want to know it.

Mr. BLOOM. I have not the floor.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I should prefer not to attempt to answer questions respecting the merits of this joint resolution, because the 1 hour of general debate will be devoted to a discussion of the merits.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs has asked for the rule providing for the consideration of Joint Resolution 149. The Secretary of State approves the passage of the resolution.

This institution is a great clearing house of statistical information, and it looks a little bit cheap for the United States of America to refuse to participate.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN], who has had experience with this Institute and will give the House first-hand information.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take very much time this morning, but I did listen with a good deal of interest to the remarks that were made yesterday concerning this project, and I will be frank in saying I do not think it should degenerate into a petty quarrel here on the floor of the House on the part of anyone. I happen to have had a little first-hand experience with this particular project as related to the various nations of the world some time ago.

I may say also in answer, probably, to a premeditated question, that I was not over in Europe at the expense of the Federal Government, either. I was over there on my own hook. I was over there for the purpose of securing information, which I was able to secure partly through the agency and the assistance of the International Institute of Agriculture.

The question was asked a moment ago by the distinguished leader of the minority as to why this agricultural conference should be held in Rome or why it is located there. There is a reason for this. The institute was founded back about 1905 by a certain David Lubin, of California. He had previously urged upon the United States that the institution be established in Washington under the supervision and with the assistance of the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture from my State, Tamm Jim Wilson, but the United States did not see fit to set it up at that time. However, the King of Italy, King Victor Emmanuel, did see some advantages in the establishment of an institution of this kind, and under his auspices and with his assistance David Lubin brought into being the International Institute of Agriculture, in Rome.

I am making these statements simply because I think the House should have a little information on this subject before they vote on it. Whether you vote for it or against it is your privilege, but you ought to know something about the International Institute of Agriculture.

Now, what is it doing? It is not a junket. It is not sending somebody over there on a summer vacation. I would not go over to Italy and live in Rome and be the representative of the United States Government at the International Institute of Agriculture for $15,000 a year, but I will say that I think we ought to have a man over there; and if we can get him to go over there, we should participate in this organization because it is valuable from a lot of standpoints.

In the first place, it is gathering some information that is more valuable to individual farmers than the average farmer realizes. I am living on an Iowa farm, and consequently I feel I speak with a little authority and a little interest in this project. I want to say to you that they are gathering information of an extremely valuable nature. No Member of this House, I dare say, realizes that much of our present farm-loan system in the United States was drawn from observations of David Lubin from the experiences of other countries through the agency of the International Institute of Agriculture.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Not until I have finished my statement.

Another very interesting development with respect to this particular project is the matter of trade relations and the movement of products. This institution is interested in gathering information upon the amount of farm products that are being produced in certain countries and determining where they can be transported for the purpose of disposing of surpluses. In other words, people who are interested in the domestic allotment bill on the floor of this House ought to be interested in this institution for the reason they are working in the same general direction.

I am not authorized to speak for the President of the United States, and I would not attempt to do so; but I will venture the suggestion upon my own authority that it may be possible Mr. Roosevelt is looking upon the International Institute of Agriculture with the thought he can use it in his program of developing our reciprocal trade relations with the rest of the world.

I think that is possible. Now, another very valuable contribution that is of interest to many is the matter of the discovery of diseases dangerous to agricultural products, and the prevention of the movement of these diseases from one country into another, and the means to prevent it.

Now, I cannot but feel, Members of the House, that the problem of agriculture—and I speak, as I say, from the standpoint of one interested in agriculture on the basis of being a farmer—I cannot help but feel that agriculture is a problem of international importance and that we are never going to be able to solve it solely in the United States—that it is going to be solved only through the readjustment of trade relations with the rest of the world, and through an agency of this kind. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. We have trade commissioners representing the Government in different countries, and it seems that they could get the information that may be promulgated there. And further than that, if the information is worth while, it seems to me that we could save this $40,000 that we are going to put out for this purpose.

Mr. WEARIN. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. It shows that Members do not realize the value of the information that is compiled. David Lubin discovered in his researches that the information gathered on the part of representatives of foreign countries in relation to agriculture was entirely inadequate; that it did not go into the subject thoroughly.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If we had had this institution in operation gathering information, would it not have saved the spending of millions of dollars in the fight against the Mediterranean fruit fly in Florida?

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. We have the world honeycombed with commercial attachés. It seems to me that if we are going to send commercial attachés all over the world to represent the manufacturing interests we can afford to give agriculture this small amount of assistance.

Mr. WEARIN. Yes; for the interests of agriculture.

I want to answer further the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN], who asked whether or not we can gather the information through other sources than the Institute of Agriculture in Rome. The Institute of Agriculture is not a political organization.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. While we were spending millions of dollars fighting the Mediterranean fruit fly we were participating in this institute at Rome.

Mr. WEARIN. In the beginning; but since then this institution has been developed to a greater extent, and today the organization represents 95 percent of the population of the world.

Mr. MOTT. One other question: In subdivision 3, page 2, there is an item of rent. Is that for rent of the officer who is to draw the $7,500 salary?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman stated one specific thing, and that was for the investigation of various pests. Will the gentleman mention any other specific thing that the Institute does? Would the gentleman care to be specific as to the various things which this Institute does?

Mr. WEARIN. I will be able to do that if I can get the time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes additional.

Mr. WEARIN. I want to take just a moment's time in reading the following statement. This particular institution that is devoting itself to agricultural research in Rome is accomplishing a good many things, and I made some notations of them in this book that I think are interesting. For example:

The aim of the international organization that concerns itself with the basic industry of agriculture is evident when it assembles the nations of the world for the consideration of a peaceful pursuit.

That in itself is an important item.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will just name the things that this institution does, specifically, I think he will give us all the information that we want. The general data that the gentleman just read does not do us any good.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. What is the book the gentleman is reading from?

Mr. WEARIN. That is my own volume.

Mr. BLOOM. I wanted the gentleman to inform the House that this is his own volume from which he is reading—a book written about this institution.

Mr. WEARIN. That is correct. I wrote it while there in Rome going into the details of this organization.

Mr. BLOOM. Just one more question. Would the gentleman at the same time kindly explain to the House the kind of building this organization occupies in Rome, the library, and the workings of the organization which have been going on since 1906.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I want first to answer the two questions on my left and clear that up. I will discuss Mr. Bloom's question in a moment—I want to complete the statement that this organization is important from the standpoint of world peace, because it is not a political organization. Getting to specific matters, as the gentleman requested, I find in a report from that particular organization the following statement made by Mr. Asher Hobson, with whom I happen to have had personal acquaintance some time ago when I was in Rome.

One of the primary duties of the Institute is the rapid collection, compilation, and dissemination of information concerning acreage sown, crop conditions, and harvest yields pertaining to the principal farm products in the world.

I think that indicates without a doubt that it is of the utmost importance in developing international trade.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. From what book is the gentleman quoting now?

Mr. WEARIN. I am reading from a report on the International Institute of Agriculture, written by Asher Hobson, published in 1931. In answer to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], concerning the building and equipment of the Institute over there, in my limited experience in traveling through western Europe and also through the United States from coast to coast, I have seen only one other building that surpasses it in excellence; that is the building put up by the Carnegie Institution at The Hague for the housing of the World Court. Somebody may be about to get up and say, "Do you mean to tell me that the United States has been paying for that building?" The answer is no; absolutely no. The building was put up entirely through a donation on the part of King Victor Emmanuel of Italy, who at the same time set up an endowment fund that yields approximately 300,000 lire annually in support of the institution. We could not possibly participate for the sum stated in this joint resolution if it were not for that fact.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. Can the gentleman tell us what proportion of the total expenditure for this purpose is expected to be contributed by the United States; that is, in percentages?

Mr. WEARIN. I shall have to ask the chairman of the committee to answer that question. The purpose I have in addressing the House at the present time is to explain the actual conditions surrounding the organization.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Not until I have completed the answer to Mr. BLOOM's question. The gentleman from New York asked me to explain something about the library at the International Institute of Agriculture. It is composed of approximately 185,000 volumes that have been gathered, some of which have never before been assembled in a public library for the use of the general public. I have had my hands on them and used them.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I should like the gentleman to tell the House what knowledge has been disseminated to the United States Department of Agriculture by this Institute which they did not already know.

Mr. WEARIN. I shall be very glad to answer the gentleman's question, though I hate to take up so much time of the House in going into these details.

Mr. MOTT. Before the gentleman goes on with that question, will he state whether in his opinion he has fully answered my question?

Mr. WEARIN. I think so. In answer to the question of the gentleman from North Carolina, much of the information on the diseases of foreign plants had not been discovered until it was reported to the Department of Agriculture by the International Institute at Rome. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. The joint resolution here proposes to appropriate—

Mr. WEARIN. Just one moment. If the gentleman wants to discuss the details of the joint resolution, I want him to discuss them with the chairman of the committee. Is that the gentleman's question?

Mr. GLOVER. I am asking the gentleman why this appropriation is to be made annually; that is, forever hereafter.

Mr. WEARIN. There is no appropriation made in this resolution at all, as I understand it. I will ask the chairman of the committee to answer that question when I finish.

In conclusion, I simply want to state as one who is very much interested in this Institute, not from the standpoint of being interested in going over there at the expense of the Government, because I would not go if you would bring me a commission on a silver platter, but I do think the House should know that this Institute of Agriculture is an important factor in the development of the international program of trade relations as far as the United States Government is concerned. It is a valuable link in the chain of our tariff and international-trade program in which we are all so interested at the present time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] has again expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to use 5 minutes, because I want to make a very simple statement. This institution has been going on for many years and we have been a member of it. We have continually been a member of it and are a member of it today and appropriate for our share of its maintenance. The information that is gathered and disseminated by the Institute is available to us whether we have a resident secretary there or not. We are getting it today and have been getting it.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. WEARIN. I should like to make the statement to the gentleman that I think he is mistaken. I have reliable information that we have endeavored in the last year or two, while we have not been a member of the International Institute of Agriculture, to get a statement from them concerning certain things in which we were interested and that was refused because we were not an active member.

Mr. LEHLBACH. But we were a member.

Mr. WEARIN. We are not an active member or a participating member of the organization.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Are we not paying $35,000 a year for our membership?

Mr. BLOOM. If I may answer the gentleman, no; we are not paying anything now. We are paying about $4,000 a year now. In other words, we are sneaking in under the tent. Whatever we are getting out of it we are not paying for.

Mr. LEHLBACH. This would not change our membership. We are a member and are entitled to all the information they have to disseminate. The only difference in our status as a member of this Institute, sought by this law, is to have a man in Italy at a cost of $7,500 salary and $5,500 living expenses, and so forth. If they can show us where we will benefit $13,000 or $13 worth by sending somebody over there to this sinecure, I should like to know it.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. By treaty we are supposed to pay 190,000 francs. Before the depreciation in value we were paying practically the same equivalent, but afterward we increased it. Now we are bound to pay the same as all other first-class countries, the same as Argentina, Brazil, China, Germany, and so on. We would pay $37,000 for our fee or our part of the share of the expense of running this institution. That is not for rent or anything else. The only other two expenses that come out of that would be the salary of our representative and $5,500 for all other expenses; not a dollar more. There is no traveling; there is no junketing; there is no nothing else in this. It is $37,000, according to our treaty agreement, that we are supposed to pay as a member of this Institute, the salary—whether it is $5,000 or $7,500, and $5,500 for all expenses. That is the whole thing.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Well, that is it. We do not need that man over there.

Mr. BLOOM. Well, we do need him.

Mr. LEHLBACH. We had a man over there, as the gentleman from New York stated, to whom we paid $5,000 a year. Several years ago he quit and the job lapsed. This is to recreate that job with an increase of salary to $7,500.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I have been following this thing, trying to find out where the Government of the United States or the people of the United States got any good out of it. Where do we get it?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, this Institute has available and gathered from all over its member nations, which is the greater part of the earth, information as to crop production, quantity production, crop movements, and information of that kind, which is collated at the Institute and disseminated among the member nations. We would get that without anybody over there just as easily as not.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Suppose all other countries refused to participate along with us, then where would there be any information for dissemination all over the world?

Mr. LEHLBACH. But we have not refused. Everything the Department of Agriculture has is available to any member nation that is a member of that institute, and other nations treat us the same way.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. Is it the gentleman's thought or idea that the United States should continue to ask for and receive the information from this institution that it has been receiving up to 3 or 4 years ago, and ask and get all this without paying their fee, their share of the running expenses of this institution in Rome? Would the gentleman want the United States to do that?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is a double question which is not answerable by "yes" or "no."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I voted against a resolution practically identical with this one when it came up in the Committee on Foreign Affairs under the recent Republican administration.

When the present resolution was considered by the committee a few weeks ago, I took no part on the final roll call because I was not convinced the expenditure of this money is necessary or that it will help agriculture. What worries me about this resolution is whether we have a commitment. If we have a commitment to pay our quota as a member of this International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, then I believe in keeping faith with those who have made the commitment for us. But in the consideration of this resolution, we, on our side of the House, propose to offer two amendments; and I may say, for one, if these amendments are accepted, I shall not oppose the resolution.

The first amendment to be offered will be to eliminate the word "annually."

This resolution provides some $48,000 to be appropriated annually. This means permanently, for all time, so to speak. It is not at all necessary. It is not in accordance with general procedure and practice. If we want to try this out, if we want to experiment with it and see if it is of any good to agriculture, we should appropriate the $48,000 only for this year by striking out the word "annually." Then, at the end of the year, if it is worth while, we can continue it. We have not been paying any such sum for the last 6 years. Since 1928 we have been paying in paper francs, or a very much less sum, amounting to about $5,000 a year. We are now called upon to pay in gold francs which increases the payment this year to about $38,000 as our quota. I should like to know if all the other nations are also paying on the basis of gold francs. The other amendment is one which will be presented by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], a member of the committee, to reduce the salary of the commissioner from $7,500, as provided in the resolution, to $5,000. That was the sum recommended under the Republican administration by Secretary of State Stimson, and I think a good many on this side feel it is ample to provide for such a commissioner as long as he does not live at the Grand Hotel in Rome, or one of the expensive hotels there.

In addition, $5,000 is carried in this resolution for quarters, traveling expenses, clerical help, and so forth. We do not oppose this sum. We, however, do not believe that it is necessary in these days to increase the salary of this Commissioner by 50 percent when Congress is reducing the pension, benefits, and compensation of war veterans and cutting the pay of even the members of the State Department and of about 1,000,000 Civil Service employees. It is utterly inconsistent to ask for a 50 percent increase for this Commissioner in these days of economy and unemployment.

These are the two amendments that we expect will be offered on this side. I am inclined to think—although there is some opposition to the whole resolution—that if these amendments are adopted, a good many Members on this side will go along with the bill unless there are some new developments. If, when we go back into the House after considering the resolution in the committee, a motion to recommit is made, which will be in order, I hope, in view of the fact that many Members are absent, that the vote will be postponed until Monday.

This is all I want to say at this time on the resolution in regard to the two proposed amendments. I am not convinced at all from the hearings that this international institute will help agriculture. I rather believe, on the other hand, that the State Department, with its representatives and consulates in every country, can get all the information desired without belonging to the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Information has come from the administration that they were going to bring home from Europe several hundred people we have had over there roaming around getting information. In view of this statement, ought we to have another commission to go over there and get information?

Mr. FISH. I may say to the gentleman from New York that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], who will speak in a few minutes, will present those figures to the House. There are some 300 or 400 who will be recalled, yet here it is proposed to send over to Rome another commissioner at a salary of $7,500 with an additional sum for quarters and traveling expenses.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to go against my chairman, the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, because no one ever had a finer, more courteous, more cooperative chairman, but I must. In the first place, I cannot see why this legislation is necessary. I think the President has the power to appoint this man if he wishes to without further authority.

I am terribly tired of the policy of the administration of robbing Peter to pay Paul. [Applause.] They are doing it every day.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very sorry I cannot yield. I have only a few minutes and I want to bring out some facts with reference to the number of the personnel the administration intends to recall from our Foreign Service.

Our disabled veterans are being robbed every day, having their compensation cut, without a hearing. They are not even allowed to present their cases or prove the service-connected nature of their disabilities while large appropriations are voted for other purposes.

I have here a list showing the number of agricultural and trade commissioners we have abroad roaming about in foreign countries getting the very information this member of the Agricultural Institute could get. There are 19 of them. Their salaries, I am told, average $5,000 a year.

Their salaries total $82,450—this after the cut of 15 percent. They also receive commutation of quarters, light, and heat, which amounts to a total of $12,570. This last amount has been reduced 50 percent this last year. The figure given is that after the reduction was made.

Probably one of these men will be dismissed owing to the cuts in every department, and this other man will receive not only the pay he is now receiving but an added $2,500. Another example of robbing Peter to pay Paul! I have here figures from the State Department. They show the reduction in their personnel for 1934 as being over 600 people.

This reduction will retard our success in foreign countries very much. These experienced officials are particularly needed at this time to carry out the work that the President is doing with foreign countries in connection with international trade and tariff agreements with debt settlements and with armament agreements. We need at this time a trained personnel in foreign service as never before in history, in my belief. Diplomatic relations are strained all over the world. Economic conditions are bad everywhere. We needed trained personnel during the World War. We need it even more today.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks certain tables sent to me by the State Department; and in order to be absolutely accurate, I shall read the statement that is made with reference to them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. As shown by the following table, the appropriation for 1932 amounted to over $18,000,000. The program of expenditure for 1934 is less by approximately $8,000,000, which is a reduction of 43 percent below the appropriation for 1932, and this in view of the fact that we are going to have the most difficult trade relations and diplomatic relations we have ever had. Further reductions remain to be made.

Following is the statement of the Department of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, May 19, 1933.

Statement showing appropriations and personnel of the Department of State as of July 1, 1933, and amount of reduction below appropriations and personnel for fiscal year 1932

Purpose	Fiscal year 1934		Amount of reduction below 1932
	Funds available for 1934	Proposed personnel	Appropriated funds	Reduction in personnel
Department proper.....	$1,637,482	728	$864,636.00	118
Foreign Service.....	8,299,707	3,612	3,877,861.00	465
Foreign buildings.....			2,000,000.00
International obligations.....	834,911	58	1,295,345.54	20
Permanent and indefinite.....	27,900		113,333.00
Total.....	10,800,000	4,398	8,151,175.54	603

As shown by the foregoing table, the appropriation for 1932 amounted to $18,951,175.54. The program of expenditure for 1934 is less by approximately $8,151,175, which is a reduction of 43 percent below the appropriations for 1932. Personnel has been reduced by 603, a reduction of 12 percent. Further reductions remain to be made. In regard to the effect of these reductions upon diplomatic and consular officers in foreign countries, it is necessary to point out that under existing law Congress provided a basic salary for these officers and then provided for the adjustment of that salary to the cost of living in the several countries by the addition of post allowances and also made provision for rent of living quarters and also defraying a part of the cost of representation. The aggregate of these several amounts constituted the official compensation or income of the officers and employees in foreign countries. The salary has now been reduced 15 percent, the allowance for quarters about 64 percent, the post and representation allowances 100 percent, and in addition in certain countries the purchasing power in which the salaries and allowances are paid has suffered a depreciation of from 14 percent to 18 percent. The result is that in those countries in which this condition exists the official income of ambassadors has suffered a reduction of approximately 45 percent; of Foreign Service officers of class I, 40 percent; Foreign Service officers of class V, 42 percent; and Foreign Service officers, unclassified, 44 percent. An unclassified Foreign Service officer in Germany, for example, who in 1932 received a salary and allowances of $3,600, receives today approximately $2,000. A letter from a consular officer in Danzig states that his present income in local currency is nearly 50 percent less than his income of a year ago; that he has had to give up his house and take a couple of rooms in a private home, refuse practically all invitations of a social nature, official or otherwise, since it is no longer possible for him to return them.

A letter from an officer in Kaunas, Lithuania, reports a reduction of 27 percent in the purchasing power of his official income. The members of the Foreign Service in Italy report a 27 percent reduction in the purchasing power of their April salaries. An officer in Belgium reports that the official incomes of officers in that country have suffered a 40 percent reduction since June last as compared with a 15 percent reduction in governmental salaries in the United States. The Minister to Austria reports a 16 percent depreciation in the dollar, which, added to the 15 percent reduction in salaries, makes a total reduction in the income of officers and employees of 31 percent since April 1, 1933. The Ambassador to Italy reports a 17 percent depreciation in the dollar, which, in addition to the 15 percent reduction in Government salaries, makes a 32 percent reduction in the purchasing power of the incomes of the United States Government officers in Rome. Much the same situation is reported from Paris, from Switzerland, and a number of other countries.

Other countries are trying to make up the difference where the purchasing power of their salaries is reduced, but our Foreign Service officers are being cut more than to the bone, and many of them are being eliminated. I cannot vote for the resolution.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I want to state in the beginning that I am not opposed to agricultural research, either scientific or economic. I presume there is no Member of the House who makes greater use of the research and statistical facilities of the Department of Agriculture than myself. I think the work this Institute is doing, or is supposed to do, ought to be done, but I am not in favor of this Congress authorizing appropriations to do this work, when our own Department of Agriculture is doing the same work and doing it much better than it can possibly be done by the International Institute of Agriculture.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Just very briefly. I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. The present Secretary of Agriculture and the former Secretary of Agriculture have stated just the opposite of what the gentleman is saying now. They have said they need this more than anything they can get in order to secure information throughout the world, and if the gentleman has read the report he will find their statements are contrary to the statement which the gentleman has just made.

Mr. HOPE. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I have read the report; and while it is true that the present Secretary of Agriculture and his predecessor approve the legislation, they do not do so in the extravagant way the gentleman has indicated. I have read every word of the report and have studied particularly that part of it setting out the purposes for which this Institute was established. A study of these purposes indicates clearly that every bit of its work is being duplicated by our own Government.

Going down the list of purposes we find the first one is to—

Collect, study, and publish as promptly as possible statistical, technical, or economic information concerning farming, both vegetable and animal products, the commerce in agricultural products, and the prices prevailing in the various markets.

We have in the Department of Agriculture a Bureau of Agricultural Economics which is doing just exactly this type of work, and doing all of the work that is included in the statement I have just read; and we appropriated for the coming fiscal year for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics $6,095,260.

Insofar as it is necessary for us to go to foreign countries to get information with regard to foreign agricultural products and the commerce in agricultural products throughout the world, we have a special agency in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics under the head of Foreign Agricultural Service, for which we appropriated last year $292,000, and let me call your attention to the language in the appropriation bill stating the purposes for which this money is appropriated:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to promote the agriculture of the United States by expanding in the foreign field the service now rendered by the Department of Agriculture, in acquiring and diffusing useful information regarding agriculture and for other purposes, and for collecting and disseminating to American producers, importers, exporters, and other interested persons information relative to the world supply of and need for American agricultural products, marketing methods, conditions, prices, and other factors, a knowledge of which is necessary to the advantageous disposition of such products in foreign countries, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State services, purchasing and consuming organizations."

And persons engaged in the transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm products.

This in substance provides for identically the same work as is mentioned in the report of the committee outlining the economic work of the International Institute of Agriculture.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Not at this time.

Going down to the next purpose for which the Institute was founded we see it is to—

Communicate to parties interested, also as promptly as possible, all the information just referred to.

If we get it ourselves, we have no necessity for having it communicated to us from the International Institute.

The next purpose for which the Institute is founded is stated to be—

(c) Indicate the wages paid for farm work.

We can go to the Bureau of the Census and we can get information and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics and get this information at any time. So I cannot see that we need the Institute for this purpose.

The next purpose for which it is stated the Institute is organized is—

(d) Make known the new diseases of vegetables which may appear in any part of the world, showing the territories infected, the progress of the disease, and, if possible, the remedies which are effective in combating them.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 more minute.

Mr. HOPE. Now, we have in the Department of Agriculture the Bureau of Plant Industry, for which we are appropriating over $4,000,000 a year, which has infinitely more knowledge of plant diseases not only in this country but throughout the world than the Institute at Rome can ever acquire.

If I had the time I should like to read the remaining purposes for which the Institute was organized and to show that in each instance our Department of Agriculture is doing exactly the same work.

There are no doubt many countries which do not maintain and are not able to maintain a government department of agriculture such as we have in this country. The International Institute can no doubt render a service to those countries.

In this country, however, we do not need it. Today we are talking about cutting down the activities of our Agricultural Department. Many men who have spent all of their adult lives in agricultural work are fearful of losing their positions because of the necessity for economy. This being the case, it is surely a poor time to increase our appropriation for an institution whose work is not needed.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, once a year an attack is made on the appropriation for the International Institute of Agriculture, and every year for 4 or 5 years I have defended the appropriation because of the valuable services the Institute is rendering American agriculture. The trouble with my friend from New York [Mr. FISH], and the gentle lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], is, although their hearts are all right and their motives are all right, still they do not know anything about the International Institute of Agriculture. They have no conception of its functions and accomplishments. They have no comprehension of the magnitude of the organization, and no appreciation of the splendid work for agriculture that it is doing. For a quarter of a century it has been serving the farmers, not only of the United States, but of the world. It has furnished the people of 40 nations reliable information and dependable agricultural statistics. It is the only clearing house in the world for the accumulation and dissemination of agricultural information. By scientific experimentations it has tremendously advanced the vocation of agriculture; and, by the dissemination of the results of its research, it has materially aided in putting agriculture on a safer and more profitable basis.

It does not duplicate the information supplied by the Department of Agriculture. Much of the information that is disseminated by our Department of Agriculture with reference to crop conditions, grain production, and prices in foreign lands comes from the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome.

This Institute was organized by David Lubin, a Polish Jew, who as a penniless lad came to this country and by industry and genius beat a pathway out of poverty to wealth and fame. He was the father of the cooperative farm marketing system in the United States. Probably no man made a greater contribution to the development, stabilization, and standardization of agriculture in our national history. The agricultural classes of America owe him a debt of gratitude that would be hard to liquidate.

He was the founder of the International Institute of Agriculture in Rome, of which 40 nations are members. This Institute gathers valuable agricultural data from every nook and corner of the world.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. I cannot yield; I have only 3 minutes. This information is cabled or radioed to Rome, and from Rome to every one of the 40 great nations having membership in the Institute. This data is either radioed or cabled to our Department of Agriculture and to every department of agriculture in the world.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. I told the gentleman I could not yield. Does not the gentleman understand the English language?

Now, gentlemen, with reference to our consuls, attachés, and the representatives we have sent abroad to gather agricultural statistics and find markets for our agricultural products, I am sorry to say that most of them are the gold-lace men, whose work has been exceedingly disappointing.

We are obligated by treaty to contribute our part of the cost of maintaining this useful agency. This resolution should be adopted.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELTSE].

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I come from the district in which the State University of California is located, and I believe it to be one of the greatest educational institutions in the country—not the greatest but one of the greatest. I thoroughly approve of what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] has said in respect to the jurisdiction and work of our State agricultural institutions. They amply cover the field which this resolution seeks to invade.

I want to say frankly that I do not believe there is any need for such a subsidy as this, spending $40,000 or $50,000—and I notice that during 1927 the appropriation was as high as $67,000. Furthermore, during the 27 years of its existence there has been expended by this institute $1,250,000, or thereabouts. Those are not entirely accurate figures. I invite each one of you gentlemen to take the report on this resolution and examine it. You will find it is nothing in the world but a defense from beginning to end of the failures of the institute, which you are trying now to subsidize by an additional $50,000 or $60,000, and to increase the salary of the resident delegate from $5,000 to $7,500 a year.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Not now. I want to quote from a report by Secretary Stimson to the President in June 1932. You will find there that the surveys or the work done by this institute have been unsatisfactory. And for a specific quotation I call attention to the language on page 4.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Not now.

For some years before 1928 the American Government was of the opinion that serious defects had arisen in the functioning of the institute.

And they still exist. On page 6 of the report, near the bottom of the page, I find the following:

The system of extraordinary payments was introduced as a temporary expedient; it proved unsatisfactory both to the institute and to the member governments as a means of rectifying the financial situation.

And I defy anyone to take that report and read it through, and, in the words of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], I ask anyone to find anything anywhere that points to a specific benefit having been delivered to the American farmer. He needs relief, not statistics. The American farmer cannot digest the statistics he has before him at the present time. He has become sick of statistics.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There is our distinguished colleague GEORGE B. TERRELL sitting over there, who for the last 10 years has been commissioner of agriculture of the State of Texas, and now a Member of this House, and he will tell you that this whole bill is damned foolishness, and we ought to stop this waste of $48,500 annually.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I hope he will. It is foolishness. I repeat it. If you will read that report carefully, you will see that it is nothing more than a defense of a subsidy for this research work on foreign soil, and when we have our own troubles over here in America, with our own American farmers who have their own pests, and their own problems of farming, of economics, of consumption and production, why do we want to spend some fifty thousand or sixty thousand or seventy thousand or eighty thousand dollars or more to make something effective on foreign soil?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Did not the former Secretary of State in this very report from which the gentleman is quoting recommend this, and did he not send up a printed draft of proposed legislation to carry it on?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes; and my answer to that is if in that report of Mr. Stimson you can point out anything to me or to any Member of the House showing a specific benefit to the American farmer, I will be glad to see it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course we would not have the time to analyze all the pages of the report; but did not the present Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, recommend it?

Mr. ELTSE of California. And I want to say to the gentleman that one of our gravest troubles now in connection with legislation in this body is that we do not analyze these reports and do not understand them. Analyze this report, and you will find there is no specific benefit to the American farmer.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I take my hat off to our splendid New York delegation. It is the ablest, the shrewdest, the most active and energetic, the most kind-hearted and courteous, and the most ambitious and far-reaching delegation in any legislative body in the world.

Mr. KELLER. Except Illinois.

Mr. BLANTON. Our good friend from New York, Dr. SROVICH, brought in his junketing resolution to spend $250,000 and we killed that, and then our good friend from New York, Mr. CELLER, had to bring in another junketing resolution here the other day, which we stopped by a point of order, that would have expended $250,000 more, and now here is our good old friend from New York, Sol Bloom, with another $48,500 junket. He brings in one also. Sol is the spokesman here of the American farmer. [Laughter.] When Sol goes to Rome, Italy, and is presented to Mussolini, we all know of course that he pays his own expenses. When he is presented to the Pope he pays his own expenses, and when he puts on knee breeches and is presented to the King at the Court of St. James's he pays his own expenses. Oh, he is liberal-hearted. He now believes that the American farmer must be saved by this Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy. Sol is fathering this bill on the floor, he is the spokesman for it.

There is no law now to pay anyone $5,000 or $7,000 a year over there at Rome. Unless you pass this joint resolution there will not be any law authorizing it, and there will not be any more money spent in Rome, because there are enough of us here who know how to make points of order to stop those things in appropriation bills. They must pass this joint resolution to make it in order. If you do not pass this joint resolution we will not spend any more money there.

Since 1928 we have not participated in this Italian institute in Rome. Oh, we have paid our part of the European expenses of this institute at Rome, Italy, and we have always done that. We are paying our part of every single project that is being carried on in Europe right now, but we have not participated at Rome since 1928, and we ought not to participate any more. Unless you pass this joint resolution we will not participate any longer. Spending money there will stop. Of this $48,000 there is to be $7,500 a year paid as the salary of a resident delegate in Rome. The Institute meets just twice a year, but we are going to let him stay there the whole 12 months. I challenge any Member here to state one sane reason why we should maintain yearly a delegate at Rome, Italy, to represent us in a so-called "Institute of Agriculture" there and pay the delegate an annual salary of $7,500 and allow him an additional $5,500 for rent of his dwelling, heat, fuel, and lights.

It is the most absurd, ridiculous proposal I have heard of in a long time. Have we lost our common sense? Have we ceased to see things from a sane, practical standpoint? Have we ceased to reason and think for ourselves? Are we led away by some recommendation of some little bureau chief? Have we not yet begun to ask ourselves the question, before spending public money, "Is it necessary to spend it; is it worth while; does it bring the people proper returns; is it to the interest of the people of the United States, or is it to benefit some individual or individuals?"

Why should we spend this $48,500 in Rome, Italy, every year. Why should we pay this $7,500 salary and this $5,500 for rent, heat, fuel, and lights?

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, you allow him $5,500 for a private dwelling and rent and heat, light, and fuel.

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it is. Read the bill. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to allow my friend from New York to use my few minutes. I want him to take his own time.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I only have 4 minutes.

There is his $7,500 salary; his $5,500 for his residence, heat, light, and fuel.

Mr. BLOOM. And what else?

Mr. BLANTON. Then there is about $5,000 for the contribution for the institute expenses. The balance of the $48,500 is junketing for experts in the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State and very likely for some Senators and some Congressmen.

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. We have experts in the departments and experts in Congress.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Is it an emergency?

Mr. BLANTON. Emergency the devil! President Roosevelt has not recommended it. We ought to kill it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 81, noes 80.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers. Pending that, I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 152, nays 143, answered "present" 2, not voting 133, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution (H.J.Res. 149) authorizing an annual appropriation for the expenses of participation by the United States in the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 149, with Mr. WOODRUM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the joint resolution will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to propound a question to the distinguished chairman of the committee and ask him if it can be agreed upon that if we are to have a motion to recommit and a roll call, the roll call could go over until Monday morning?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I understand there will be other matters to be taken up after this, and I cannot make that agreement.

Mr. FISH. There are so many Members absent on Saturday afternoon, with the understanding generally that there would not be any roll call, that I wish the gentleman could make that agreement.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Well, we are going right on with the bank bill after this is concluded, and I am not authorized to make any agreement whatever.

Mr. FISH. I do not care about what comes after this.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am sorry, but I cannot make such an agreement. We are now in Committee of the Whole anyway.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I do not yield out of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must yield in his own time, if at all.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield myself 3 minutes at present, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I merely take these 3 minutes to correct some statements that have been made before this body.

In the first place, this is not an appropriation. It is an authorization which when authorized will go to the Appropriations Committee of the House and which they will have every opportunity to investigate thoroughly.

Another statement has been made that $38,000 of this is for a junket. That statement was made out of absolute ignorance, and I emphasize the word "ignorance." Anyone who has investigated this matter knows that $38,000 goes to this organization as dues on the same basis as other nations pay their dues.

But one delegate is provided in this resolution. He goes there and gives all of his time.

Whether or not the salary should be raised from $5,000 to $7,500 is a question for this committee to decide.

It has been stated also on the floor that the President was not for this bill. This statement is not correct. The Secretary of State endorses it. The Secretary of Agriculture yesterday insisted that the President stated that he wanted this passed as part of his farm-relief program.

I telephoned to the White House and asked the President's secretary to please go to the President at once and ask him if I might use his name in connection with the measure and whether or not it was one of his measures; and his secretary advised me that it was and that I had the privilege of quoting him as being for this bill. That is the reason it is here.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have not time.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I want to ask a simple question. Will not the gentleman give us some examples of benefits that have accrued from our participation in this institute?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am going to leave that to gentlemen who will follow me and I know they will be glad to inform the House in that regard.

Mr. ALLEN. Is the President in favor of this increase of 50 percent in the salary of the delegate?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I never said that. I said that was a matter for the House to decide.

Mr. ALLEN. Is the committee in favor of this increase?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman witnessed the vote in the committee.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. First, I think it is well to get some of the cobwebs out of the way. I do not make any statement on this floor unless it is supported by the record.

They say there is no junket in this. I refer you to the report of the committee that they brought in here and I read from page 4, the second paragraph:

From 1906 until 1928 this Government participated actively in the Institute being represented on the permanent committee by a delegate resident at Rome—

I call particular attention to this portion of the statement—and sending delegations to the biennial meetings of the general assembly.

Not sending one man but sending delegations.

What did the gentleman from Tennessee mean when he put in this report, a report from the Secretary of State—and it is the same report Stimson sent here—

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No, I am sorry, I cannot yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I wish to explain the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I cannot yield. If the gentleman cannot yield me any Democratic time, I cannot yield to him. It is unfortunate when things come to such a pass that a Member who has been supporting the Democratic ticket ever since he has grown up has to go to the Republican side to get time to talk against an extravagant Republican bill. Why, this is a Republican bill. It was formulated by the Republican Department of Agriculture, by a Republican Secretary of State under a Republican President. President Hoover sent it here in the last Congress as a Republican measure.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. TABER. We are prepared to repudiate it, anyway.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I cannot yield; I have but 5 minutes; I am sorry.

Mr. FISH. I will yield the gentleman an extra minute if he will yield for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York, who has been so generous and courteous in the matter of time. I am glad to yield to him.

Mr. FISH. I wish to point out to the gentleman from Texas that as the resolution was recommended by the Republican administration it carried a salary of only $5,000.

Mr. BLANTON. That is right; but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] has raised it 50 percent. He proposes to pay $7,500. Is the President now in the White House in favor of the raise? He is not. I make the statement on my own responsibility that the President of the United States is not in favor of raising the salary of any Italian employee of this Government over in Rome, Italy, 50 percent.

Mr. KELLER. He is not an Italian.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Illinois will keep still a minute, he will learn something. If SOL BLOOM has got no junket in this, I want him and the gentleman from Tennessee to explain this language, which I quote from the committee report, when, in explaining just how the State Department has spent this annual appropriation, which one year amounted to $68,340, Mr. Henry L. Stimson, then Secretary of State, said:

From 1906 until 1928 this Government participated actively in the institute, being represented on the permanent committee by a delegate resident at Rome, and sending delegations to the biennial meetings of the general assembly. The annual appropriations for the support of this Government's part in the institute varied in the period 1922-28 between $29,577 and $68,340.

Just what did he mean when he said, "And sending delegations to the biennial meetings"?

He did not say one delegate. He said delegations. That term "delegations" cannot be explained away. It is expected to send more delegations to Rome, Italy, and this is the reason this bill is written so as to provide $48,500 for such annual expenditure.

I have a breakdown of our expenses for this institute for the past 3 years and this year, which was furnished me by Mr. Carr, of the Department of State, and from it you will note that our quota—and by quota is meant the annual contribution we are due this institute every year for expenses of it—was $4,713.28 in 1930, and $4,722.55 in 1931, and $4,689.33 in 1932, and $5,400 for 1933, this year, which has not yet been paid. Here is the statement:

Expenditures on account of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy

Stenographic services.....	$83.33
Communication service.....		$6.42
Travel expenses.....		827.19	$1,457.86
Equipment.....	978.24
Miscellaneous expenses.....	12.08
Quota.....	4,713.28	4,722.55	4,689.33	$5,400
Total expenditures.....	5,786.93	5,556.16	6,147.19	5,400
Unexpended balances.....	52,213.07	9,703.84	4,912.81
Total appropriations.....	58,000.00	15,260.00	11,060.00	5,400

¹Payment has not yet been made.

Now, if our quota, or contribution, for expenses of the institute is only about $5,000 per annum, and we pay the salary of $7,500 and the allowance of $5,500, where is the balance of this $48,500 going? Remember what Mr. Stimson said, "For sending delegations." It is for "delegations."

Mr. BLOOM. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. BLANTON. I am reading from the gentleman's report. Our friend Sol let too much go into this report of the committee.

I have not yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. The gentleman from Texas has the floor, and gentlemen know they have no right to interrupt him unless the gentleman yields.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman from Texas mentions my name specifically and calls attention to a certain thing he is going to read, have I not the right to ask him what he is reading from and to state the page?

The CHAIRMAN. Not unless the gentleman agrees to yield, and the gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that is a fair, just inquiry, and if the gentleman will yield me 2 minutes extra I shall yield to him.

Mr. BLOOM. I have not got it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask you this question, and I am talking to my Democratic colleagues. If there is no junket in this, what did Brother McREYNOLDS mean when he put in his report, "For sending delegations", and so forth?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I can explain that to the gentleman if he will let me.

Mr. BLANTON. Just a minute. What did the gentleman mean when he put in here, as coming from the State Department, this language, "And sending delegations to biennial meetings"?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is true as to those meetings when another authorization was made, but that is not true as to this authorization.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the Chair will not take this out of my time, because I did not yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman asked me the question. I am giving the gentleman a little bit of what he has been giving everybody else.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, do not take this out of my time.

Now, listen to this:

"Sixty-eight thousand three hundred and forty dollars it costs 1 year." Was there not a delegation sent on that money?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. There might have been, but this does not provide for that.

Mr. BLANTON. If they sent delegations in the past, why will not they send them in the future? If you take the delegations out of this bill and if you will take the junket to Rome out of it, there will not be all this intensive interest in it.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have a statement right here [indicating] showing that what I stated is absolutely true.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee is the most unfair man I ever saw.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I thank you, sir; but I cannot beat you.

Mr. BLANTON. He is in charge of all of the time on the Democratic side, and he will not yield any of his own time and he has limited the debate against his bill to 30 minutes, and then he takes up all our time. This is not fair.

Let me tell you about gathering statistics for the farmers. Do you know what is the matter with the farmers today? The farmers have been bankrupt with statistics. God save the farmers from more statistics. They do not want any more statistics. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 1 minute.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, all of us appreciate my splendid, brilliant, young friend from Iowa, Dr. WEARIN. He is one of the most brilliant young men in the House. I take my hat off to him. He is just 30 years old. He has not had time to learn much, practically, about actual farming. He graduated at the Tabor Academy when he was 17 years old in 1920, and then he was graduated from Grinnell College in 1924, and then in 1926 he became treasurer of his local school system at home. He went abroad for a year and studied at Rome and then in 1928 he became a member of the Iowa Legislature. He was the Democratic leader there for 4 years, and as a splendid young stalwart Democrat I take off my hat to him, but he does not know much about the way departments here provide junkets. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs suggested to the House a few moments ago that this bill did not carry an appropriation. Of course it does not, but it carries a direction to the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate, not only this year but every year from now on, $48,500. And what for? To be expended almost entirely in Rome for sustaining the International Institute of Agriculture.

In the name of heaven, my good friends, is there an ounce of common sense in throwing $48,500 into a wastebasket in Rome at a time when we have millions out of employment in the United States, at a time when we are cutting every dollar out of every appropriation we possibly can, at a time when we are discharging thousands of Federal employees all over the United States and at a time when everybody is clamoring for economy, including the President himself? Day after day there comes the cry for more economy.

I regard the Committee on Foreign Affairs very highly, but I cannot understand how any reasonable organization of men, who have to account to their constituency from time to time and who are down here reducing the salary of everybody all the way down the line, can be in favor of a proposition of this kind.

We have never had a condition like the present emergency, and how a body of reasonable men can come in here and ask us to dump practically $50,000 a year into a hopper in Rome in the interest of the American farmer is more than I can understand. There has never been as silly a proposition as this presented to the House, and it ought to be overwhelmingly defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KLOEB].

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I have always found it profitable in presenting a case to a reviewing court to get the facts of the case plainly before the court, because it has been my experience that if the court has the facts correctly it can more correctly apply the law.

I feel that in this case I am about to present, the facts are grossly misunderstood. When you have the facts you are going to favor this measure. I hope that you will not interrupt me as I proceed with the statement of the facts until about the time of my conclusion. Then I shall be glad to answer any question that I am capable of answering.

What is this Institute of Agriculture? Back in 1906 there arose the necessity in the Agricultural Department of the Government that the farmers of the United States should obtain data that would be of assistance to them in planting their crops and in marketing those crops.

Someone has said, "Well, what is the function of our Department of Agriculture?" Its function is to gather statistics in the United States. It has no representatives in the forty-odd countries of the world. The duty of representing us belongs to our delegate to this institute. If the Government wanted to gather statistics from the forty-odd countries, it would be necessary to have a representative go to each of those countries. For this reason they found that it would be more economical and simpler to have cooperation among the agricultural nations of the world, and have each send a permanent representative at a given place, and there, with the assistance of clerks and expert statisticians assimilate the statistics, as well as market and crop conditions, from agricultural countries of the world that come in in all the languages of the world.

These facts are presented in their various languages to this institute, are digested, assimilated, and printed in various languages of the world, and in the form of reports are sent over here, not only to the Department of Agriculture but also to all the farmers' colleges, the agricultural institutes, and the extension bureaus. Daily cables are sent to the Agricultural Department on market and crop conditions.

What do you say this is to accomplish? Let me tell you what it has accomplished. In 1928, 135,000 farmers attended the extension schools in the United States. In 1931 846,000 farmers attended these agricultural institutes, these extension courses. Where do these extension courses get the world-wide statistics on products, on cost of marketing, on the probabilities of marketing for future crops? They get them from the Agricultural Institute in Italy where we have one representative.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLOEB. No; I told the gentleman I could not yield until I had finished stating the facts. My friends, since 1906, when this Government by treaty became a party to that institute, we have been a member. We have sent annually a representative, who has resided in Italy, and we were fortunate since 1906 up to 1919 in having as our representative David Lubin, of Sacramento, Calif., an extremely wealthy man whose business was agriculture.

He was the father of this institute. This gentleman paid much of his own expenses. He paid out much of his own private income in order to maintain himself and his staff of assistants.

In 1919 he died, and a Mr. Hobson was appointed to succeed him. In 1928 there arose some difficulties over there in connection with the Italian delegate who sought to rule the entire delegation, and we withdrew our man.

From 1928 to this time, under the terms of the treaty, we have been paying our assessment for maintenance of the institute in French francs—not gold francs, but 3.90 francs.

Thus we reduced our payments for the maintenance of the institute to $4,800 in American money. The institute has found that it cannot operate without the assistance of American statistics and without the full American contribution; as a consequence in 1931, our State Department sent its representative to Italy and ironed out all these difficulties, and is now asking this Congress to again authorize an appropriation to permit a representative from this country to join all of the other agricultural nations of the world. We are the only country that is an agricultural nation that does not belong to this institute. That we now be permitted to rejoin is what is being asked in this resolution. President Hoover asked for this in June of last year in a special message to the Congress. Mr. Stimson, then Secretary of State, asked for the same thing. The present Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, asks for it, and the present President of the United States asks for it. The present Secretary of Agriculture asks for it, as did the former Secretary of Agriculture. Can all of these gentlemen be wrong?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. And did the President ask for a 50-percent increase in the salary of the delegate?

Mr. KLOEB. I shall answer the gentleman. When he speaks of a 50-percent increase in salary he makes an inaccurate statement. The past salary of $5,000 is now subject to a 15-percent cut, making $4,250 available. In view of the fact that under former conditions none but a wealthy man could be appointed at the prevailing salary, and none but a wealthy man could be appointed at a salary of $4,250, the Director of the Budget, Mr. Lewis Douglas, than whom there is no man in the Government service who more desires economy, asks that this increase be made. The President will then have an opportunity to select a man at a salary of $7,500 a year, less 15 percent, and will not be confined to a selection from among wealthy men, who may know nothing about agriculture or agricultural statistics. With this arrangement he may possibly find some professor of an agricultural college who has the proper background in respect to economics and agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART].

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, as a practical farmer, as one who has been engaged in marketing farm products for some 30 years, and who knows something about the problems not only of farming but of the distribution of farm products, I listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KLOEB]. If there is one thing that he demonstrated in his 10 minutes, it is that he knows absolutely nothing about agriculture or the marketing of agricultural products. He demonstrated, however, that he is thoroughly familiar with the language of farm propagandists and he knows the language of the Agriculture Department, which has increased its appropriations steadily as the income of the farmer has gone down. That is patent to everyone. As fast as we have increased the appropriations of the Agriculture Department the income of the farmer has declined. The farmer is suffering today from too many figures produced about his business. If he is successful in growing a good crop, long before he can offer any portion of it to the consuming public our statisticians in the Department of Agriculture have broadcast the fact to the world—sold the price down on top of his head. That is the trouble with agriculture today. We have too many economists and too many statisticians. [Applause.] I hope we will get rid of one of them today.

I am operating today an 800-acre farm, every foot of which is under the plow. I do not require any representative at Rome. The figures can be collected from the trade in this country. My crop happens to be beans. We raise 75 percent of all the white beans grown in the United States in the State of Michigan. I am able to obtain in Europe the crop acreage as soon as it is planted.

I never heard in my 30 years of experience of any agricultural institute at Rome until I came here. I was able to get the figures with reference to the product I handled. I was able to get them from Greece, from Holland, from France, from Rumania, and points in the Far East. I had a clear picture before me of what was going on in Europe and the Near East with reference to beans. I knew what was grown in Manchuria and in Japan and China, and yet I never heard of the Agricultural Institute in Rome until I came to this Congress and was assigned to the Committee on Appropriations and to the bill where the Agricultural Department gets its money. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that we should take up so much time of Congress with only $48,000. There are greater things to talk about than that, but I want to say to you that when you say we are going to send a delegation over to Rome to get information, you are badly mistaken. I do not care where you send them over in Europe, they will get some information. There is no question about that, but we have had enough information about agriculture and how to raise these wonderful things that we can produce in this country.

I have known conditions in Europe. I was born and grew up over on the other side of the Atlantic, and I have gotten information about what they are doing over there the last 40 years. But I say that when this gentleman from Ohio, an attorney or business man, or whatever he is, talks about the great attendance of farmers at the extension meetings of the great agricultural colleges, and so forth, he does not dare deny that the people do not attend them as much as they did at one time. I know two of the leading speakers, supervisors in my own State of Minnesota, who have told me personally that this work has been overdone.

When I get up in the morning and turn on the radio there is information about the prices of hogs and cattle and grain. If I turn on the radio at noontime, there is more information, and also until midnight. We get all the information we want. The trouble with us is that we have been raising too much, and if you farm with common horse sense, you do not need so many experts around your neck. [Applause.] I repeat the statement I made on the floor of Congress yesterday, that I do not belittle the efforts of these people who are trying to raise a better cow or a better sow or a better hen—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. One minute is not sufficient time to make the remarks which I would like to make. I say to you I have gone into the Red River Valley of Minnesota and North Dakota and seen millions of bushels of potatoes rotting in the ground because of overproduction. When God Almighty gives us rain and sunshine we can raise it. Our problem is to get an honest and fair price on the markets in this country. If you attorneys and other professional and business men will see that we have a market for our products and see that we farmers get the cost of production plus a little profit, you can go home with the satisfaction that the farmers are going to produce enough so that the people of this country will live. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON] has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in these 2 minutes simply to discuss the statement that was made by the gentleman who just preceded me, that all the agricultural information that is put out over the radio and in other ways by our Department of Agriculture originates in the International Institute of Agriculture. I am sure, if the gentleman, whom I know wants to be correct in his statements, will look into the matter, he will find he is very much mistaken about this.

Mr. BLOOM. I did not say that.

Mr. HOPE. I so understood the gentleman, and, whatever his exact language may have been, its clear implication was as I have stated it. We may get some information from the International Institute of Agriculture, but I venture to say that the International Institute of Agriculture gets 10 times more information from the United States Department of Agriculture than the Department of Agriculture gets from that institution.

We have in every country of the civilized world the American Consular Service, which is at the beck and call of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State, to obtain any agricultural information which may be desired. We have in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics our foreign agricultural service, with its attachés in all the principal countries of the world and with ample facilities to get all the information we may need from other countries. We have the Department of Commerce, with its far-flung organization equipped to secure such data as we may need with regard to production and markets. And in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, in the Bureau of Plant Industry, and in all the other great bureaus of the Department of Agriculture we have able and experienced men to coordinate this information and get it before the farmers of the country. This great organization of our own—not the institute at Rome—is the source of our agricultural information. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES].

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Chairman, I am a new Member from Michigan, and this is the first time I have said a word on the floor of this House. I am a farmer. I farm more land than any other individual in that State. My family members have 80,000 acres of land, all under cultivation, and I want to say to these statesmen assembled here today that I think I understand the farming business.

I have sat here for nearly 90 days listening to arguments on agriculture as a member of the great Agriculture Committee and under the leadership of our distinguished Chairman, Mr. JONES, of Texas, I have labored hard and conscientiously in an honest effort to assist in framing sound legislation. I want to say to you that in my humble judgment most of your arguments are unsound and you do not understand the farming problem.

I want to appeal to those Broadway statesmen and to the statisticians and to these professors of the Agriculture Department and other departments to let us farmers alone. [Applause.]

I have heard more misinformation on that subject in the last 60 days than I ever knew existed anywhere.

As far as this bill is concerned, I want to say that I never heard of this association, this Institute, before in my life. If it is performing any functions, or has been of any benefit to me, I do not know it. Let me say further that if I could I would abolish the Agriculture Department. [Applause.] It is a nuisance and a delusion and a snare. You Broadway gentlemen ought to let us farmers alone. We know what we want, and if you will give us a little friendly cooperation, we will straighten out the agricultural question. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, no one has yet told us why we should have these consular agents in every State and town in the world to get information in reference to all subjects pertaining to agriculture, representing the Department of Agriculture all over the world, representing the Department of Commerce all over the world, and still have to have an Institute of Agriculture from which we get something else. Is it not about time we developed our efforts with some kind of concentration in making our consular and agricultural officers perform more service, instead of getting into something else and spending more money? [Applause.] We are never going to help the farmers unless we stop this kind of monkey work. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for the balance of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, today's newspapers include an Associated Press report that the Finance Minister of Italy, Mr. Jung, who recently visited this country to discuss world economic problems, has just returned to Italy, and the day following his return he went before the Italian Parliament and urged a debt reduction of 80 percent by all nations which owe us money on war debts. I feel that this is the proper place and proper time, at least, to present the American point of view and to protest any attempt by the Italian Government to dodge its just debts to the United States.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield in 8 minutes on this subject. We showed more liberality and generosity to Italy in the settlement and adjustment of the war debts than to any other country. We reduced the war debt to Italy 75 percent and asked her to pay only 25 percent, in comparison to the settlement with Great Britain, which is on an 80-percent basis; with France, which is on a 50-percent basis; and Belgium, which is also on a 50-percent basis. The Italian war-debt settlement was by far the most generous that we made. Yet the same Italian minister, Mr. Jung, who came over here as the guest of our Nation, largely, so it developed, as the guest of the Democratic Party, as soon as he returned to his own land, goes before his Parliament and proclaims that not only Italy but that all the Allied Nations should have a reduction of 80 percent on the war debts due the United States. He said, "We are not able to pay."

The record shows that we loaned to Italy 60 percent of her war indebtedness after the armistice was signed, or $1,031,000,000 prior to the armistice and $617,000,000 postarmistice. Yet Finance Minister Jung comes along now and says that Italy is not able to pay, in spite of the fact that we have reduced the debt by 75 percent, and claims that we must reduce it 80 percent. Whether he means 80 percent of the remaining 25 percent or 80 percent of the whole debt it is difficult to tell from the Associated Press report. The basis of his argument is that Italy has not the capacity to pay. I think it would have been fairer to state that she did not have the willingness to pay. Yet the Italian Government, at the present time and for the last 3 years, has been spending more on its naval armaments than either Great Britain or Japan. The following are the figures showing the appropriations for new naval construction in Italy, British Empire, Japan, and France:

Italy: 1930-31, $31,600,000; 1931-32, $37,100,000; 1932-33, $38,100,000.

British Empire: 1930-31, $30,500,000; 1931-32, $21,500,000; 1932-33, $33,700,000.

Japan: 1930-31, $40,800,000; 1931-32, $33,500,000; 1932-33, $26,900,000.

France: 1930-31, $39,400,000; 1931-32, $34,600,000; 1932-33, $29,700,000 (for 9 months only).

These figures submitted by our naval intelligence show that Italy, which never has been a naval power, is spending more money for new construction than the British Empire or Japan.

I was told just a few moments ago that the President of the United States made a statement yesterday that if he had any recommendations to make or if any recommendations were made to him, in regard to a reduction in war debts, he would take it up with the Senators. I am afraid, if that statement is correct, that the President is under an erroneous impression that the war-debt settlements or adjustments are treaty matters that must go to the Senate.

The war-debt settlements were initiated in the House of Representatives, and they must come back to the House of Representatives for revision and the consent of Congress must be had if there is to be any change or modification of the settlement with Italy or any other nation. The matter should come back here to the Ways and Means Committee and be considered there. If we want to reverse ourselves, that is our privilege. I am not one of those die-hards. I believe there should be certain adjustments in the war debts, particularly with Great Britain; but it seems to me almost an act of impertinence for the Finance Minister of Italy, the day after he gets back from his visit here, to go before the Italian Parliament and demand that there should be a reduction of 80 percent, in spite of the fact that we have been almost overgenerous with Italy in comparison with every other country in the world. The resolution before us authorizes the expenditure of $48,500 to pay our share toward the maintenance of an International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. Perhaps we might save something out of the Italian war debt by saying that we will adjust these debts and let Italy pay the $48,500.

It is apparent to me that Italy does not propose to pay any of the war debt, but expects to cancel it, and that too is indicated in the statement of Mr. Jung, the Italian Finance Minister, according to the press reports today. He proposes a reduction not only of 80 percent, but in a part of his speech to Parliament an actual cancelation of the war debt. It is time for the Congress of the United States to discuss this war-debt issue and let foreign nations and their people know that there is an American side to it. I know of no better or more proper place to discuss our relations with foreign nations than the floor of the House of Representatives and thereby at least inform our people back home. I believe in the old Wilsonian doctrine of open covenants openly arrived at. We did not start the World War. We went over there and changed the tide of defeat into one of victory. We asked for nothing and that is exactly what we got—nothing at all—no plunder, no conquered territory, no indemnities, and no reparations but the allied nations are united in wishing the financial burden of the war on the backs of the American people. Italy got the Tyrol and Fiume, and parts of Africa. We all know what England and France took as their share of the spoils of war. If these nations want a reduction in their war debts, it is proper for them to discuss it with our representatives, but not while spending vast sums on naval and military armaments to plead incapacity to pay anything and to demand cancelation.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. HOEPEL. The gentleman says that we received nothing as a result of the war. We did receive something. We received the name of Shylock.

Mr. FISH. We got just what we get in every international conference that we have gone into. We have always got it in the neck in every foreign conference, and probably always will, and that is why the American people have so little faith in any international conference. Before we actually enter into these conferences there are secret military treaties, threats of repudiation of debts and agreements made in advance and often never known.

What is the significance of the statement made by Mr. Jung. Was there any discussion of the war debts between the Italian Finance Minister on his recent visit to Washington and the "brain trust?" Is this proposal a part of any agreement or even suggestion on the part of anyone in the American Government, or is it merely an attempt to feel out public opinion in the United States? No member of the opposition or Republican Party was even invited to attend the conferences with foreign statesmen held at Washington even as an observer. The administration for the first time since the Civil War has carried partisanship to such a degree on international issues that the opposition only learns the facts from the newspapers or from statements made by foreign diplomats or contained in European press dispatches.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This committee report shows that we have gotten it in the neck in this conference at Rome, and since 1928, because we did get it in the neck, we have not participated at all.

Mr. KELLER. Why do we get it in the neck?

Mr. FISH. Because before we actually get into these conferences, before we participate, we find other agreements have been made, whether they be tariff agreements, as you read in the newspapers a few weeks ago or secret military treaties, and in this case, the Finance Minister of Italy, Mr. Jung, evidently was not speaking alone for Italy, but was speaking for the allied nations. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $48,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually for the expenses of participation by the United States in the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State in the following manner:

(1) Not to exceed the equivalent in United States currency of 192,000 gold francs for the payment of the annual quota of the United States for the support of the institute, including the shares of the Territory of Hawaii, and of the dependencies of the Philippine Islands, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

(2) Not to exceed $7,500 for the salary of a United States member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture.

(3) Not to exceed $5,500 for rent of living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (46 Stat. 818); compensation of subordinate employees without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; actual and necessary traveling expenses; and other contingent expenses incident to the maintenance of an office at Rome, Italy, for a United States member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture.

During the reading of the House joint resolution the following occurred:

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GLOVER. I should like to ask at what point amendments might be offered; whether at the end of each paragraph or at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. After the bill has been read in its entirety. There is only one section in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is a proper motion in order at this juncture, and I make it. I move that the committee do now rise and report this bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman is not in order until the section has been entirely read. There is only one section in the bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. I trust the Chairman will recognize members of the committee to offer amendments at the conclusion of the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to follow the rules and precedents of the House.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: On page 1, line 4, after the word "appropriated", strike out the word "annually."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. I should like to be heard briefly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN: On page 2, line 5, after the word "exceed", strike out "$7,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, the International Institute of Agriculture was proposed by an American citizen, David Lubin, of California. Believing in its importance he succeeded in obtaining the support of the King of Italy, who, in 1905, invited most of the Nations of the World to send delegates to an international conference in Rome to consider the formation of such an agricultural organization. Henry White, Ambassador to Italy, was the delegate from the United States. The conference was attended by delegates from 40 countries. The United States ratified the convention in 1907. The Institute was established in Rome, where it occupies a building provided for its use by the Italian Government.

The purposes of the institute are:

(a) Collect, study, and publish information concerning farming, the commerce in agricultural products, and the prices prevailing in the various markets.

(b) Indicate wages paid for farm work throughout the world.

(c) Make known the new diseases of vegetables and farm products which may appear in any part of the world, showing territories infested, the progress of the disease, and, if possible, the remedies which are effective in combating them.

(d) Submit to the approval of governments measures for the protection of the common interests of the farmers.

In my opinion, there is not any question as to the practical benefit obtained. Its work is fundamentally strong and the service that it renders to our Government is very valuable. The Chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics wrote on June 7, 1932, as follows:

The official estimates of acreage, crop conditions, and production are of great value to the Department of Agriculture and the State agricultural colleges.

At no time has there been so many requests from farmers for information on world conditions.

The annual appropriation for the support of it for the United States has varied in the period 1922-28 between $29,577 and $68,340.

You are all aware of the plight of the farmer. One of the major causes of this crisis is overexpansion of world agriculture. Our own production expansion must be adjusted in the light of world competition and demand. It is necessary that we export some of our output and also meet foreign competition in our own markets. It is therefore important that our farmers have reliable information on world agricultural conditions.

I am in accord with the resolution, with the exception of the increase in salary for the United States member. Since our entrance in 1905 the salary of the member has been $5,000 per year, with a reasonable allowance for light, heat, and quarters. To the best of my judgment, this is the first resolution that has been brought into this House asking for an increase. It has been explained to me by several of the Committee on Foreign Affairs who are in favor of this resolution in its entirety that $5,000 is not sufficient to obtain the services of a competent man; that former members were of great wealth and the money phase of it was immaterial. They further told me that a man in that position must entertain lavishly. My friends, I would ask you if any Member of this Congress can conscientiously raise the salary of any United States employee 50 percent in order that he may entertain extravagantly, when only the past month we have reduced the compensation of the $1,000-a-year scrubwoman 15 percent, the total-disabled war veteran all the way from 20 to 100 percent? When for economy sake we are retiring efficient men from the Government service because—and only because—they have given 30 years of honest and efficient service.

I would ask you when this Government has seen fit also to take the pension away from thousands of widows of veterans—I have been told that many widows of those heroes who gave their lives with the fall of the Akron will receive but $22 per month—when it has seen fit to reduce our national defense, how can any Member explain a vote to increase the salary of an employee 50 percent when the administration is crying "economy"?

I would respectfully ask my friends that you be consistent with yourselves, to be fair with those who have been compelled to sacrifice during this emergency, and to vote to keep the salary the same as it has been for over 20 years instead of raising it 50 percent, which this resolution provides.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment just adopted, offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], is identical with an amendment that I had sent to the desk and which I intended to offer. Of course, I realize that the committees are entitled to all the honor of amending a bill which they bring in here, but I rather think they should bring it in right in the first place, without a proposition of carrying an appropriation forever hereafter. Just why that language was permitted I cannot understand, unless they wanted to keep this question from coming before the Congress hereafter. I am very glad indeed that it has been aired on the floor of this House.

Now, I was born and reared on a farm. I know agriculture, and I doubt if there is a man here who is a farmer by practical experience who could point out one particle of good that has ever been accomplished by the expenditure of this money. Forty-eight thousand five hundred dollars a year from the time this was entered into makes an enormous sum of money that has been spent on this. That institution over there in Italy will get up a great scare about a brown-tail moth and you will appropriate thousands and thousands of dollars to exterminate something of that kind. If you could get a cross between a bollweevil and a brown-tail moth, you could come here and get $50,000 a year to exterminate it. That is where those things come from. They come from institutions of this kind. I say to you that agriculture is charged up with all of these expenses. Then they say, "Just look what they are doing for agriculture."

We have had a very nice confession this morning from three or four Congressmen, and the balance of us could make the same kind of confession when we were here fresh, as they are. I doubt if 5 percent of the people who have come to Congress in the last 5 years knew that there was such a thing as that institution in existence. The farmers do not know it. They know they are getting no good from a thing like that. I believe the gentleman sounded a warning note this morning when he said we should let them alone in many respects. I say we are hampering them with legislation sometimes.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FORD. I think I understand the farm question. If all the men who have stood here and said they were farmers do not know any more about the farm question than their remarks have indicated, it is no wonder the farmer is in trouble.

Mr. GLOVER. The gentleman is not referring to me, because I can take him out and lay off a straighter row through new ground than he can carry a bridle through. I know the character of farmer that I am, and I am not like my good friend from New York [Mr. BLOOM], who farms on Broadway, right up in front of the great Morgan Building, where they raise everything in the way of finances and nothing in the way of crops. What New York needs to do is eat more and talk less about agriculture. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. From what I understand of this bill, knowing as much about it as I do, I can understand why farmers such as the gentleman refers to are in the position they are today.

Mr. GLOVER. Oh, if the gentleman knew what he was talking about, he would know that the farmer is in the condition he is today because he has been following expert advice coming from great cities like New York, and not taking the practical thought of the farmers and putting it into execution. I am speaking of the actual farmer.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. About all they raise on Broadway is wild dogs.

Mr. GLOVER. Oh, they raise lots of heck up there. They raise everything except corn, wheat, potatoes, and things that are good to eat.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. Will not the gentleman admit we are pretty good contributors to the farmers?

Mr. GLOVER. You fellows certainly have good appetites; you look healthy; you look as though you fed well. The farmers have been treating you pretty well, and the city folks should think of the farmers' interest.

Mr. BLOOM. That is what I am stating.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. I am always glad to yield to any of the gentlemen from New York, because they are great farmers.

Mr. BOYLAN. What would happen to the farmers if it were not for the people of the great cities of this country who eat your produce and drink your milk?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes; and what is going on now? The farmers' milk is being dumped by the roadside.

Mr. BOYLAN. You farmers have got to depend upon the cities. Does not the gentleman know to be facts these things I have stated?

Mr. GLOVER. No; I do not know all of them to be true.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: On page 1, line 3, strike out "$48,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$46,000."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there will be any objection to this amendment. It puts into effect in the total amount appropriated the theory of the Committee in adopting the previous amendment striking $2,500 off the salary.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. A mistake was made in reporting the bill in that the total was not raised by $2,500 to provide for the $2,500 raise in salary.

Mr. FISH. By its action on the last amendment, the Committee struck $2,500 out of the salary provision of the bill.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. But it was not taken up the other time. The bill as originally drawn provided for a total of $48,000, with a salary of $5,000. When it was amended, making the salary $7,500, the total was not changed. This was a mistake. The present total is the correct total with the salary carried at $5,000.

Mr. FISH. I do not know that I follow the gentleman. This seems to be getting complicated; $2,500 has been taken off the salary. Should we not also take it off the total of the bill?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. As I stated, the original bill, as the gentleman knows, carried a total of $48,000.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman means the Republican bill?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; the Republican bill, if the gentleman desires to call it such. The salary was raised to $7,500, but through mistake it was not reflected in the total. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. The whole thing has been a mistake.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the gentleman's explanation, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: On page 2, line 12, after the semicolon, strike out "actual and necessary traveling expenses."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if these words "traveling expenses", which permit junketing, are stricken out, I am willing to vote for the resolution. For in my judgment there is involved in such words, "traveling expenses", at least $30,000 in this bill for junketing over Europe.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment. I cannot yield, when the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, controlled all of the time on the Democratic side and refused to yield to us who oppose the bill.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I wish to correct the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I know what I am talking about. These departments may fool the gentleman from Tennessee with their bills drawn in technical language, but they cannot fool me. I have been looking after these appropriations for 15 years. I know how to hunt and find the sneakers the department sends up here for passage.

Now, I call your attention again to the information I got from the State Department yesterday.

Our quota or contribution to this Institute in Rome in 1930 was $4,713. For 1931, it was $4,722.55. For 1932 it was $4,689. How much is it this year? We have not paid it yet. They have increased it so that this year it is $5,400.

I got this information from the State Department. It ought to be authentic. The chairman and Mr. BLOOM say $38,400 is our quota to this Institute. That is not so, unless we are to do a most foolish thing and give the Italians $33,000 more than they should receive. I got my figures from the State Department, sent to me by Mr. Carr, and they are correct.

Our quota for this year, 1933, is only $5,400. It is not $38,400. The other part of this appropriation, or at least $30,000, is for traveling expenses of experts in the Department of Agriculture and in the State Department, and possibly somebody else, and I will prove this to you.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I always yield to my friend from New York. I think he is one of the fairest men on the floor.

Mr. BLOOM. I thank the gentleman very much. Let me explain to the gentleman that the reason that is $4,000 at the present time is because at the time we entered into this treaty obligation the gold franc was then worth five times what it is today.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman admits that instead of paying $4,000 we are going to pay $38,400; is that right?

Mr. BLOOM. Will not the gentleman please let me explain?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but that is too much of an increase. I would rather the gentleman would explain it in his own time, because I want to use the rest of my 5 minutes.

I want you to again look at page 4 of Chairman McREYNOLD's report, the report he brings in here as being authentic, and in the second paragraph you will see where they say that since 1922 they have spent all the way from $29,000 to $68,000 a year on this institute.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not time to yield in 5 minutes.

Now, they say that this was for the purpose of paying their annual delegate and sending delegations to the biennial meetings of the general assembly. What does "sending delegations" mean? It means these junkets for these experts in the Department of Agriculture and the State Department—and I am reading this from his report—"sending delegations to the biennial meetings."

If we are just going to have a resident delegate in Rome, why should we provide traveling expenses? Why should we not strike out the traveling expenses? And in my honest judgment there is $30,000 wrapped up in the traveling expenses that I am seeking to strike out. If you will help us strike out these five words, I will vote for your resolution.

Mr. BLOOM. All right; they are out.

Mr. BLANTON. All right; I will vote for the resolution if you will strike them out; because if you strike them out, you will strike out the junketing, and that is all I am after,

Mr. BLOOM and Mr. BOILEAU rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman agrees to strike this out?

Mr. BLOOM. No; I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I knew they would not do it. I knew that the junketing part of the bill is the heart of it. Sending these annual delegations to Rome is what they want to keep in this bill. That is the reason I made them a fair proposition. Was not my proposition fair?

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman will not listen to me.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor. Does the gentleman desire to yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield always to the gentleman from New York.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU and Mr. OLIVER of Alabama rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Membership of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Texas has made a very grave error in his criticism of this paragraph of the bill. You will notice that paragraph 3, on page 2, provides that not to exceed $5,500 shall be used for rent, living quarters, traveling expenses, and so forth.

Mr. BLANTON. Then there is a semicolon.

Mr. BOILEAU. This is in paragraph 3. So all of the entire appropriation for all the purposes of paragraph 3 totals $5,500. So I cannot see how it is possible to save $20,000 or $30,000 out of a $5,500 appropriation. I may be in error, but it seems to me that the wording of this paragraph is very clear. In other words, only $5,500 is appropriated for all the purposes outlined in paragraph 3; and any of the expenses of any so-called "junketing" to which the gentleman from Texas has been referring, must of necessity come under the general provision of the first part of the bill.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I gladly yield.

Mr. BLOOM. When the gentleman from Texas asked me a question and I said I would prove my statement to him and would go along with him, I wanted to explain the mistake the gentleman from Texas had made and confirm what the gentleman has already said that the total amount of all the expenses of the office, traveling and everything else, included in paragraph 3, cannot, in any event, exceed the sum of $5,500. The idea is that the actual and necessary traveling expenses and other contingent expenses incident to the maintenance of an office in Rome, including clerk hire, office rent, traveling expenses, and other expenses of the representative, must come out of the $5,500, and this is exactly the meaning and intent of this clause.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am glad the gentleman has brought out what I thought was the obvious intention of the committee. To me it is so clear that it does not need explanation, and I think the gentleman from Texas must be a Houdini if he is going to save $20,000 or $30,000 out of a $5,500 appropriation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If that statement be true—and from the wording of this bill it seems to be true—then you have provided for a $7,500 salary for the representative which has been reduced to $5,000, by a recent amendment, and you have $4,000 plus as our share under the treaty. What are the items that go to make up the $48,000?

Mr. BOILEAU. The rest of the expenditure comes out of the authorization in the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No; the language is "in the following manner."

Mr. BOILEAU. The language is that the sum of $48,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the expenses of participation by the United States in the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of State in the following manner.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And that is subject to three provisos and you cannot go beyond the three provisos, so what are you going to do with the money?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am glad the gentleman brought out that point, because paragraph 1 provides for a contribution toward the maintenance of the Institute, and $5,000 in paragraph 2, and $5,500 in paragraph 3.

Mr. BLANTON. What becomes of the balance?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am bringing this up for the consideration of the House because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas does not do what he is trying to do.

Mr. McFADDEN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to lines 4 and 5 on the first page of the bill, authorizing an appropriation for the expenses of the participation by the United States in the International Institute to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am Chairman of the Appropriation Subcommittee to which this bill will be referred if passed. May I make this observation. I think the gentleman who has just spoken is entirely correct in his interpretation of the resolution.

It contains only one section and the subdivisions 1, 2, and 3 simply place very definite limitations on the authority of the Secretary of State as to the expending of any appropriations that Congress may make thereunder. He is authorized, if Congress appropriates that much, to expend $38,400 under subdivision 1 only in payment of the annual quota of the United States for the support of the Institute, including the quotas due from Territory of Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Subdivision 2 limits the salary expense to $7,500. You have just amended that so as to limit it to $5,000. That is to say, the salary of the representative stationed in Italy cannot exceed $5,000.

The next limitation is fixed by subdivision 3, at $5,500. These amounts added together make the total of $48,400, which is the maximum amount authorized to be appropriated under the further limitations imposed by subdivisions 1, 2, and 3. As amended the resolution only authorizes an appropriation for the fiscal year 1934; the word "annually" has been stricken out, which would have perpetuated it. I think the House understands the very clear statement made by the chairman of the committee in which he gave positive assurance that this resolution comes to the House at the insistence of, and with the full approval of, the President of the United States. You will also find that he has communicated with other Members of the House and indicated his desire for the passage of the resolution.

If you will read the report of the Secretary of State, you will find that the appropriation here sought to be authorized will be used largely during the next fiscal year for the purpose of securing information to aid the conference that is to meet in London in June, because, he states, it is for the purpose of stabilizing the world farm conditions.

The President has delivered a message to the American people along that line, and that is why at this time I feel it is important that this authorization which he has requested be passed so that the Appropriations Committee may study what appropriations are required to meet the President's wishes; and all of that will be brought to you in detail in connection with any appropriation reported.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I agree with what the gentleman has said in regard to sections 2 and 3, but will the gentleman inform the House exactly how much in American dollars we must pay to participate in this thing?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. My information is that we are authorized to pay such sums as the treaty agreement entered into in 1905 may require the United States to contribute.

Under that agreement as now interpreted, this amount cannot exceed $38,400. That includes not only continental America, but Hawaii, the Philippines, and Puerto Rico.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true, as clear as the English language can make it, that of the $48,500 authorized, $38,000 is in payment of our treaty obligations, $5,000 in payment of salaries, $5,500 in payment of expenses, including traveling expenses?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The Appropriations Committee will certainly place that interpretation upon this resolution, and the committee that brought in the legislation understands that that is the sole purpose of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that since 1906 our quota has never yet in any year been over $11,000?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean the quota we pay them for their expenses.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In years prior to 1923 there had been carried various sums, sometimes amounting to more than $60,000.

Mr. BLANTON. But that was expenses. I got the breakdown from the Department of State.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The Department of State submitted last year to the committee, I think, an itemized statement in which it was indicated that this amount would be necessary, under a resolution adopted by the institute at its last meeting, as our quota.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is $5,400 as fixed by the institute for this year.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I confess that I am not so much interested in striking out the last three words as I am in having the last three words. We have true economy and false economy. We have economy gestures and economy maneuvers. We have economy on small things and waste and extravagance on large things. I confess that I am growing tired and weary in this House of voting for trivial economy, and I propose to break the monotony by voting for this bill. In the meantime I realize that we are now approaching Rome, where this world agricultural institute supported by all agricultural nations of the civilized world is located, and that we must do as Rome does. I promised my constituents, acting on the advice of the exalted leaders on this side of the House, that I would vote against all so-called "gag" rules. I have voted constantly on the advice and instructions of the President and administration leaders for every gag rule in this House. [Laughter.] I have come to the conclusion that the Democrats of this House are about as inconsistent, almost, but not quite, as the Republicans of this House. The leaders in Congress on both sides of the Chamber loudly proclaim against the gag rules when they are out, but declare the virtues of so-called "gag rules" when they are in. It is largely a question of the ins and the outs.

Mr. Chairman, we are in the current of human progress. The nations are being carried on and forward like the fragments of an ice floe, seaward in advancement. Transportation, communication, and the diffusion of knowledge have brought the world together in the tide of civilization. Humanity is striving and struggling in a stream flowing upward. We cannot falter. We cannot lag or fall behind. We must keep pace with the world progress and advancement and civilization. I cannot see my way clear here today to vote to take away from agriculture the benefits of the research in the agricultural world. Belated primitive agriculture is everywhere enlisting and mobilizing in the march of chemistry and the natural sciences to promote the growth and development of plant life and animal industry.

I am not in sympathy with the program of public economy which would deny to American agriculture the benefit of world research and demonstration, coming more vital in farming and in the cultivation of the soil from day to day. The result of one experiment or one demonstration in the eradication of plant parasites or the treatment of animal infectious diseases made available to our 40,000,000 farm population and dependents may be worth a thousand times the small pittance required here to maintain our membership in that highly developed and organized institute or research body to the farmers of a single county or an integral part of a single State.

We are maintaining costly and expensive Consular Service in every country in the world in the interest of our manufacturers, commerce, and trade. And the appropriations to maintain that service mounts up in the myriad thousands and no substantial part of which is to be withheld or withdrawn on the grounds of economy.

Farming is a great basic industry and in which more people are engaged than in any other single calling, and which, by the very nature of the occupation, the isolation and singleness of the individual operations and the want of opportunity for research by experiment and observation, and within the reach of other industries coordinated under system and organization, is without the opportunity of proper facilities open to men engaged in other trades and callings. The amount called for here is a mere grain of sand to the vast amount of money appropriated for other industries assuming higher prestige and claiming greater consideration.

But the chairman of this committee, of which I am a member, advises me and assures me that this involves a treaty obligation to maintain which in good faith as a binding obligation upon the United States, must be met. As a member of this committee I am therefore constrained and in duty bound to uphold and maintain the credit of the Nation upon its obligations. If participation in this agricultural research institute by this treaty provided for, is not a wise undertaking or of substantial advantage to American agriculture, then the treaty-making power should be importuned to withdraw from the union long adhered to and the international obligation be abrogated in proper form and in a way to maintain faith and credit in the community of nations until so terminated.

The tax burden, which we are all compelled to recognize here, prompting the strain of economy and casting its withering shadows over progress, human advancement, and civilization of the world and including this country, has resulted more from the failure and destruction of the tax-paying power, than the amount assessed and levied and appropriated for public expenditures.

When the President shall have exercised the powers conferred upon him by this Congress to expand and restore the volume and supply of money and credit, secretly contracted and withdrawn from circulation over 12 years ago by the international and manipulating bankers still maintaining their domicile and residence within the United States, and the mere announcement of which has prompted a rise of values, the price level, and the wage scale, psychologically on anticipation, the rise will be continued upward to a conservative stage, restoring the earnings and income of the people and not only the tax-paying power, but the interest-, debt-, and mortgage-paying power and the buying and consuming power.

When these powers conferred are exercised, and they must be exercised promptly and without delay to stay the rising tide of discontent and assure the public mind, and without which the advantage gained by the rise will be lost, the blight of this tax burden impoverishing and dwarfing the agencies and institutions of peace and civil life, the schools and systems of public education, the orders of benevolence and all the charities that soothe, heal, and bless, will lift, rise, and pass away like the morning mist before the noon-day sun.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I now make a preferential motion that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out, and on that I demand recognition.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. TABER. It seems from page 6 of the report upon this resolution that our treaty obligation is $4,800 per year.

Mr. BLANTON. It should not be over $5,400.

Mr. TABER. And for a while, from 1926 to 1929, we were paying $11,527. The object of this bill is to increase that contribution up to $38,000.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what they say. But I am not in favor of doing it.

Mr. TABER. No one has explained the bill and just what it means. That is what it means.

Mr. BLANTON. I cannot yield any more. In Mr. Carr's statement he says our contribution for 1930 was $4,713; for 1931, $4,722; for 1932, $4,689.33; and he estimates for this year, although he has not paid it yet, $5,400. That is our contribution. That is all on God's earth there is any law or treaty or anything else which authorizes payment by this Government.

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I regret I cannot. I have not the time.

This $48,500 is going somewhere. Who is going to get it? They say they are going to increase this quota from what Mr. Carr says we should pay of $5,400 to $38,400. Why? Are you willing to increase the quota you are paying to Rome for the Italian institute from $5,400 this year to $38,400? Are you? Well, I am not. And I am not going to permit it to be done if I can help it. When I remember the veterans of the World War and Spanish-American War, veterans who have been on their backs having been decreased in their allowance as much as 50 percent, in cases, I cannot go home and look them in the face and say, "Boys, I had to vote to decrease you, but I voted to increase the payment to keep up the Italian institute in Rome from $5,400 to $38,000." That is what you are going to do. You cannot get away from it. You will have to put your approval in this RECORD today as to whether or not you are in favor of increasing the quota to Italy from $5,000 to $38,000, and at the same time decrease the soldier boys who brought victory back from Europe.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I always yield to the gentleman from New York. He and I are good friends, if I do give him the devil once in a while.

Mr. BLOOM. I should like to have the gentleman listen to this little statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. What are you going to do with this $48,000, Sol? Tell us exactly what you are going to spend it for. Will you tell me that?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; if the gentleman will yield. In the first place—

Mr. BLANTON. Five thousand dollars is going to the resident delegate. Five thousand five hundred dollars is going for rent, heat, and light.

Mr. BLOOM. All expenses.

Mr. BLANTON. And then five thousand for the quota. Is that right?

Mr. BLOOM. No; $5,500.

Mr. BLANTON. How much for the quota?

Mr. BLOOM. Thirty-eight thousand four hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. It is only $5,400 this year. Are you going to increase it to $38,000?

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman let me explain it?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think you can do it, Sol, but I will let you. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOOM. All right. In 1906, when the quota was originally made, the franc was then worth 20 cents.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we know all about the franc.

Mr. BLOOM. No; you do not. Now, today—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I must use the balance of my 5 minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. I will give the gentleman my time if he will allow me to explain it.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well. That is fair.

Mr. BLOOM. We have between us 10 minutes?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. Now, in 1906, as I said, the franc was worth 20 cents. In the last 4 or 5 years we have been paying at the rate of the franc according to the treaty obligation, on a 4-cent rate, and that is why we have only got—

Mr. BLANTON. I cannot yield further. I am against this bill. We must kill it and save $48,500 annually.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has expired.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, as the gentleman took my time, let me answer his questions.

Mr. BLOOM. We are reversed now. The gentleman from Texas will come here and I will speak.

Mr. BLANTON. Now may I answer that question?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Regardless of the fluctuation in the value of the franc, Mr. Carr said that last year, 1932, our quota was $4,689, and under the present value of the franc for this year, 1933, our quota is $5,400, which has not yet been paid; and yet the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] says we are just going to increase that $38,400 as a gratuity to the Italian Government.

Mr. BLOOM. Now, the gentleman from New York will try to answer the gentleman from Texas. We are paying according to the old rate of the franc. Because we have not been participating wholly in this convention, we have continued to take advantage of the treaty obligation at that time. But since that time, since 1906, we have entered into a new contract for the 48 States and the insular possessions, which makes the contribution 192,000 gold francs that we are obligated to pay at the present rate. The present rate on 192,000 gold francs is $38,400.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. In just a second.

We must pay $38,400.

Now, I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to a telephone message which just reached the committee from Mr. Carr.

If Mr. BLANTON discusses further information received by him from the Department of State about expenditures for the institute, I suggest you request that he read the letter to the House, and any statement that may have accompanied it. In his debate of yesterday he misstated facts that were communicated to him.

That is, Mr. Carr says the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] should read all of the statement and not part of the statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I challenge that purported statement from Mr. Carr, and I challenge any Member here to produce such an assertion signed by him. I know that Mr. Carr would not sign such an assertion. Every quotation I made yesterday from his letter was absolutely correct, and I have his letter here to prove it. I challenge him or anyone else to show any misquotation. He cannot do it to save his life.

Mr. BLOOM. I am only reading the message that Mr. Carr sent.

Mr. BLANTON. You have no such statement signed by Mr. Carr. I challenge you to produce such a one over his signature. Here is the letter from Mr. Carr dated May 17, 1933, and if you will compare it with the quotations I made from it yesterday, now in the Record, you will see that I did not misquote him in any particular. He cannot show a single quotation that is incorrect. He cannot do it to save his gizzard. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. TABER. If we had a treaty obligation that required us to pay $38,000 there would be no possible need for legislation such as this.

Mr. BLOOM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. We cannot pay under the treaty without appropriation.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. ALLGOOD. The gentleman says we agreed to pay in gold. If there has been this much increase we better pay in silver. We would better go on the silver standard.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. There has been a good deal of talk on the floor about junkets. As I understand from the recent developments in the discussion on the floor, no money is provided for the sending of an American delegate over there.

Mr. BLOOM. I should like for those Members to rise who do not think that $5,500 includes every expense over there.

Mr. BOILEAU. No money is provided in this bill for the sending of any delegates over there from this country.

Mr. BLOOM. Not at all. Five thousand five hundred dollars pays for the representative and his expenses. That is why the gentleman from Texas withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdrew my amendment because I would rather kill the bill than to amend it. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. What do they mean in this report where they made the statement in regard to the spending of this $68,000 and $29,000, that it was for the "sending of delegations to the biennial meetings of the general assembly"?

Mr. BLOOM. That does not mean going from this country.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. Would it be in order at this time to move to recommit this resolution back to the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to recommit is not in order in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The rule under which the Committee is operating provides for one motion to recommit after the Committee goes back into the House.

Mr. FISH. Is it in order to move to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. Such a motion is not in order now, because there is pending a motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. I ask the gentleman from New York if it is not a fact that the $38,000 would be spent for the purpose of carrying out our treaty obligations; and that if we are to comply with our treaty obligations it is necessary to spend the entire $38,000?

Mr. BLOOM. Not a penny of that amount will be spent for any other purpose than that of carrying out our treaty obligations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the Committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McREYNOLDS) there were—ayes 99, noes 79.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. McREYNOLDS and Mr. BLANTON.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 92, noes 84.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODRUM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 149, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that the enacting clause be stricken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOOM. To strike out the enacting clause how does a Member vote?

The SPEAKER. Those desiring to strike out the enacting clause will vote "yea"; those opposed to striking out the enacting clause will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 131, answered "present" 1, not voting 154, as follows:

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GILLESPIE], is away from the chamber this afternoon on important business and asked me to announce that if he were present he would vote yea upon this motion.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. ADAMS] is unavoidably absent today on account of important business—

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order—

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one half minute.

Mr. BLANTON. Until the vote is announced, I object, Mr. Speaker. I have no objection to the gentleman's being heard, but the vote ought to be announced first.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker, until the vote is announced.

Mr. FISH. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one half minute.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it for the purpose of announcing how some Member would have voted?

Mr. BYRNS. How some Members would have voted and at their personal request when they are absolutely unable to be present.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I very much regret it, Mr. Speaker, but it is contrary to the rules and practices of the House, and, therefore, I am constrained to object.

Mr. BYRNS. Then I want the RECORD to show that I made the request for the gentleman from—

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is out of order. The gentleman was not recognized for that purpose and he cannot put that in the RECORD. We should observe the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

SECURITIES BILL

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until 12 o'clock tonight to file a conference report on the securities bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

REGULATION OF BANKING

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 150 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 5661, a bill to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this is simply an open rule for the consideration of the Steagall bank-deposits guaranty bill. I do not know of any request for time, and I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5661) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CANNON of Missouri in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] has 2 hours and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has 2 hours.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Those of us who are opposed to some provisions of the bill would like to have some time. I hope the gentleman will allot us at least 1 hour.

Mr. STEAGALL. The rule provides for 4 hours' debate, one half to be controlled by me and one half by the ranking Member on the minority side [Mr. LUCE]. I will do the best I can, but of course there are members of the committee who will want time.

Mr. PATMAN. Does not the gentleman think that the opponents should be allowed time?

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, yes.

Mr. PATMAN. And will not the gentleman allow us at least an hour?

Mr. STEAGALL. I cannot promise any definite allotment now.

Mr. PATMAN. How about yielding us 45 minutes on each side?

Mr. STEAGALL. There ought not to be any difficulty about the distribution of time. I do not want to be bound by any definite arbitrary agreement. I do not expect to use a great deal of time myself, and I do not know that any member of the committee wants to use much time. I feel sure that the gentleman can be accommodated, and I will endeavor to see that that is done.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman assure us that he will give us 1 hour of the time?

Mr. STEAGALL. I cannot assure the gentleman of any definite amount of time.

Mr. KELLER. Then the committee has the power and will use all the time.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not think it will do that. I think we can adjust that.

Mr. KELLER. I want to be for the bill, and strongly for it, but I want an opportunity to debate it.

Mr. STEAGALL. I recognize that everybody is more or less exhausted. I certainly am, and I believe all will agree that we should save as much time as we can in the hope of completing the work of the present session in accordance with the plans contemplated by the leaders of the two Houses.

I am willing to bear my part of the burden in order that we may save the time of the House. It is for this reason that I desire to go forward with the debate on the bank reform bill at this late hour.

Mr. SEGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. SEGER. Can the gentleman tell us when it is contemplated that the session will adjourn?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say that it is hoped that we shall be able to finish and adjourn in a few days. I share that view and that hope.

The bill before the House embodies substantially the main provisions of the measure passed in the former session of Congress by the Senate, known as the "Glass bill", and which failed of passage in the House, and the main provisions of the bank-deposit or insurance measure which I had the honor to introduce and which passed the House in the former session of Congress, and which failed of passage in the Senate. A great amount of labor has been expended in connection with those two propositions. The Glass bill, to which I have referred, was the subject of extended hearings in the Senate and exhaustive study and discussion. The measure finally passed that body without serious opposition. It was referred to by the President of the United States during the former session of Congress with approval and commendation. It has been carefully gone over during this session in frequent conferences between Members of the Congress and the administration.

I am sure every Member of the House recognizes the great responsibility that rests at this hour upon every man in a position of financial leadership or who has assumed important official duties with the Government at Washington. I shall not review the distressing experience which the people of the Nation have endured during recent years. These conditions involved every phase of business activity and affected all classes and all sections. Agriculture is prostrate. Industry is crushed. Trade and commerce, both domestic and foreign, have been paralyzed. Bank credit has been destroyed. Confidence has vanished and hope has been deferred until the hearts of the struggling masses are sick. These conditions culminated in the complete collapse of the banking system of the Nation, and the measure of recovery so far attained is by no means satisfactory.

It is useless to censure or to attempt to trace the blame. It is enough to know that neither our financial nor our official leadership furnished the discernment and courage to avert these unhappy developments. In the past, periods of panic and depression have been followed by legislative enactments to safeguard our people against repetition.

The great Federal Reserve Act was enacted as a result of the lessons of experience gathered from conditions that existed in 1907 and prior to that time. Under the Federal Reserve Act we experienced a period of progress and prosperity unparalleled in all our history. Under that act we financed the greatest war in all the tide of time and emerged from that conflict the financial center of the world and the dominating force in the diplomacies of mankind. Under that act credit facilities have been afforded for domestic purposes and also a large measure of the credit requirement for international trade and business.

But we seemed to forget the lessons of experience. We departed from sound banking principles. Our great banking system was diverted from its original purposes into investment activities, and its service devoted to speculation and international high finance. Our financial leaders went on a spree. They cranked up our great financial machine, charged it with high-powered gas, and soared away toward the heavens, forgetting that there would ever be need for a place to land or that a wreck awaited them. Agriculture, commerce, and industry were forgotten. Bank deposits and credit resources were funneled into the speculative centers of the country for investment in stocks operation and in market speculation. Values were lifted to fictitious levels. Call-money rates went soaring, community bankers over the Nation were lured away from normal and legitimate channels into a maelstrom of untried and destructive activities.

Bankers engaged in extending credits for legitimate purposes, for loans in support of commerce and agriculture and for community service and the development of community life, were urged to abandon this service and place their investments in what were represented to them as sound and liquid securities. A campaign was turned on urging bankers everywhere to take out of their portfolios papers representing the collateral and the character of local citizens and to employ their facilities in investment banking, in speculation, in stock gambling, and in aid of wild and reckless international high finance.

The purpose of the regulatory provisions of this bill is to call back to the service of agriculture and commerce and industry the bank credit and the bank service designed by the framers of the Federal Reserve Act.

The purpose is to strengthen the banking structure, to establish adequate capital requirements, to provide more effective regulation and supervision, to eliminate dangerous and unsound practices, and to confine banks of deposit to legitimate functions and to separate them from affiliates or other organizations which have brought discredit and loss of public confidence. We propose to see to it that hereafter the credit facilities of the Federal Reserve System shall be devoted primarily to the purposes to which that great act was dedicated at the outset.

This bill prohibits an executive officer from borrowing from his own bank and further provides that if he borrows from another bank he must report his loan to the chairman of the board of his own bank.

The bill provides that in the case of national banks the Comptroller of the Currency, and in the case of a State member bank the Federal Reserve agent, when they find an officer of the bank continually violating the law, can certify the fact to the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve Board can summon such officer or director to show cause why he should not be removed from office. If after reasonable opportunity to be heard has been extended and the Federal Reserve Board finds such officer or director continuing to violate the law or indulging in unsound practices the Board may order his removal from office. Such hearings are to be closed to the press and to the public.

It is provided in the bill that after January 1, 1934, no officer or director of any member bank may be an official of any corporation or partnership which is engaged primarily in the business of selling securities.

After January 1, 1934, no officer or director or employee of any member bank can be an officer, director, or employee of any corporation or partnership which makes loans on stock and bond collateral to anyone other than its own subsidiaries.

The bill prohibits institutions dealing in securities and underwriting securities from accepting deposits.

Another provision of the bill restricts holding companies to the condition that if they vote stock held by them in national banks they must themselves submit to examination and make regular reports of their condition. After 5 years from the date of the passage of the act a holding company may get a permit to vote its stock permanently, but it must have other assets of 12 percent of the aggregate par value of all bank stock held. A holding company must also increase such other assets at the rate of 2 percent per annum until the other assets amount to 25 percent of the aggregate par value of all bank stock held. The shareholders of a holding company are also made liable for the double liability on the bank shares held by them.

Provision is made that 2 years after the passage of the bill member banks shall not have any security affiliates.

The bill provides that after 2 years from the date of its passage stock in a member bank cannot represent any interest in an affiliate. Affiliates of member banks are also made subject to examination.

Provision is made that affiliates of national banks must make not less than three reports a year to the Comptroller of the Currency; such reports to be published as the bank's own statement.

National-bank examiners are authorized and empowered to examine all affiliates to determine the relation between banks and other affiliates. If within 90 days after the examination a national bank does not put into effect the recommendations of the Comptroller he is authorized to publish the report of the examination.

The bill provides that member State banks must be governed by the same provision as to buying, selling, and holding investment securities as national banks. This section is effective 2 years after the passage of the act.

Provision is made that the minimum capital for national banks shall be $100,000 with the exception that in towns of less than 6,000 it may be $50,000. In cities of over 50,000 population the minimum capital must be $200,000 except in outlying districts where State banks are permitted to operate with $100,000 capital. No State bank may be a member of the Federal Reserve System unless it has capital equivalent to that required of national banks.

The bill provides that investment in bank premises shall not exceed the capital stock of the bank.

The bill permits the Federal Reserve banks to make advances for 15 days on United States Government securities and for 90 days secured by rediscountable paper. However, if a member bank increases loans on stocks and bonds after warning, all such advances are made immediately due and the member bank is made ineligible to borrow from the Federal Reserve bank for such period as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe.

The bill places all relationships and transactions of the Federal Reserve banks with foreign banks under the special supervision of the Federal Reserve Board.

Amendment of the Federal Reserve Act is made to provide for supervision by Federal Reserve banks to see whether any member bank is making undue use of its funds for speculative purposes. If such is found to be the case the Federal Reserve bank is empowered to suspend such member bank from the privilege of rediscounting. It also provides that only one member of a group-bank system may participate in reserve bank board nominations.

It is provided that after 1 year from the passage of the act the board of directors of any member bank must consist of not less than 5 directors or more than 25 directors. Every director must own stock in the bank of not less than $2,000, par value.

The Federal Reserve Board is empowered to fix the percentage of capital and surplus of a member bank which may be loaned on stock and bond collateral. The duty is placed upon the Federal Reserve Board to prevent undue use of bank loans for speculative purposes.

The bill provides an open-market committee consisting of one member from each Federal Reserve district to have charge of the open-market operations of the Federal Reserve banks.

The bill has been reported by unanimous vote of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, and it comes before you under a rule representing the unanimous report of the Rules Committee of the House.

There are some differences between the House bill and the provisions of the Senate bill to which I have referred, but in the main they are similar. I will point out these differences, if I have time, both as to the regulatory provisions and the deposit-insurance provisions.

I think it was in 1923 that I first introduced in this House a bill to establish a system for the guaranty of bank deposits. Bills of the same kind and for the same purpose have been introduced by me in subsequent sessions of Congress. The legislation is not radical. It is not experimental. It involves the application of the principle of insurance—the most universally accepted principle known to the business life of the world.

In the Seventy-second Congress the House passed a deposits-insurance bill which I had the honor to introduce. The measure with respect to the insurance of bank deposits now before the House represents the agreed judgment, in its main aspects, between myself and others who occupy positions of responsibility in connection with banking legislation. The bill is not just as I would have written it. It is not just as any man in either branch of Congress would have written it; but in my judgment it is the best plan for the insurance of bank deposits that has ever yet been submitted.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I am sure the gentleman wants to give us all the information he can. Being very much lacking in information myself, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am going to proceed to discuss the bill, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman's bill guarantee absolutely and make secure all deposits in banks?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will be glad to discuss that.

Mr. BLANTON. If it does, I am for it; and if it does not, I am not for any make-believe bills any more.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am glad to know the gentleman's interest and his enthusiasm in support of bank-deposit guaranty legislation. The gentleman has been active in connection with efforts to secure such legislation, and has been helpful, and I am sure we shall have his aid in connection with the bill now before us. It will ultimately accomplish results that will be satisfactory to my friend.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, there never will be any further confidence of the public in banks until their deposits are guaranteed, and they must be guaranteed absolutely.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am in full accord with the gentleman's views and with every purpose he has in mind on that subject. I am putting forth the best efforts of my life to accomplish just what he desires.

The bill creates a corporation to be administered by a board of 5 members, 1 of whom is to be selected by the Federal Reserve Board, 1 of whom will be the Comptroller of the Currency, and 3 of whom will be appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate. The corporation will have capital stock made up as follows: $150,000,000 to be subscribed by the Treasury of the United States. This fund covers the larger part of sums that have been paid into the Treasury by the 12 Federal Reserve banks in lieu of a franchise tax. Approximately $150,000,000 is to be subscribed by the Federal Reserve banks, the plan requiring that each Federal Reserve bank subscribe for the capital stock of the deposit-insurance corporation in an amount equal to one half of its surplus.

National banks and member banks of the Federal Reserve System are required to subscribe for capital stock equal to one half of 1 percent of their net deposits, to be callable by the deposit-insurance corporation, and State nonmember banks are permitted to participate in the benefits of the corporation upon like conditions and like requirements—subscription to the capital stock of the corporation, equal in amount to not more than one half of 1 percent of their net deposits. In case any State nonmember bank is not permitted under the laws of the State in which it does business to subscribe for capital stock in the corporation, provision is made for the deposit of funds equal to the amount of capital that would be subscribed by a bank having the same amount of deposits, and the deposit is substituted for subscription to capital stock.

The plan provides further that whenever the funds of the corporation are diminished to an amount less than one fourth of 1 percent of the deposits of banks participating in the benefits of the insurance provisions of the bill additional assessments shall be made against all banks so participating to the amount of one quarter of 1 percent of their net deposits.

State nonmember banks are permitted to participate in the benefits of the insurance plan upon certificate of solvency issued by the proper State examining authorities, and subject to examination from time to time by examiners of the deposit-insurance corporation.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield right there? That is where my inquiry comes in, if it will not affect the gentleman's thought.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. On page 22 of the bill provision is made for a minimum amount of capital stock for a national bank; and on page 23 there is a provision which defines how a bank applying for membership in the Federal Reserve System may come in. In that provision it provides it must possess paid-up, unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association under the provisions of the law.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. Therefore, no bank can become a member of the Federal Reserve System unless it has capital of a minimum of $50,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is quite correct.

Mr. MAY. That being true, may I ask the gentleman if he will state whether or not there is any provision in this bill that will take care of the situation of State banks which exist by the hundred everywhere, of even $15,000 and $25,000 capital; whether there is some provision by which they can come in with their present existing capital?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman has followed the bill with care and with intelligence, and I appreciate his interest. I wish to say to the gentleman that the requirement to which he has referred has no reference whatever to the plan for the participation of State nonmember banks in the benefits of the insurance fund. The two propositions are entirely separate and distinct. There is no limitation or requirement as to capital stock of a State nonmember seeking participation in the benefits of the deposit-insurance provision; none whatever.

Mr. MAY. I call the gentleman's attention to the language of subsection (b) of section 5138, which reads:

No applying bank shall be admitted to membership in a Federal Reserve bank unless it possesses a paid-up unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provisions of the National Bank Act, as amended.

This would prohibit a bank from becoming a member if it did not have a capital of at least $50,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is quite correct.

Mr. MAY. Then, how are the State banks to receive the benefits of this act?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman confuses admission into the Federal Reserve System with admission into participation in the benefits of the insurance corporation that is to be established.

Mr. MAY. In other words, the amount of the capital stock has nothing to do with State banks having their deposits guaranteed if they meet other requirements?

Mr. STEAGALL. As to State banks, let me say this: No State bank under that provision may join the Federal Reserve System unless its unimpaired capital amounts to $50,000. But any State nonmember bank complying with the requirements which I have attempted to explain is permitted to join the corporation and participate in the benefits of the deposit-insurance fund. The requirement is that a certificate of solvency by State authorities be submitted and examination by the insurance corporation be allowed. In this connection let me say regarding the suggestion that we have discriminated against State nonmember banks, that the greatest difficulty encountered in the progress that has been made toward the passage of this legislation has been on the part of those who think we have been too liberal in permitting State nonmember banks to participate in the system for the reason that more than one half of the initial fund is made up of the earnings of the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield gladly to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope we will discriminate against some State banks and against every one of them until they make themselves absolutely safe and secure for the depositing public. It is the public I am thinking of just now more than of any bank in the United States.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to my friend that the purpose of this legislation is to protect the people of the United States in the right to have banks in which their deposits will be safe. They have a right to expect of Congress the establishment and maintenance of a system of banks in the United States where citizens may place their hard earnings with reasonable expectation of being able to get them out again upon demand. [Applause.]

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question in connection with this matter of the guaranty of deposits?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield; but I must be brief. I want to yield time to others.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. I am friendly to the guaranty feature, because I believe the depositors should be protected. The objection is often made by bankers that such a system penalizes honest bankers for the acts of dishonest bankers. Will the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency give me an answer which will be a reply to this objection?

Mr. STEAGALL. There are various answers to this objection. Let me say this: I am not going to abuse the bankers. They have their difficulties, like all the rest of us, and all of them are not dishonest. The crooked banker is the exception and not the rule. They have suffered in this depression like the rest of us—at least many of them have—but they are business men. Business is conducted along selfish lines.

The leaders in the banking world in the United States have not only been forgetful and neglectful of their responsibility to the public but they have forgotten their own best interests, and many of them are reaping now in the distress that confronts them the legitimate results of their own folly and short-sightedness.

The same argument which the gentleman suggests filled the air all over this Capitol when the great Federal Reserve Act was in process of preparation. Many bankers then were so short-sighted that they imagined because they belonged to the larger class of bankers they did not need the service of the Federal Reserve banks, and so they objected to being required to join a system imposing burdens which they thought were for the benefit of others. They fought the passage of the Federal Reserve Act even more vigorously than they have opposed the efforts that have been made to pass legislation for the protection of depositors.

But, go among them now and ask if they want the Federal Reserve Act repealed and you will find there is not a man among them who would dare advocate undoing that great achievement in the interest of banking and for the support of legitimate business in the United States.

This bill seeks to establish a mutual insurance system supported and maintained by the banks themselves, in their own interests as well as for the benefit of their depositors.

Every banker applies the principle of insurance in every other line of his activities. He requires insurance at the hands of employees. He insures himself against his own negligence and mistakes. Every banker in the United States who pays a fire insurance premium pays out of his pocket to make good the loss of an insurance company caused by the fiend who burns his home. This bill simply sets up a system of mutual insurance. Bankers should have been first to advocate it, as most of them do advocate it now, because their successful operation depends upon deposits and they must have the confidence of the public to get deposits and before they can be free to employ deposits after they get them.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am glad to have the gentleman's interruption.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. I merely wanted the answer of the chairman of the great Banking and Currency Committee, the author of this bill, that I might answer telegrams of my banker friends. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for his explanation.

Mr. STEAGALL. I could give the gentleman from Kansas some good advice about telegrams.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman is not from Michigan or he would not be getting that kind of telegrams.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. I am from a State that went through the experience of the guaranty of bank deposits.

Mr. STEAGALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but they never went through the kind of a bank guaranty proposition that is now being considered.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. No; I do not think so.

Mr. STEAGALL. No fire insurance company could succeed if all the risk were centered in one community. No bank deposits insurance plan could succeed with one State as a unit with a few weak banks to support it. But the record shows that wherever a State guaranty system has been attempted the results were gratifying so long as it commanded confidence. I should like to give the record of these attempts. I will mention the State of Texas. The law operated 16 years. No depositor lost a dollar. The increase in banks coming into the system was 72 percent and the increase in deposits amounted to 500 percent. Deposits increased from $38,000,000 in 1910 to $241,000,000 in 1925. There is a vast difference between what can be accomplished by a small number of banks in one State dependent upon a single crop and what can be successfully accomplished by the banking system of this great Nation that holds the financial leadership of the world in its hands. I desire to trace further the provisions of the bill under consideration.

The corporation is permitted to expand its capital in three times the amount of its capital stock. The plan for paying off deposits in a failed bank is that the corporation sets up a temporary deposit banking institution to take over the deposits and invites every citizen to come in and get his money. The corporation continues the operation of a deposit bank. The new bank serves the community as a deposit bank until plans can be put into effect for the establishment of a regular bank, and if none is established, within 2 years from the date of taking over the institution, the deposit corporation withdraws; the community is saved from the shock of a bank failure, and every citizen has been given an opportunity to withdraw his deposits.

I should like for the gentleman to read the telegrams that have poured into that office since the bank guaranty bill in the former Congress was given consideration. I can show the gentleman hundreds and hundreds of telegrams from bankers opposing bank deposit insurance legislation and go through the same files at a later date and find where the same bankers were urging the passage of such a law as indispensable to the salvation of the country.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. In just a moment.

Let me say further that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which we established a little over a year ago, taking several billion dollars out of the Treasury of the United States, has never had any service to its credit that approaches that which has been rendered in saving communities from the demoralization and distress of bank failures.

That bill itself was a quasi-deposit guaranty scheme, and that is the best excuse that can be offered for the passage of that legislation opening up the Treasury for the use of private business. I invite the gentleman to take telegrams that he has received from bankers and go down to the Corporation and see how many of these bankers who are opposing this legislation have got their arms up to their shoulders in the Treasury of the United States right now in order to keep their doors open.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. I thank the gentleman, and I shall do that.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman will find that many of them who have been opposing this legislation have been able to keep open only because of the aid furnished them through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

This cannot go on forever. There is an end to what the Treasury of the United States can do. The funds that have been used by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if used from the outset for the protection of deposits in the banks of the United States, would have been worth a thousand times more than the service that has been rendered in other lines.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; I gladly yield.

I want to say just a word further before I forget and pass from it. I do not mean to be understood as favoring Government guaranty of bank deposits. I do not. I have never favored such a plan, but I will say to the membership of the House that the very class of bankers to which attention has been called are at this moment clamoring for the enactment of legislation to require the Treasury of the United States to underwrite the solvency of their banks and the protection of their depositors. I could give further information on this line that I am not entirely free to disclose at the moment. That is what is going on. Bankers should insure their own deposits. They should apply to their deposits the same principles of insurance that they apply to their employees and to their customers and every citizen who offers to pledge his property as security.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Do the sound, conservative bankers of the country wire the gentleman that they want this insurance—not those fellows who were gambling, but the sound, conservative bankers?

Mr. STEAGALL. Can the gentleman give me a list of them? Many people have come to doubt that we have such banks. Of course, there are many sound banks under safe management. I presume all that opened after the 4th of March are all right.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. I would say that the Chemical National in New York today is a sound, conservative bank that does not want insurance, and whose depositors do not want it, and there are many others.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not going to discuss individual banks but I want to tell you that the entire banking structure of the United States was dragged down by a few city banks. That is a matter of history.

It was my privilege to sit in a conference at the Treasury on the 5th of March, in which the high lights of the banks of the country were gathered. In that hour of distress there was no serious dissent from the suggestion that we must have insurance of bank deposits before we may expect complete recovery of business in the United States.

I invite the gentleman to come to my office and let me read him some of my files and see how the banks which he has in mind stand now on the proposition of protection of bank deposits. If the bank to which he refers does not favor it, it is different from its neighbors. I am not quite free to disclose all the information I have in this connection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have been an interested listener in the gentleman's statement, especially with reference to the guaranty of deposits. But there are other features in the bill, particularly in that all-important section of affiliates and further extending the power of the Federal Reserve System in the control of and maintenance of credit exclusively as provided for in this bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Exclusive in what way?

Mr. McFADDEN. There is a section in the bill which provides that the Federal Reserve System shall control money that is loaned the speculative markets—practically preempts the right to loan for speculative purposes. I know that is for the purpose of curtailing it, but I also recollect that there was authority in the Federal Reserve Act for supervision by the Federal Reserve Board and they yielded to the dictation of the big banks.

Mr. STEAGALL. The regulatory provisions in the bill are designed to cure that. There are multitudinous provisions imposing restrictions and limitations and requiring the Federal Reserve Board to carry out the purpose, and to require that the facilities of the banks shall be devoted entirely to legitimate purposes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The Chemical National Bank has been mentioned. I want to call attention to the fact that on page 5, section 4, they are asking for the Morris Plan banks, and the Chemical Bank controls the Morris Plan banks.

Mr. STEAGALL. These banks loan in small amounts and upon personal security. They count character in considering collateral. I see no objection to admitting them into the Federal Reserve System. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have not discussed some of the provisions of the bill at length for the reason that I do not wish to take unnecessary time and because of my greater interest in other sections of the measure. There will be ample time under the 5-minute rule to consider every section of the bill.

The business of this country is conducted with bank credits, not by the use of currency. Ninety-five percent of it is done with bank credits. The Banking and Currency Committee reported and the House passed a currency expansion and stabilization measure last year. I had a part in that. I refer to the Goldsborough bill. I favor expansion of the currency within sound limits under constructive control. But we cannot place enough currency in actual circulation to conduct the business of this country that has been supported by the use of bank credits. Bank credits have declined from 1929 to one half what they were at that time. Bank deposits have shrunk in proportion. Three fourths of the currency in circulation or supposed to be in circulation in the United States is in hoarding. Over a billion dollars of it is in hoarding now in postal savings, which cannot be withdrawn except by substitution of liquid paper. It is in practical effect hoarded—

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I cannot yield any more. I am sure the gentleman will appreciate the situation which forces me to decline to yield. We cannot supplant the service rendered by the use of bank credits. We cannot have a normal use of bank credit in the United States until people are willing to put their deposits in banks. Deposits constitute the basis for bank credit, and bankers can never be free to extend credit accommodations for the support of trade and commerce until they are permitted to retire at night without fear of mobs at their doors the next morning demanding cash for their deposits.

The proof is indisputable that bank-deposits guaranty, if conducted in accordance with established rules and principles of insurance, can easily be made effective at a cost easily borne.

Our national banking system is 70 years old this year. The law creating it became effective in 1863, and in the first year of its existence there were 68 national banks chartered. The system has grown in numbers through the years until now there are more than 6,000 national banks in operation.

Let us see what the cost would have been if the National Banking Act, which was first passed 70 years ago, had provided for the insurance of deposits along the lines of the legislation now pending before the Congress. It is simply a question of mathematics. The record shows that the total net losses to depositors in the national banks for the first 45 years of the national banking system amounted in round figures to only about $45,000,000—about $750,000 a year. The Comptroller of the Currency testified before the House Banking and Currency Committee that the total net losses to depositors of national banks from the foundation of the system down to 1930 amounted to only $82,000,000. For each of the 70 years on an average there have been in operation 4,579 national banks, and the aggregate deposits of all the national banks for the average year has amounted to $5,118,277,000. Thus we see the deposits in national banks have averaged $1,118,000 per bank a year for the 70-year period.

During these 70 years 2,057 national banks have suspended business—an average of 30 banks a year; the deposits in these closed banks have aggregated $1,406,336,000 altogether, or an average of $20,100,000 a year.

The records show that more than 67 percent of the deposits in closed banks for the past 70 years have been converted into cash, and, after paying all expenses of liquidation, have been distributed in dividends to depositors, so that the amount that would have been required to make good all losses to depositors would be less than 33 percent of the total deposits in closed banks.

Figuring the cost at 35 percent, it would have required $492,218,000 altogether to have made good all the losses of all the depositors in every national bank that has closed its doors since national banks were first created, or an average of $7,035,000 a year for the 70-year period. Thus the actual cost to the banks of paying all depositors in closed national banks would have averaged fourteen one-hundredths of 1 percent of the average annual deposits of banks.

It may be said that the losses in closed national banks have been much greater on an average in the last few years than during the whole 70-year period of national banking history; and there is support for this argument.

When the Federal Reserve Act was passed in 1913 the measure as passed by the Senate contained a deposit-insurance provision. It was offered by the illustrious John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi.

This provision was stricken out in conference between the House and the Senate.

The chief argument against the provision was that Federal Reserve banks were not to become money-making institutions and would not be prepared to assume the burdens involved in insurance of deposits.

The record shows that contrary to expectations the Federal Reserve banks have made more than $1,000,000,000 gross profits and over $500,000,000 net profits.

Let us see what the cost of insurance of all deposits would have been if the Federal Reserve Act had provided for deposit insurance. Since the Federal Reserve Act became effective in 1915 there have been in operation each year an average of 8,102 national banks, and their deposits have averaged $12,001,700,000 annually, or $1,481,000 for each member bank. During these 18 years, 1,631 national banks have suspended business, or an average of 90 banks a year, and the deposits of these closed banks have averaged $66,087,000 a year. The losses in these failed banks, figured at 35 percent of their total deposits, have amounted to $416,311,000 for the 18-year period, or $23,128,390 yearly average, or 2,854 per average active national banks a year.

Thus, the cost of insuring the deposits in all national banks during the past 18 years would have amounted to nineteen one-hundredths of 1 percent of the average annual deposits of these banks.

Let us see what the cost would have been in the very worst year in the history of our banking system. During the year 1931 there were 409 national banks closed having deposits at the date of suspension aggregating $439,171,000. Both the number and the aggregate deposits for the year 1931 were more than double those of any other year in our history. Yet, figuring the losses at 35 percent of the aggregate deposits, the cost of insuring all the deposits in all national banks even in 1931 would have been $153,710,000, or seven tenths of 1 percent of the deposits of the national banks. Nothing can be more certain than that if the deposits in banks had been adequately protected by insurance the number of failed banks, as well as losses of depositors would have been enormously reduced. But even if the cost of deposit insurance should be as great in the future as it has been during the past 70 years, or during the past 18 years, or even during the terrible record-breaking year of 1932, its cost would not be an expense to the banks but an excellent investment saving for them in enhanced profits many times the cost.

So far I have dealt with the history of the deposit losses in national banks. I think the figures demonstrate that it would not be difficult to establish a satisfactory system of of insurance of deposits in national banks. I am aware that there is a popular impression that the problem of deposits insurance is much greater in connection with State banks than national banks. Such is not the fact. A much larger number of State banks have been thrown into liquidation, but that does not supply the real test. The comparative difficulties of the problem as it relates to the two systems can only be disclosed by examination of the amount of deposits and a comparison of final losses to depositors. The total amount of deposits in nonmember banks that closed during the 11-year period from 1921 to 1931, inclusive, is less than the total deposits in member banks that failed during that time. In this connection it should be borne in mind that the amount of deposits in nonmember banks during this period was far in excess of average deposits in member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

During the period to which I have referred deposits in member banks amounted to $753,000,000 and deposits in nonmember banks that failed amounted to $957,000,000, but in member banks reopened there were only $119,000,000 of deposits and in nonmember banks reopened there were $344,000,000 of deposits. So we find that in member banks liquidated there were $614,000,000 of deposits and in nonmember banks liquidated only $613,000,000.

State banks have rendered inestimable service in support of the Nation's trade and commerce, and in the promotion of community interests and the development of community life. Any plan established for the insurance of bank deposits should embrace deposits in State banks, regardless of membership in the Federal Reserve System. I heartily agree that they should be encouraged in seeking admission into the System, but we should not resort to coercion or discrimination in order to drive them into the System. The administration of the System should be such as to induce increased membership.

In the figures just presented it is assumed that the number of closed banks would be just as large and the amount of deposits and losses to depositors just as great under a system of bank-deposits insurance as they have been without deposits insurance. Certain it is that if deposits had been protected by insurance the number of failures and the amount of losses would have been enormously diminished.

The argument is urged against insuring bank deposits that it would be a premium on bad banks. Well, certainly the records abundantly prove that the system of noninsurance of bank deposits which we have had in vogue has resulted in unsafe banking, with disastrous consequences both to bankers and the public.

It is bad enough to have bank failures resulting from crookedness or insolvency; it is absolutely inexcusable that solvent banks should fail because of loss of confidence causing runs on banks. Worst of all, bankers are swept into a state of fear which results in a form of hoarding by banks vastly more serious in consequences than that which comes from hoarding by individuals.

It is estimated that banks now have available billions of dollars of collateral for use in extending loans, but the plain fact is that for more than 3 years bankers have given little thought to anything except to keep their banks in liquid condition. Who can blame them? A banker's first duty is to his depositors. Common honesty, as well as every dictate of self-interest, suggests that he give first thought to them. The fear that grips the minds and hearts of bankers, keeping ever before them the nightmare of bank runs, makes it impossible for them to extend the credits that are indispensable to trade and commerce. The same fears seize every investor and business man, great and small, and leave him without the courage to borrow from banks or to invest for increasing employment and enlarging the buying power of the public.

President Roosevelt in his inaugural address spoke the truth when he declared that fear is the underlying cause of our present economic difficulty. We must banish this fear if we are to put an end to the depression. The one indispensable remedy is insurance of bank deposits. Bankers should be the first to support this great reform—they owe it to their depositors, to their country, and to themselves.

Much has been said of the distress and suffering caused depositors; of citizens and their families thrown out of their homes; of women and children suffering from lack of hospitalization; of loss of savings representing the sacrifice and toil of a lifetime to shelter old age from want—all resulting from bank failures.

I want to say a word for bankers, thousands of whom have gone down in the wreck of these recent years, with fortunes swept away, many of them men of ability and of highest integrity, who, in spite of strict observance of rules of business, tested and accepted as wise during the experience of half a century, have seen institutions representing the pride and ambition of a lifetime wiped out overnight; and worst of all, the love and confidence of their neighbors and friends turned into distrust and censure.

The officers of such an institution are stigmatized by public opinion as criminals, or as reckless incompetents who have brought untold injury and suffering to innocent people.

Bankers insure their homes for the reason that no husband or father can rest contented so long as there is danger of having his home destroyed by fire and his family left without shelter. Any father who has lived through the experiences which I have depicted would a thousand times rather have his family suffer any material loss than to have the son who is to bear his name victimized by the record of a father responsible for the management of a bank that failed with enormous losses to the depositing public of his community.

We may talk about percentage of gold back of our currency, we may discuss technical provisions of legislation touching affiliates, investments, open-market operations, group banking, chain banking, and branch banking. The public does not understand these technical discussions, but from one end of this land to the other the people understand what we mean by guaranty of bank deposits; and they demand of you and me that we provide a banking system worthy of this great Nation and banks in which citizens may place the fruits of their toil and know that a deposit slip in return for their hard earnings will be as safe as a Government bond. [Applause.]

They know that banks cannot serve the public until confidence is restored, until the public is willing to take money now in hiding and return it to the banks as a basis for the expansion of bank credit. This is indispensable to the support of business and the successful financing of the Treasury. It will bring increased earnings, higher incomes, and make it possible to balance the Government's Budget without resort to vicious and vexatious methods of taxation. We must have this great reform, the sooner the better. Now is the time of all times to bring to pass this great achievement. The sooner it comes the quicker we shall begin to move along the way that leads from darkness and despair into the gladsome light of prosperity and happiness. [Applause.]

DIVISION OF TIME

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thought we would have a little more time for the opposition than 10 minutes each. Three or four of us would like to speak in opposition to certain provisions of the bill. We fortified ourselves to the extent that I appeared before the Committee on Rules asking for a liberal time. The Rules Committee extended the time of general debate to 4 hours. I thought it was with the understanding that we would have a liberal division of that time. Of course the gentleman from Alabama is in charge of the time, and he has necessarily had to take quite a considerable portion of it to explain the bill. Yet we would like to have more time than 10 minutes apiece, I will say to the gentleman. I am particularly anxious that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] be allowed time in opposition to certain portions of the bill.

6,000 NATIONAL AND 12,000 STATE BANKS

In regard to the guaranty feature of the bill, we have 6,000 national banks in the United States and 12,000 State banks, twice as many State banks as we have national banks.

This bill proposes to insure deposits of national banks only, and 858 State banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System. If this bill becomes law, those banking institutions, regardless of their solvency or insolvency, automatically become a part of this deposit-guaranty system. All State banks will necessarily not only have to get a certificate of solvency from the banking supervisor of the respective State, but application must be made to this deposit-guaranty committee, an investigation will have to be made as to solvency, and then the board that is appointed by the President will have to pass upon the question as to whether or not the State bank in question will be permitted to come within the terms of this law and have its deposits protected.

STATE BANKS AT DISADVANTAGE

I venture to say that not one third of the State banks of the United States can make the showing that will be necessary to come within the terms of this law. If that be true, instead of helping the depositors of this Nation you are going to cause the closing of four, five, six, or seven thousand State banks in this country. That would be more injurious than it would be helpful.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. PATMAN. Just for a question.

Mr. SNELL. How do the deposits in the 12,000 State banks compare with the deposits in the national banks?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know how they compare, but the depositor who only has $100, if that is all the money he has, loses his all in a bank failure just the same as the man who has $10,000 on deposit.

Mr. SNELL. I am wondering as to the amount of banking business as between the two kinds of institutions.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know, but I should like permission to insert in the Record the number and deposits of State banks in each State and the number and deposits of national banks in each State.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The amount of the deposits in the State banks and in the national banks would not necessarily reflect the hardship it would work upon the people, because probably the State-bank depositors, as a class, are much smaller than the depositors in the tremendous national banks.

Mr. PATMAN. That is what I was saying. The man who only has $100 would not want to lose that any more than the man who had $100,000. State banks having deposits of $25,000,000,000 will not necessarily be protected, but national banks with $16,000,000,000 in deposits will be protected, with the people's money used as an insurance premium.

MUTUAL INSURANCE UNDERTAKING

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] said this is a mutual insurance undertaking. That is exactly what it is, and instead of the ones who are benefited paying the premium, the Government of the United States is going to pay two thirds of the premium. An endowment fund is being set up which is to be used for the purpose of raising sufficient money annually by speculation, investment, and otherwise from the general public to pay the premium necessary to pay off the depositors in the event a bank is closed by reason of insolvency.

The money is coming from three sources, namely, $150,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States, $150,000,000 from the surplus fund of the Federal Reserve banks, which, as a matter of right, should be in the Treasury of the United States today. That money does not belong to the Federal Reserve banks. It belongs to the United States Treasury. It never has belonged to those banks. It never was intended that those banks should get that money. Therefore, of the $450,000,000 appropriated, $300,000,000 of it represents the people's money, coming from the Treasury of the United States. The other one third will come from the depositors, one half of 1 percent being assessed against the deposits of the banks.

SURPLUS FUND OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Now, let me tell you about this surplus fund of the Federal Reserve banks. When those banks were organized, they were not intended as profit-making institutions. It was stated they were going to use the credit of this Nation, and for the purpose of compensating the people for the use of that credit, when they paid their operating expenses and 6-percent dividends on the amount of capital invested by the member banks the remainder would go into the Treasury as a franchise tax. As conclusive evidence, if a member bank should fail or should withdraw from this System, that member bank would only get its capital stock back. It does not get back a part of that surplus, because that surplus does not belong to the member bank. It belongs to the Treasury of the United States.

EVIDENCE OF INTENT

The law provides that in the event a Federal Reserve bank becomes insolvent and it is necessary to liquidate that bank after the expenses of the bank are paid, the surplus goes into the Treasury of the United States. If the theory of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] is correct, that surplus should go back to the member banks that subscribed to the capital stock in that particular Federal Reserve bank. It is written into the law from beginning to end, that as to those banks using the credit of our Nation in the manner they are, the excess profits they make shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. Now you come along in section 3 of this bill and attempt to change the entire policy of our Government in that regard. You attempt to divert from the Treasury of the United States back to the Federal Reserve banks that surplus, when there was written into the law, language that said it should go into the Treasury of the United States. Now you come here and claim you are going to use that money as an insurance premium to insure bank deposits for private banks, and that it is necessary to do it in the interest of the general welfare. Yes; I say it is all right to do it in the interest of the general welfare, but do not restrict it to just 6,000 banks. Give all banks an opportunity to come in, and when this bill is subject to amendment under the 5-minute rule, I expect to offer two amendments in particular.

One is to strike out section 3 which changes the policy of this Government in regard to the excess earnings of the Federal Reserve banks. The next amendment I expect to offer will be an attempt to strike out the language that would permit this board of five members, two of whom are members of the Federal Reserve banking system, if you please, to have the right to deny a State bank to come into this System if the supervising authority in the State will make a certificate to the effect that the bank in question, that is making application, is in a solvent condition.

Now, I challenge this committee, if you really want to do something in the interest of the general welfare, and in the interest of all the people, inasmuch as two thirds of the premium is being paid for by the people's money, the act should apply to State banks as well as to national banks.

I wish to read a comparison between the number of State banks and the number of national banks that will benefit. I see the distinguished chairman of the steering committee [Mr. CROSSER] back here. I will name his State. There are 266 national banks and 536 State banks in Ohio.

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield the gentleman from Texas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. In the State of Indiana there are 152 national banks which will be protected under this bill, but 523 State banks will be left out in the cold.

Will they be able to come in? We do not know whether they will or not. They do not have assets that are worth the money they were worth a couple of years ago. Very few banks can make the showing that would be necessary for them to make. If they could not make it they would automatically have to close their doors. So I want to insist, Mr. Chairman, that when this bill comes under the 5-minute rule that we strike out section 3. This section has no relation to any other section of this bill in any way, shape, form, or fashion, but is just a sop to a few big bankers and amounts to a billion-dollar franchise to these few powerful bankers.

Further, I ask that you strike out the provision that would permit this board of five to deny a solvent State bank the right and the opportunity to come within the terms of this insurance law where the people of the United States are paying two thirds of the premium. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, it is almost 5 o'clock. Manifestly there is not a quorum present. May I suggest to the Chairman that the Committee rise?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H.R. 5661, had come to no resolution thereon.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia submitted the following conference report on the bill (S. 753) to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mrs. NORTON, for 4 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LESINSKI, for 4 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p.m.), in accordance with its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, May 22, 1933, at 11 o'clock a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

76. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated May 13, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination and survey of Corte Madera Creek, Marin County, Calif., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

77. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated May 15, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination and survey of North River, Carteret County, N.C., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved March 3, 1925; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

78. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated May 15, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of channel from North River, via Back Sound, to Lighthouse Bay, N.C., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved January 21, 1927; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

79. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill entitled "A bill to prevent the loss of the title of the United States to lands in the Territories of Territorial possessions through adverse possession of prescriptions"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

80. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting draft of a bill for the relief of Ward J. Lawton, special disbursing agent, Lighthouse Service, Department of Commerce; to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McKEOWN: A bill (H.R. 5713) to amend Public Law No. 15, Seventy-third Congress, an act to provide for co-operation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardships and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, approved May 12, 1933; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. KRAMER: A bill (H.R. 5714) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, through its proper agency, to public-school districts in southern California for the purpose of rebuilding public buildings, schools, or other municipal buildings which were wholly or partially destroyed as a result of the earthquakes of March 1933, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HOWARD (by departmental request): A bill (H.R. 5715) to authorize the change of homestead designations on allotted Indian lands; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5716) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, in behalf of Indians, to use tribal funds in the purchase of allotments of deceased Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE (by request): A bill (H.R. 5717) to provide a more stable monetary system by substituting multi-metallism in lieu of monometallism or the single gold standard; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

1139. By Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: Petition of the mayor and City Council of Quincy, Mass., with reference to a study of the entire matter of veterans' legislation, in the hope that such study will bring about a favorable adjustment, to the end that no veteran suffering from a disability incurred in line of duty while in the active military and naval service of the United States shall be called upon to bear a greater sacrifice than other classes of the American public; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 22, 1933

(Legislative day of Monday, May 15, 1933)

The Senate sitting as a court for the trial of articles of impeachment against Harold Louderback, judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The respondent, Harold Louderback, with his counsel, Walter H. Linforth, Esq., and James M. Hanley, Esq., appeared in the seats assigned to them.

PROCLAMATION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will proclaim the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment in session.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment for the calendar day of Saturday, May 20, when, on motion of Mr. ASHURST, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

ARREST OF WITNESS LEAKE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a report from the Sergeant at Arms, which will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
OFFICE OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS,
Washington, D.C., May 20, 1933.

HON. JOHN N. GARNER,

Vice President and President of the Senate,

Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: In pursuance of the order of the Senate dated May 17, 1933, commanding me to forthwith arrest and take into custody and bring to the bar of the Senate W. S. Leake, of San Francisco, Calif., I did, acting through my deputy, W. A. Rorer, on May 17, 1933, arrest and take Mr. Leake into custody.

The said W. S. Leake is now in my custody, and I await the further order of the Senate.

The original warrant issued in the case is attached hereto.

Respectfully yours,

CHESLEY W. JURNERY,
Sergeant at Arms.

EXAMINATION OF W. S. LEAKE

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. W. S. Leake is here, in obedience to the mandate of this honorable body sitting as a Court of Impeachment, and I should like at this time to call him, out of order, as a witness on behalf of the respondent; and we desire merely to supplement the testimony given by him in San Francisco that has already been read into the Record by the other side of this proceedings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness will be called.

W. S. Leake, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Mr. LINFORTH. Shall I proceed, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Counsel will proceed.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Leake, where do you reside?—A. San Francisco, Calif.

Q. How long have you resided in San Francisco?—A. Off and on, ever since I was 8 years of age, mostly in San Francisco.

Q. And whereabouts in San Francisco do you live and how long have you lived there?—A. At the Fairmont Hotel ever since it was rebuilt.

Q. In about what year?—A. It was remodeled right after the fire in 1906.

Q. And is that one of the leading family hotels in San Francisco?—A. It is.

Q. Did you continue to live there with your wife until her death?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you lived there ever since?—A. Yes.

Q. And when did your wife die?—A. November 15, 1931.

Q. Did you have anything whatever to do with Judge Louderback's registering as a voter in Contra Costa County?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you at any time enter into any arrangement or any conspiracy with Judge Louderback with reference to that registration?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you know at or prior to the time of that registration that he had any intention of registering in that county?—A. I did not.

Q. Would you state, in your own way, and as briefly as you can, how it happened that the bills of Judge Louderback in that hotel have been made out in your name?—A. Well, I had an extra room to rent and take a nap in away from my own room on account of the illness of my wife—

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The Managers on the part of the House object to that on account of its being merely a repetition of what is already in the record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate sitting as a court admitted that record with the idea that when the witness came here he could explain the case entirely to the Senate. The counsel will proceed.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Will you please proceed with your answer, Mr. Leake?—A. May I have the question read?

The Official Reporter read the question, as follows:

Q. Would you state, in your own way, and as briefly as you can, how it happened that the bills of Judge Louderback in that hotel have been made out in your name?

The WITNESS. He told me he wanted to have a room in the Fairmont Hotel. I was given to understand that upon some little misunderstanding in his own home he preferred not to create any publicity about it. I told him he could have the room that I had used to sleep in and he occupied the room and the room continued in my name.

Q. Did you explain to the management of the hotel the fact that Judge Louderback was to occupy that room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was that arrangement agreeable to them?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We object on account of the leading form of the question.

Mr. LINFORTH. I am leading him only on account of the condition of the witness. I want to make the examination as brief as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in sympathy with the witness, but cannot counsel conduct the examination in the ordinary way?

Mr. LINFORTH. Very well. I ask that the question be read.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. And was that arrangement agreeable to them?

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. I will put it in this way: When you took the matter up with the hotel people and explained the situation to them, what did they say?—A. Perfectly satisfactory.

Q. From that time on have you received from Judge Louderback monthly the full amount charged for that room?—A. Every single month.

Q. And did you pay the amount that you received from Judge Louderback for that purpose to the hotel?—A. I did.

Q. Were the payments made to you by Judge Louderback in cash or by check?—A. Mostly in checks. If at any time checks were not presented it was probably when he was away on vacation or away on court in some other locality and in those cases—how frequent I cannot recall—I paid the cash and upon his return invariably I was reimbursed.

Q. The checks that you so received from Judge Louderback—did you endorse those very checks and give them to the hotel?—A. I did.

Q. Do you know Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known them?—A. Mr. Hathaway and I were boys in Sacramento. Mrs. Hathaway I have known for a long time, but I have known Mr. Hathaway much longer.

Q. Did they reside at the Fairmont Hotel during the entire period that you resided there?—A. Not the entire period that I resided there. I was there a long time before they came.

Q. What were the relations, briefly, between Mrs. Hathaway and your wife?—A. They were very devoted.

Q. And how long was your wife ill before she passed away?—A. More than 2 years.

Q. Did you at any time, directly or indirectly, receive any money from John Douglas Short?—A. Not one cent.

Q. Did you at any time make a loan from your friend, Mr. Hathaway?—A. Make a loan! I borrowed money; I did not make anything.

Q. When was it that you borrowed money from Mr. Hathaway?—A. My recollection is in March—I think it was the 25th of March—1931. It was the year that my wife passed away.

Q. At that time how much did you borrow from Hathaway?—A. $1,000.

Q. Did you give him a note for that sum?—A. I did.

Q. Upon receiving that money what did you do with it?—A. I paid the bill, either to a doctor or a nurse, of $200, and put $800 in the hotel—gave it to the cashier to be credited to my account.

Q. At the time of the making of that loan from your friend, Mr. Hathaway, were you in arrears in your hotel bill?—A. I was.

Q. Do you remember how much or to what extent?—A. About $400.

Q. What was the condition of the health of your wife at that time?—A. Very precarious.

Q. Did you at any time thereafter receive any money from Mr. Hathaway?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please state when, how much, and under what conditions?—A. I cannot give you the date, but I can give the circumstances and you can perhaps fix it.

Mr. Hathaway was getting ready to go to his property in the country. He came to me and told me that he was going away for a month and he did not feel justified because he knew that I was in financial straits and he insisted and he insisted that I take $250. I told him I thought maybe I could get along until he returned, but to be safe about it I had better take it, and I did, and I am glad that I did.

Q. Were those the only moneys that were ever received as a loan from Mr. Hathaway?—A. That is the only time—those are the only times.

Q. Do you know Mr. Hunter who was appointed receiver in the Russell-Colvin case?—A. I do.

Q. Was he also a resident of this same hotel?—A. He was.

Q. Did you have any talk with him in regard to his acting as receiver in that matter?—A. I did.

Q. Will you state briefly in your own way what talk you had with him on that subject?—A. I am not able to remember the date nor the month nor the day. One afternoon—I would judge about between 5 and 6 o'clock, because I had returned to the hotel from my office—Judge Louderback came in and told me of some controversy that he had had with some gentleman by the name of Strong in reference to a receivership. He asked me if I knew of anyone who was an expert accountant and was familiar with banking and stocks and bonds. I told him that I could not recall anybody at the present time and asked him how long a time would I have to think it over and investigate. He said, "By tomorrow morning will do." I said, "I want to have time enough, because I know that you need a good man and I do not want to suggest anyone that is not."

During the conversation Mr. Hunter, whom I knew very slightly, merely to pass the time of day, walked through the lobby. I said to Judge Louderback, "There is a man you ought to have if you can get him." He asked me what he was doing, and I told him that he had just been appointed to some important position with the firm of Cavalier & Co.

and that he had been in the bank—I forget the name of it—the bank that was headed by Mr. John Drum.

He asked me if that was the same Hunter that had handled some estate or something in Alameda County. I told him I had heard something about it, but I was not sure about it. He said, "If that is the man, I know he is a good man." He asked me if I would see Mr. Hunter and see whether he was available or not. I went over and saw Mr. Hunter and told him briefly the circumstances, and he said he was not sure that he was available because he had just been appointed, and he would have to see his boss. I asked him who his boss was, and he said Mr. Cavalier, and that Mr. Cavalier either lived or had gone to Oakland, and he would not be able to see him until the next morning, and he would let me know.

Q. Did you hear from Mr. Hunter the next day?—A. I think by telephone. That is my recollection.

Q. What did he say to you?—A. That he would accept it; that he had got permission from his firm and would accept it.

Q. Did you communicate that fact then to Judge Louderback?—A. I did.

Q. What, if anything, did Judge Louderback say?—A. He asked me to have Mr. Hunter report at the Post Office Building where his court was.

Q. Did you say anything at that time as to whether or not he had removed Mr. Strong?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say in that respect?—A. I do not recall any particular conversation except that he had removed Mr. Strong and ordered Mr. Hunter to report there.

Q. When he made the suggestion to have Mr. Hunter report, was anything said about bonds or sureties?—A. Oh, yes; to be prepared to give bond in whatever the proceeding was.

Q. Was that talk with Judge Louderback over the telephone?—A. It was.

Q. After having that talk with Judge Louderback over the telephone did you communicate with Mr. Hunter?—A. I did.

Q. What did you tell him?—A. I told him just what Judge Louderback told me; for him to report there and to be prepared to give a bond.

Q. Was that talk over the telephone?—A. It was.

Q. On the evening of the day that Mr. Hunter was appointed receiver, which for your information was March 13, did you see Mr. Hunter in your room?—A. He came to my room in the evening.

Q. What talk did you have that evening with Mr. Hunter in your room on the question of his appointment as receiver, if any?—A. There was very little talk about it. He told me that he had accepted it and given a bond, and he was going to appoint an attorney by the name of Short and Erskine & Erskine. I told him I did not know who Erskine & Erskine was. He said he knew them well, and he must have known them because he spoke of them, calling them by their first names to me.

Q. Did he in your presence and from your room telephone to Mr. Short at his residence at Woodside?—A. I do not know where it was, but he asked if he could telephone—oh, I think he did, because he asked for the telephone book. He asked me if he could use my phone and I told him he certainly could, and he did use it.

Q. Did you hear his telephone talk with Mr. Short?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In a few words, briefly, what was it?—A. He asked him if he would accept the attorneyship for the receiver, and I think he told him what the receivership was. I did not pay any particular attention because it was no affair of mine. What Mr. Short said I could not tell except that Mr. Hunter gave me to understand that he would accept it.

Q. Mr. Leake, was that the full extent of everything and anything that you did in regard to the appointment of Mr. Hunter as receiver?—A. Absolutely the last thing I had to do with it.

Q. Did you receive 1 cent of any compensation that Mr. Hunter received as receiver in that matter?—A. Not 1 cent.

Q. Did you receive as much as 1 cent of any fees paid to Messrs. Short and Keyes & Erskine in that matter?—A. Not 1 cent. As just stated, I do not know the two Mr. Erskines. I do not think I would know them if I would see them.

Q. Do you know G. H. Gilbert?—A. I do.

Q. Do you know his wife?—A. I do.

Q. What has been the length of your acquaintanceship with them?—A. With Mr. Gilbert, in our line of business, we knew each other before we met, in the telegraph business. I have known him personally for a number of years; I do not know just how long.

Q. How long have you known his wife—about, not to be exact?—A. About the same time that I have known him.

Q. Have they both been patients of yours?—A. They have and are yet.

Q. How long, without being exact, how many years back has each been a patient of yours?—A. Mrs. Gilbert a number of years; Mr. Gilbert not so long.

Q. Do you know either member of the firm of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel? I do not mean the father, who has passed away, but the two sons.—A. I have never seen either one of them to know it.

Q. Do you know Marshall Woodworth?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I knew of him when he was a messenger boy in Judge Hoffman's court. I have known him very well for a number of years, particularly since the time he was United States district attorney.

Q. That is, for the Northern District of California?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same position to which Mr. McPike has just been appointed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known that gentleman?—A. I saw him, I think, 1 or 2 days after he was born. He was born in the Palace Hotel, where I lived.

Q. Has he at times been a patient of yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Having in mind all the gentlemen that I have mentioned, did you ever receive as much as a single cent from any one of them out of any fees received by any of them, either as receivers or attorneys for receivers?—A. Not 1 cent, sir.

Q. During the 5 years that Judge Louderback has been Federal judge, have you ever made any suggestion to him in regard to the appointment of any receiver except in the case of Mr. Hunter?—A. Not one.

Q. It is in evidence here that in some 6 or 7 matters, while Judge Louderback was a judge of the superior court, he appointed you receiver in certain cases. Do you recall that?—A. Yes, sir; I recall it. They were very small cases.

Q. Do you recall generally, without going into details, the character of the cases in which you were appointed?—A. Well, they were small things pertaining to apartment houses.

Q. What was the outside figure, the aggregate figure, that you received as receiver in all of those cases?—A. There were some cases in which I did not receive anything; but, all told, it would not exceed a thousand dollars. I do not think it would come very close to it.

Q. Were you appointed by Judge Louderback as one of the appraisers in the Brickell estate, so called?—A. It was some estate of that name. I am not positive about the name.

Q. Do you recall what the inventory value of that estate was, in round numbers?—A. I could not at this time, because it has been sometime ago, and it was a matter that I did not register it enough, did not think enough about it, to.

Q. With whom, if anyone, did you confer in regard to that appraisement?—A. A Mr. Hogan—Mogan; Mogan.

Q. Was he the State appraisement officer?—A. As I understood.

Q. When you signed that inventory did you have any talk with him about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Go on in your own way, but as briefly as possible, and state what he said to you on that subject.—A. My recollection is that I had 2 or 3 conferences with him, and we went over his valuations and figures. I questioned him about the accuracy of them—not the accuracy of them but the judgment of things—and got what information I thought was necessary to justify me in signing the papers.

Q. What, if anything, did he say to you on the subject as to whether or not he had examined into and appraised each item of that estate?—A. He did. He was very particular about that and was perfectly willing to go over them, or take me to them, and let me examine them for myself.

Q. Did you make any suggestion to him as to the amount that you should receive as one of the appraisers in that estate?—A. I did not.

Q. Who was it that fixed the amount that should be allowed to the appraisers, if you know? A. I understood—

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I just want to find out what case they are talking about.

Mr. LINFORTH. The estate of Brickell.

Mr. LONG. In the United States court?

Mr. LINFORTH. No; a State matter.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, what has a State matter to do with this case? I want to make an objection, if it is in order to make one. I object to going into the State practice in this case.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion from the Senator, we will not go further into that subject.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we want to suggest, if we may, that the attorney for respondent should not be deterred from going into the case by reason of the suggestion, because we propose to go into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that it is better practice. However, the counsel can pursue his own method.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, my attention has been called to the fact—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will overrule the objection of the Senator from Louisiana if the counsel desires to go on with the case.

Mr. LINFORTH. Then, Mr. Leake, I will ask you but a couple of questions on that subject.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Did you fix or suggest the amount that you should receive as appraiser in that matter?—A. I did not.

Q. How much did you receive?—A. My recollection is that I received $500.

Q. I hand you a photostatic certified copy of the inventory and appraisal in the matter of the estate of Howard Brickell, and I call your attention to the signature "W. S. Leake", and ask you if that is your signature?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I call your attention to the page of the inventory where the item reads:

To services in appraising foregoing, — days at $5 per day each, services and costs, $1,750.

Did you fix or determine that amount?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you have anything to do with fixing or determining that amount?—A. None whatever.

Q. I call your attention to the page of the inventory where the total estate is appraised at $1,020,804.38, and ask you if that refreshes your memory as to the value of that estate?—A. It does.

Mr. LINFORTH. At this time we offer in evidence, as part of the testimony of the witness, the inventory just referred to.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, it is all printed in the record here now, at page 296, under exhibit no. 7.

Mr. LINFORTH. That may be understood. I do not care to ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I offer it, and it can be referred to at the place in the record to which the honorable manager has referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that counsel offers it to be submitted without being printed.

Mr. LINFORTH. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

(The inventory was marked "U.S.S. Exhibit G.")

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. One further question, Mr. Leake: Did you at any time telephone to Mr. Short at his residence at Woodside?—A. I did.

Q. Can you fix the time that you telephoned to him?—

A. It was, I think, about 1 year before Mrs. Leake's death.

Q. And what was the object of that telephone message?—A. My wife was calling for Mrs. Hathaway, and I was trying to locate her.

Q. At that time was she desperately ill?—A. She was.

Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Leake, how long since you have been engaged in any business?—A. I sold out the business that I was conducting some time after the close of the war.

Q. So that since the close of the war you have not been engaged in any business whatever?—A. Not a business; no, sir.

Q. When did you first occupy room 26, Fairmont Hotel?—A. I do not recall. I occupied the adjoining room for a while.

Q. Please confine your answers to the questions.—A. I will try, sir.

Q. Was it before the month of September 1929?—A. I could not say.

Q. How many years have you known Mr. Gilbert?—A. Well, as I have stated, I felt that I knew him before we met; but I have known him a number of years. We became quite friendly.

Q. How many years has he been in the habit of contributing to you money?—A. Only since he became a patient of mine.

Q. Did he contribute money to you in 1928?—A. I do not recall the date he commenced coming to me.

Q. Can you fix for us the date when he became a patient of yours?—A. I cannot.

Q. Was it more than 4 years ago?—A. I guess his wife was a patient at that time, but I do not recall just when he—(the witness did not finish).

Q. Was Mr. Gilbert a patient of yours in 1929?—A. I think so.

Q. And after 1929 did he contribute money to you?—A. I do not remember the dates. The only money he contributed to me was $150. His wife paid me as she went along.

Q. How often did Mrs. Gilbert contribute money to you?—A. Well, just as she felt like it. I do not know how long.

Q. Many times?—A. Well, frequently, yes, small amounts always.

Q. Beginning as early as the year 1929?—A. I would say yes, to the best of my memory.

Q. Since the year 1929 Mrs. Gilbert has frequently contributed money to you?—A. I would not say very frequently.

Q. I did not say very frequently, but you said frequently.—A. Well—

Q. Is that correct?—A. She contributed whenever she felt the disposition. I had no charge against her.

Q. Did you not call up John Douglas Short from your room on the evening of March 11, 1930?—A. I have no recollection of calling Mr. Short from my room at any time, except—

Q. Was anyone—

Mr. LINFORTH. One minute. Let the witness answer. The WITNESS (continuing). Except the time when I called inquiring for Mrs. Hathaway, and I do not know the date of that.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You remember when Mr. Hunter called Mr. Short from your apartment, do you not?—A. I do not remember the date.

Q. If I should say that it was March 13, the date of his appointment, would that refresh your memory?—A. Well, if that was the time, he came to me the evening he was appointed, and he telephoned from the room at that time.

Q. He was appointed on March 13, and he came to your room on that date, and from your room telephoned to Mr. Short. Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was an out-of-town call, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you not call from your room 2 days before, and call Mr. Short on the long-distance telephone?—A. I have no recollection of it, sir.

Q. Was anyone else in your room on the 11th of March, 2 days previous to Mr. Hunter being appointed?—A. It would be impossible for me to tell. I have a great deal of company.

Q. Do you know who called Mr. Short from your room on the day or evening of March 11, 2 days before Mr. Hunter called?—A. No.

Q. How long have you been intimately acquainted with Mr. Hathaway?—A. We were boys together in Sacramento.

Q. How frequently has Mr. Hathaway contributed to you since 1929?—A. I do not know just how often. Are you referring to money that I borrowed?

Q. I am referring particularly to the $250 which he says he gave to you.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember that gift?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Hathaway contribute other moneys to you?—A. I do not recall of any. If he did, it was very small amounts.

Q. Have you had a bank account in the last 5 years?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have done your banking in cash in the Fairmont Hotel, have you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When Mr. Hathaway loaned you $1,000, did he lend it to you by check or in cash?—A. My recollection is he gave it to me in cash.

Q. In fact, all of your deposits in the Hotel Fairmont have been made by you by cash, have they not?—A. No, sir.

Do you know of any checks you have deposited in the Fairmont Hotel in the last 4 years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What checks?—A. Any specific check? I can give you the names of people who have contributed to me by check, but the dates I could not tell you.

Q. Have you any recollection of any checks which you deposited with the Fairmont Hotel in the last 4 years?—A. I could not name any specific check, but I know that I have.

Q. Mr. Hathaway gave you $1,000 in cash, or loaned it to you, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever repaid it?—A. I paid 1 year's interest; I have not been able to pay the principal yet.

Q. The $250 about which you have spoken was a contribution to you without intention of repayment, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How frequently has Mr. Samuel Shortridge, Jr., visited your office in the last 4 years?—A. Quite often when he was a patient of mine.

Q. And he has contributed money to you, has he not?—A. He contributed personally $1,000.

Q. And his wife contributed money to you also?—A. He has no wife that I know of.

Q. You know Mr. Woodworth, do you not?—A. I do.

Q. He was a frequent visitor to your office, was he not?—A. I would not say frequent. He came whenever he felt like it.

Q. You maintained an office there in San Francisco, did you not?—A. I did.

Q. And Mr. Woodworth contributed money to you at your office in San Francisco, did he not?—A. Mr. Woodworth never contributed any money to me.

Q. Was he not a patient of yours?—A. No, sir.

Q. How frequently did Samuel Shortridge, Jr., contribute money to you in the last 4 years?—A. Only one time, and that was on account of what I had done for his mother.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I object. I have not asked any question. The witness is volunteering.

Mr. LINFORTH. Just a moment. I submit the answer of the witness was proper, and it was in explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The answer of the witness may go in the record.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. How long have you been an intimate friend of Judge Louderback?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I did not hear the explanation the witness gave.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the witness repeat his answer?

Mr. LONG. I should like to know what it was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Official Reporter will repeat the answer.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. How frequently did Samuel Shortridge, Jr., contribute money to you in the last 4 years?—A. Only one time, and that was on account of what I had done for his mother.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I will ask the reporter to read the last question.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. How long have you been an intimate friend of Judge Louderback?

The WITNESS. My real acquaintanceship with Judge Louderback—while I knew him slightly—my real acquaintance dates from after the war, when he returned from the war.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Will you not please tell us how long you have been an intimate friend of Judge Louderback?—A. An intimate friend? I can only by relating instances; but as to giving dates, I cannot do that.

Q. Have you been an intimate friend of his for the last 6 years?—A. Yes, sir. I do not know what you mean by "intimate." We have been very friendly.

Q. "Intimate" means very close relationship.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that right?—A. I have been intimate enough with him to trust him, and he seemed—

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I object, because I have not asked for the witness' explanation of the word "intimate", and I ask that that be stricken from the record.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Leake, your employing a detective named Mr. Ramigie to shadow Mrs. Louderback, wife of the respondent?

Mr. LINFORTH. We object to that as being utterly immaterial to any issue here and not cross-examination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that this jury will consider the evidence, and that what the opinion of the witness may be will not have very much influence on this jury. The witness may go ahead and answer the question.

The Official Reporter read the last question, as follows:

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Leake, your employing a detective named Mr. Ramigie to shadow Mrs. Louderback, wife of the respondent?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Did you not ever pay Mr. Ramigie money for work of that character?—A. Not for the watching of Mrs. Louderback.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, may I have the answer read? I did not hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reporter will read the answer.

The Official Reporter read the last answer.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Did you, at the request of the respondent, employ a detective named Ramigie?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you do it on your own volition?—A. Whatever transaction I had with him was personal.

Q. Did you employ him in connection with any affair of the respondent?—A. I was trying to ascertain who was following him, or if there was anybody.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I did not understand the answer. May I have it repeated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the witness repeat the answer, please?

The WITNESS. Give me the question again.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. Did you employ him in connection with any affair of the respondent?

The WITNESS. Any affair of his? I did it on my own responsibility.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. What you say is that you employed this detective to find out who was shadowing Judge Louderback?—A. I had heard that such a thing was being done, and I wanted to know who was doing it, if anybody.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, that is all of the cross-examination.

Mr. LINFORTH. Just a question or two.

Redirect examination by Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. How long had the mother of Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr., been a patient of yours before her son made the statement to you to which you have referred?—A. A great many years.

Q. In carrying on the work you do, do you make any charges at all?—A. None whatever.

Q. Is your remuneration whatever the patient sees fit to donate to you?—A. Just whatever they give, and no more.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, there is one matter which I overlooked in the direct examination.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Since the death of your wife, have you received moneys on life-insurance policies?—A. Yes; since and before.

Q. Did the moneys you received on life-insurance policies go from time to time into this Fairmont Hotel account?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I object to the form of the question. It indicates the answer required.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to lead the witness.

Mr. LINFORTH. I am leading on purpose, on account of the condition of the witness, and in order to make the matter as brief as possible. If the objection is made, I will reform the question.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. In the making of deposits to your account in the Fairmont Hotel in the last 3 years, from what sources have you obtained the moneys you have deposited there?—A. Money contributed by friends, sale of my books, money that I borrowed, and money borrowed on my life insurance; and finally, on the passing of Mrs. Leake, I collected the full amount, whatever was due.

Mr. LINFORTH. No further questions, Mr. President.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas propounds a question, which the Clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Did you testify that you had employed a detective to ascertain who, if anyone, was following Judge Louderback?

The WITNESS. I did.

Q. If you have so testified, what was the name of the detective?

The WITNESS. "Louie" is about the only name I ever knew of him; "Louie" something—Ramager.

Recross-examination by Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. From what company did you borrow money on your life-insurance policy?—A. I think it is called the "New York Equitable".

Q. When did you borrow that?—A. I borrowed $1,500 some time ago.

Q. How long ago?—A. Quite a few years ago.

Q. Mr. Leake, do you designate yourself a metaphysical student?—A. A metaphysical student and practitioner.

Q. You are not connected with any organization, are you?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I think that is all.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to ask another question.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, may I ask one further question?

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. After the death of your wife did you borrow any further amount on that life-insurance policy?—A. I borrowed all that was due.

Q. How much was that, in round numbers?—A. About $3,800.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas propounds a question, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. At whose instance did you employ such detective?

The WITNESS. My own volition.

Q. How much was he paid, and who paid him?

The WITNESS. I do not know just what amount. Whatever amount it was, I paid it.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Leake, when you borrowed money from the Equitable Life Assurance Society it was one transaction and one borrowing, was it not?—A. Let me see what you mean. I borrowed first on my life insurance when my wife was alive. When she passed away I then drew the balance that was due on that, which was $3,800.

Q. Since the death of your wife you have only borrowed once, and that was after you borrowed the total cash-surrender value of the policy? Is that right?—A. On the insurance?

Q. Yes.—A. That is all I could borrow.

Q. Have you any other sources of income than those you have mentioned?—A. No.

Mr. LINFORTH. That is all.

Mr. KING. I desire to submit a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah submits a question, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Were these persons who made contributions, referred to by the managers, your patients?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I submit a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas submits a question, which the clerk will propound.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Did you have any special reason for keeping your funds at the hotel and not in a bank?

The WITNESS. No; it was handier for me; what I got came in such small amounts. I had a safe in my office, and when I accumulated a sufficient amount, I deposited it in the hotel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. POPE. I desire to ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho propounds a question, which will be read by the clerk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Why did you employ the detective?

The WITNESS. I had my doubts about anybody following; but, if anyone was, I wanted to know what the object was. I did it as a friendly act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further questions?

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to ask the honorable managers on the part of the House and the honorable attorneys for the respondent if they have any further questions to ask Mr. Leake. We wish to know now, because of his desire to go home.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The managers on the part of the House have no further questions unless they are induced by questions of counsel for the respondent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further questions?

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask that they be propounded now if there are any further questions to be asked.

Mr. LINFORTH. The respondent is through with the examination of the witness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the witness may depart for his home so far as the court and Chair are concerned.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. May I ask for one moment's delay?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know whether or not an order is necessary, but, if necessary, I ask for an order releasing the witness, so that he may return to his home when he pleases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that if the announcement is made in the presence of the court, that the witness may depart for home; there is no necessity for any further proceeding.

Mr. ASHURST. I join in that opinion.

Mr. LINFORTH. May I add, so that there will be no misunderstanding, that I was advised that the witness was in a train wreck on the way over and that he desires to rest in bed a day or two in Washington before leaving. I apprehend there is no objection to him doing so.

Mr. ASHURST. None whatever.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. On the part of the managers, there is no objection; but we want it distinctly understood that he is not going to be again recalled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is understood, the Chair thinks. Is that correct?

Mr. LINFORTH. We are through with the examination of this witness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness may remain in the city or elsewhere so long as he pleases. The witness will retire.

(The witness thereupon retired.)

PRESIDING OFFICER FOR THE DAY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] to preside for the day.

(Thereupon Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana took the chair as Presiding Officer for the day.)

REDIRECT EXAMINATION OF G. H. GILBERT

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, when we took our recess last Saturday the witness Gilbert was under cross-examination. I ask now if his cross-examination was concluded. If so, we have a few questions on redirect.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, at the time Mr. Gilbert left the stand it was indicated that his cross-examination had not been concluded. Mr. Manager SUMNERS was conducting the cross-examination. At the present moment he is in the Supreme Court chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Chair to understand that counsel for the respondent desire now to examine this witness further?

Mr. LINFORTH. The witness is right here, and we have a very few questions to ask, and should like to examine him if that is agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We think the cross-examination should be concluded before there is redirect examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Why should we not save time, may the Chair suggest to the managers on the part of the House, by letting counsel for the respondent go ahead and examine the witness?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We will consent to that.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. With the understanding that we will have the right to recall him when Mr. Manager SUMNERS returns for additional recross-examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks there is no objection to that. Let the witness be summoned.

G. H. Gilbert, having been previously sworn, was examined further and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Gilbert, just a question or two: Did you fix the amount of your fee as appraiser in the Brickell estate?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Who did?—A. That was fixed by Mr. Mogan, the State inheritance-tax appraiser.

Q. Did you make any suggestion to him whatever as to the amount which you should receive as appraiser?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. When you signed the inventory, did you know what the fee was going to be?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. LINFORTH. That is all of the witness.

ADDITIONAL CROSS-EXAMINATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do the managers on the part of the House desire to cross-examine the witness?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I will cross-examine on the particular questions and will then reserve the witness for Mr. Manager SUMNERS.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You knew that you were putting in a bill for $5 a day, did you not?—A. No, sir; I did not know that at the time.

Q. Did you not make affidavit in connection with your bill?—A. I signed the appraiser's oath.

Q. Please answer the question responsively.

Mr. LINFORTH. Just a moment. I submit the witness has answered the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the question be repeated. The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. Did you not make affidavit in connection with your bill?—A. I signed the appraiser's oath.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I said in connection with the bill, not in connection with the oath of appraiser.

Mr. LINFORTH. One moment. We object to the question upon the ground that it is without foundation, and it does not appear that the witness ever presented any bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question is competent, although, strictly speaking, perhaps it is not.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The bill appears in evidence as exhibit 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (to the witness). Answer the question if you can.

The WITNESS. Not before a notary.

Q. Before whom did you swear to it?—A. I signed it in the presence of Mr. Mogan, the State inheritance-tax appraiser.

Q. You knew that bill was for $5 a day, did you not?—A. I do not know that I really knew that. I may have.

Q. Did you read the bill before you signed it?—A. I probably did.

Q. Does it not say?—

Estate of Howard Brickell, deceased, to R. F. Mogan (inheritance-tax appraiser), W. S. Leake, and G. H. Gilbert. To services in appraising foregoing, ——— days at $5 per day each, services and costs, $1,750.

And you signed that, did you not?—A. I signed that, but there was no amount fixed at the time.

Q. You mean to say that $5 was put in afterward?—A. No; I may have read the stipulation of $5.

Q. You knew that you were entitled to $5 per day for services as appraiser, did you not?—A. I may have; yes, sir.

Q. Did you not sign the paper?—A. I probably did.

Q. Well, say so if it is true. You did, did you not?

Mr. LINFORTH. Just a moment. We want to object to the form of the question as improper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is sustained.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You knew that you received money for 100 days' services, did you not?—A. I did not know what I was to be paid.

Q. I object to the answer; it is not responsive. I said you knew when you received the money that you received it for 100 days' services, did you not?—A. I probably did.

Q. And you knew that you rendered no services, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. That is all.

Mr. LINFORTH. We have no further questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will stand aside. Is the Chair to understand that it is the desire to have the witness cross-examined further later?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Yes; there was a reservation that this witness would return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will stand aside. Who is the next witness?

EXAMINATION OF JOHN DOUGLAS SHORT

Mr. LINFORTH. Please call John Douglas Short.

John Douglas Short, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Would you please state your name, age, occupation, and residence?—A. My name is John Douglas Short, I am an attorney at law, and my residence is Woodside, San Francisco.

Q. How long have you been an attorney at law?—A. I was admitted to practice in 1916.

Q. When did you become associated with Keyes & Erskine?—A. In the year 1928.

Q. Prior to that had you been following the practice of your profession from the time of your admission?—A. Yes. I first was associated with Mr. C. Irving Wright. We formed a partnership soon after I was admitted to practice. We then formed an association, a group of us, with Andros & Hinkler. My partner, Mr. Wright, shortly afterward had to retire from business due to his health and I remained on in that association for several years. Mr. Walter Hepman was also a member of that association, and he and I later formed a joint office arrangement and practiced until I joined Keyes & Erskine in 1928.

Q. Did you state your age?—A. I am 38 years old.

Q. Are you a man of family?—A. I am married and have four children.

Q. Do you know the witness, W. S. Leake?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I met him some time in 1927 or 1928.

Q. Would you state as briefly as possible the extent of your relations and associations with him?—A. I do not remember the occasion of meeting him, but it was sometime in the lobby of the Fairmont Hotel when myself or my family with me had gone to visit my wife's family who lived there.

Q. Are you a son-in-law of Mr. Hathaway who has been referred to here?—A. I am.

Q. Was it during a visit to your wife's family that you became acquainted with Mr. Leake?—A. Yes; my acquaintance with Mr. Leake has been wholly casual. I have only met him in the hotel on a few occasions, probably not over six to a dozen times since I first met him.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Hunter who was appointed receiver in the Russell-Colvin case?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you state the extent of your acquaintanceship with him?—A. I first met Mr. Hunter in 1920 at the residence of my former partner, Mr. Wright, down at Pebble Beach. I have known him ever since. We have always been good friends. I met him professionally when he was receiver for the Security Bond & Finance Co. A client of the firm of Keyes & Erskine was one of the stockholders of that concern and we defended them in a stockholders' liability suit. Mr. Hunter as receiver was in court on a number of occasions then. Later, when he was associated with the bank for which the firm Keyes & Erskine were attorneys, I met him occasionally then. We lived near one another when I lived across from the Fairmont Hotel and we met socially occasionally. We were not intimate, but we were good friends.

Q. Did you meet him during his connections with the firm of Cavalier & Co., for whom Keyes & Erskine were attorneys?—A. Yes; I met him during that period on several occasions also.

Q. How long have you known Judge Louderback?—A. I met him merely as an attorney in his court on a few occasions.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I think I first met him in 1928. I handled a matter for Keyes & Erskine in his court, a case of patent litigation.

Q. Have you ever had any relations of any kind with Judge Louderback except the usual relations of attorney and judge?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you ever been a political friend of his?—A. No.

Q. How many appointments did you receive as attorney for receivers appointed by Judge Louderback during the 5 years that he acted as Federal judge?—A. We were appointed as attorneys in the Stempel-Cooley matter, a real-estate bankruptcy matter. Mr. Gilbert was appointed receiver. We acted in the matter for 2 or 3 months, and a trustee was appointed and we were out of the case.

Q. Are that and the Russell-Colvin matter the only matters in which you have been appointed as attorneys for receivers appointed by Judge Louderback during the entire time he has been on the Federal bench?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you ever appointed by him in any capacity during the 8 years he was on the State bench?—A. No. I was never in his court.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Gilbert, who has been a witness here?—A. Yes. We represented him as attorney for the receiver in the Stempel-Cooley matter.

Q. Was that your first acquaintance with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you at any time since represented him in any matter?—A. No.

Q. What was the fee allowed in the Stempel-Cooley matter?—A. The fee was allowed by Judge Sheridan, to whom the matter was assigned. He was the referee in bankruptcy. He conducted the few hearings had and fixed the fees. I think it was $500 for the receiver and for the attorney.

Q. What is the business of your father-in-law, Mr. Hathaway?—A. He is manager of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York for northern California, Nevada, and the Hawaiian Islands.

Q. Did you ever give or loan any money to W. S. Leake?—A. Never; no.

Q. When did you first learn that your father-in-law had loaned him a thousand dollars?—A. At the time of the committee hearings in San Francisco in September of last year.

Q. On the 27th of March 1931 did you owe your father-in-law any money?—A. I did.

Q. How much did you owe him?—A. I owed him $2,435 for moneys he had advanced me during the period of approximately a year prior to the time I repaid it.

Q. Were those advances made to you by check?—A. They were.

Q. On what bank?—A. On the Crocker First National Bank.

Q. Have you those checks here with you?—A. Yes.

Mr. LINFORTH. We tender them to counsel on the other side if they wish them.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. On the 27th of March, 1931, did you owe your father-in-law any other money?—A. I did.

Q. How much?—A. I owed him $3,651, I think is the amount—yes; it is—on a transaction connected with his deeding to us a property at Woodside, on which we agreed that we would build a home and pay him the balance then due on the property he was purchasing. He prepared a memorandum and gave it to me at that time, and I agreed to take care of it when I could.

Q. Do you remember the date of the deed to that property by the father of your wife?—A. It was the first part of 1927, the first of the year, I think.

Q. Have you that deed here with you?—A. Yes.

Mr. LINFORTH. We tender it to opposing counsel if they desire it.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. When did you receive your fee in the Russell-Colvin matter?—A. Within a day or two of the date I paid Mr. Hathaway the $5,000, between the 20th and the 27th.

Q. Upon receiving your fee did you pay back to your father-in-law the money he had loaned to you?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I object. That is a leading question. I object to the form of the question.

Mr. LINFORTH. I withdraw the question. I was merely trying to hasten matters.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. While haste is desirable, indicating to the witness the answer desirable is not desirable.

Mr. LINFORTH. There was no such intention on my part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Proceed, gentlemen. The question has been withdrawn.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Did you accompany the checks to your father-in-law with a letter?—A. I did.

Mr. LINFORTH. May I ask of the learned managers if they have with them a copy of the printed exhibits?

Mr. Manager BROWNING. Which exhibit?

Mr. LINFORTH. The printed volume of exhibits which you had printed and to which you referred the other day. Never mind; a copy of it is now in my possession.

We offer at this time the letter referred to by the witness, which is printed in the RECORD volume of exhibits at page 887, and we ask permission to read it for the benefit of the court.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We think the original letter should be produced for examination by the managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do managers on the part of the House deny the existence of the letter?

The WITNESS. Mr. SUMNERS has the original letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the interest of progress, the Presiding Officer would think if this is an exact copy of the letter that the copy itself might be used. Of course, the best evidence is the letter itself.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, may I add that the original letter was given to the investigators on behalf of the House when they were in California in September and they have the original letter and we have their receipt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that be true, then the letter cannot be in the custody of counsel for the respondent.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Then we have no objection to the copy. I did not know that was the fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the letter be read.

Mr. LINFORTH. For that reason we offered the printed copy. The letter is as follows:

LAW OFFICES OF KEYES & ERSKINE,
March 27, 1931.

Mr. W. L. HATHAWAY,
San Francisco, Calif.

DEAR MR. HATHAWAY: We have finally received our compensation to date in the Russell-Colvin & Co. matter, and I can now take up at least a part of my obligations to you. The record in my two check books shows the following advances made me by you:

October 1929 (Crocker Bank).....	$200
December 1929 (Crocker Bank).....	100
February 1930 (Crocker Bank).....	100
June 1930 (Crocker Bank).....	60
October 1930 (Bank of Italy).....	100
December 1930 (Bank of Italy).....	100
January 1931 (Crocker Bank).....	1,500
Do.....	75
	2,235

I also have a note in my bill file stating that I owe you "$500 for advances in 1929", which indicates that there is $200 due in addition to the first two items above. If your records do not show this, we can correct it later.

Mr. Manager LEWIS. May I interrupt? The idea is to save time. This is all in the printed record, under Exhibit 32, at page 511 of the record of this trial.

Mr. LINFORTH. It is very brief, and I want it to lay a foundation for what follows.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it would be just as well to let it be read.

Mr. LINFORTH (reading).

In addition to these advances there is our understanding in respect to the 12½ acres you deed us at Woodside, that I should reimburse you for the balance remaining due on that portion of your purchase from the Spring Valley Water Co. in accordance with the memorandum you prepared at the time we arranged to build our house. The balance arrived at was $3,651.61.

I am inclosing my check for $5,000 of which $2,435 is in repayment of your advances as above, and the rest is on account of the Woodside property, which leaves a balance on this account of $1,086.61.

Sincerely yours,

DOUGLAS.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Did you personally deliver that letter to your father-in-law?—A. I did.

Q. I hand you a bunch of canceled checks. Are these the checks showing the advance to you of $2,435 referred to in that letter?—A. Yes; these are the checks.

Mr. LINFORTH. We offer the checks, and state that they need not be printed in the record unless it is so desired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The checks were marked "U.S.S. Exhibit H.")

The WITNESS. I might explain, in connection with that, that at the time I delivered the check of $500 with this letter to Mr. Hathaway he stated, "You do not owe me this amount." I said, "Well, I insist on paying you the amount of the balance due on the Woodside property." He stated to me at the time that at the time that he had deeded the adjoining property to his other daughter it had been free and clear, and he wanted to treat the two girls alike. Therefore, he said, "You do not owe me this, and I will not accept it; but I will take it as a loan and return it to you, as I need it, because I am going to use this money immediately on my ranch properties down here, which I am improving and building on."

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. And did he subsequently return to you the difference between the twenty-four hundred and odd dollars and the $5,000?—A. He did; all of it.

Q. You referred in that letter to a statement in which he had figured the balance due on the Woodside property at $3,657.61. Is the paper I show you that statement?—A. Yes. This is the memorandum Mr. Hathaway prepared and gave me at the time, before he delivered us the deed.

Q. Are those figures in the handwriting of your father-in-law?—A. They are.

Mr. LINFORTH. We offer that paper, and we do not care about it being printed in the RECORD.

(The paper was marked "U.S.S. Exhibit I.")

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. I hand you a deed from Caro L. Hathaway and W. L. Hathaway to Marie Hathaway Short, of date the 10th of January 1927. Is the grantee in that deed your wife?—A. Yes.

Q. The daughter of Mr. Hathaway?—A. Yes.

Q. Is this the deed by which the 11 acres that you have referred to were deeded to you?—A. It is.

Mr. LINFORTH. We offer the deed, and do not care about its being printed in the RECORD.

(The deed was marked "U.S.S. Exhibit J.")

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. When did you first hear of your appointment in the Russell-Colvin case?—A. I first heard of the matter of our acting as attorneys from Mr. Hunter, who phoned my residence the night of March 13, said he had been appointed as receiver of the Russell-Colvin Co., and said he wanted us to act as his attorneys. He said at the time that it was necessary to take charge the following morning, and he would like that I should meet him early, as early as 8:30, if possible; so I told him that I felt we should be very glad to represent him, and I phoned that I would speak to Herbert Erskine and Morse Erskine in the morning and try to keep an engagement with him at that hour.

I called Mr. Herbert Erskine, told him about it, and arranged to meet in the morning; and he and Morse Erskine and myself discussed it, and said we would give Mr. Hunter every possible service, and be very glad to undertake the work.

I went to Mr. Hunter's office at Cavalier & Co., had a brief discussion with him, and then we went over to the Russell-Colvin office and met Morse Erskine there and took charge of the estate.

Q. Did you have any talk of any kind at any time with Mr. Leake about your appointment as attorneys in that matter?—A. I did not.

Q. Or with Judge Louderback?—A. No.

Q. You are familiar with the statement of services which has been offered in evidence in this matter—the statement of services of the attorneys?—A. Yes.

Q. Without going over the matter, is the statement, insofar as it details the services rendered by you, correct?—A. There are two statements. They are both correct; yes.

There may be omissions from them, but whatever is in those is correct.

Q. The statement in evidence is the statement relating to the first application for fees. Did you subsequently file another statement on application for fees?—A. Yes; about 8 or 9 months after that we filed a second application.

Q. There was an application made separately for compensation on behalf of counsel, was there not?—A. In each instance there was an application made for the receiver's compensation and the attorneys' compensation; the first one at the end of approximately a year, and the second one about 9 months after that.

Q. I will put that second statement in evidence a little later; but I will ask you, Mr. Short, in the interest of brevity, whether the services outlined and designated in that second statement are correct of your own knowledge?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell the Presiding Officer and the Members of the Senate in your own way, but very briefly, how much time you and the firm of Keyes & Erskine devoted to the matters of this receivership?—A. Well, the work involved all of my—practically, I should say—all of my time for a year and 6 or 8 months; in other words, until the entire distribution was completed. It involved, for the first 3 or 4 months, practically all of the time of Morse Erskine; and thereafter, I should say, it took from one third to one half of his time for the period I have stated in regard to myself, a year and a half or more.

Q. Did you give to Judge Louderback, or did he receive, to your knowledge, one cent of what was awarded you as fees?—A. No.

Q. Or any other amount?—A. No.

Q. Did Mr. Leake receive any part or portion of your fees in that matter?—A. He did not.

Q. Did anyone except yourself and the firm of Erskine & Erskine receive any part of those fees?—A. No one else.

Q. How long have you lived at Woodside?—A. Since we built our home there in 1927.

Q. That is about 30 miles from San Francisco?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall ever receiving a telephone call or message from Mr. W. S. Leake?—A. I recall a telephone message from Mr. Leake on one occasion only.

Q. About what?—A. He was inquiring to reach the Hathaways. He wanted Mrs. Hathaway particularly. Mrs. Leake was asking for her, he said, and wanted to locate her. They were not in the hotel.

Q. Were the Hathaways at your home at that time?—A. They were not. I told him I did not know where they were, but if I could reach them, I would give them his message.

Q. Are you able to fix the time of that telephone call?—A. No; I do not remember the time of it. I merely remember the fact that that was the only time he ever phoned me.

Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have an interrogatory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The interrogatory submitted by the Senator from Utah will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. What services did Morse Erskine, your legal associate, render in the Russell-Colvin case?

The WITNESS. He was particularly active in the beginning in handling matters concerning the general estate. The thing that we had on hand that required immediate attention was the contract with Mr. Blumberg for the purchase of the Consolidated Box controlling stock; and Mr. Morse Erskine—who was a director of the United Paper Box Co., and the firm were attorneys for that concern, a competitive concern with the Consolidated—was able to interest Mr. Spiegelman, the president of that concern; and through his interest we were able to get an offer that eventually resulted in a satisfactory sale not only of the controlling stock but of a large block of the debentures and the machinery, which would otherwise have been almost a total loss.

He was, as I say, engaged in that work especially for those three very active months, and cooperated with me in research and investigation of the law of stock-brokerage liquidations, and assisted to a certain extent in devising the means and methods for handling the reclamation proceeding, resulting in the return to customers of their securities or proceeds and the eventual disposition of the estate. He was consulted by me constantly, and assisted in every phase of the work.

Mr. KING. I have another interrogatory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The interrogatory will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. As I understand, the record shows that you conferred very often with the receiver. Why were so many conferences necessary?

The WITNESS. Well, that was largely due to the fact that there were so many—such a multiplicity of interests in the concern. There were several subsidiary companies. Each one had to be studied and analyzed and reported on. Then the reclamation proceedings were necessary to be handled.

In a stock-brokerage liquidation, unlike any other ordinary merchandising concern, a very complicated situation exists in which claims must first be had and filed; they must all be analyzed, compared with the books, and any discrepancies or arguments between the customers and the firm must be disposed of, either by litigation or by agreement. Once those claims are in comes the question of tracing securities, which is a very involved and difficult process, requiring legal advice at every turn and every phase of it.

We prepared a questionnaire in the beginning. We first studied the situation to a sufficient extent and analyzed the decisions in stock-brokerage liquidations until we were convinced of the proper method of procedure.

One of three methods could be followed:

We could simply have called for claims, had the court appoint a special master, had the court appoint certified public accountants to assist the special master to report on claims, and forced each claimant in an adversary proceeding to prove his claim and have the special master finally report it.

Or, as the defendants and others had originally hoped, it might be possible to sell the concern as a going concern and effect some sort of compromise, if necessary, with the customers.

The third program was the one we finally adopted, because of our discovery that in practically all stock-brokerage liquidations where they go through the formal procedure of an omnibus proceeding, in which a special master and accountants determine the claim, it would take us from 3 to 4 years to dispose of it. Mr. Hunter was anxious to get back to his employment; and we took the task with the understanding with him that we thought we could dispose of it within 6 months to a year. We fortunately were able to dispose of it in something over a year and half—a record in those proceedings.

The Wilson case was referred to here the other day when I was in the balcony—

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I do not know whether this is in response to an interrogation or not, but it seems to be quite a long speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Utah satisfied with the response to his question?

Mr. KING. I am satisfied, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. Then let the managers on the part of the House proceed with their questioning. Was there a further question on the part of the Senator from Utah? If so, the clerk will read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. What was the nature of your services?

Mr. KING. I think he has answered that sufficiently.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Short, at the time of your appointment as the attorney for the receiver of the Russell-Colvin Co. you were employed by Keyes & Erskine, were you not?—A. Yes.

Q. And you were receiving $200 a month for your services, were you not?—A. That was part of our arrangement; yes.

Q. That was all they paid you for your services, was it not?—A. They supplied me with an office, and all of the overhead expenses were paid. I was permitted to conduct any personal business I had.

Q. Did you conduct personal business?—A. Yes.

Q. How much did you charge, either by day or by hour, to your clients for your services?—A. I do not recall.

Q. Do you not have a rate of charge against your clients for services rendered for them?—A. A rate per hour?

Q. Per hour or per day?—A. No; I do not think so.

Q. So that you never charged your clients either per day or per hour for services?—A. No.

Q. You have testified that you spent practically all of your time on this thing for the first year, have you not?—A. Yes; I think that is right.

Q. When you say all of your time, you mean how many hours a day?—A. I could not say. I think there were some days when I probably spent not more than 4 or 5 hours, and some days when I spent 12 to 14 hours.

Q. You count Saturdays and Sundays in that, when you say all of your time?—A. I would not count Sundays, although we worked Sundays on occasion, sometimes Sunday nights.

Q. So that the total of your services, so far as time was concerned, was set out in the bill you presented to the court?—A. That would be the bulk of it. There were certain things which were omitted from that.

Q. Do you know how many hours you spent on this matter from March 14, the time of employment, to March 31?—A. You mean the year following?

Q. I mean the time of appointment, March 14, to the 31st of the same March.—A. That is, in the first month?

Q. Yes.—A. No; I do not know. I have never added up the hours.

Q. Do you know that your bill as set out shows you spent 66 hours in those 17 days?—A. I do not know. I have never checked it up.

Q. Do you know how many hours you spent in the month of April 1930 on this matter?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know that your bill shows that you spent 141 hours?—A. I do not know, as I say.

Q. Do you know how many hours you spent in the month of May 1930?—A. I do not know the hours of any month.

Q. Do you know that your bill shows that in the month of May you spent 61 hours, May 1930?—A. I do not know.

Q. I have had a tabulation made showing the total of hours in each month for 1930, the date of your appointment in March, for 1 year, and it shows that the total amount of your time spent was 1,407 hours. Did you know that that was the amount of time spent?—A. In a year's time, 1,407 hours?

Q. Yes.—A. As I say, I never added it up.

Q. You say that Mr. Erskine spent practically all of his time for the first 3 months, do you not?—A. That would be my recollection; yes.

Q. Do you know that in the first 3 months he spent, from March 14 to March 31, 66 hours; in April, 82 hours; and in May, 53 hours?—A. As I say, I have never checked up the hours.

Q. Do you know that in June he spent only 21 hours; in July, 2 hours; in August, 16 hours; in September, 23 hours; and in October, 2 hours?—A. No. As I say, I have never checked it up.

Q. Which does not accord with your idea that he spent practically all of his time, does it?—A. I said he spent practically all of his time for 3 months.

Q. Do you know that in the whole year Mr. Erskine spent only 329 hours, according to the bill, on this matter?—A. I would be surprised if that were true. I would say he spent more time than that. He would be as accurate in keeping track of the hours as I was.

Q. What you were paid for was what was set out in the bill?—A. We were paid for the results obtained, I think.

Q. Why did you show the hours in the bill?—A. The hours we put in, the size of the estate, and the satisfaction of creditors who were at the hearing in court.

Q. What was the allowance made to you and Erskine & Erskine at the end of 1 year in this Russell-Colvin matter?—A. $46,250.

Q. Do you know that you and Erskine & Erskine were allowed $46,250 for a total of 1,741 hours?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may the question be repeated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporter will read the question.

The Official Reporter read the last question.

The WITNESS. I should say that was probably—you have checked it up, and it must be about right.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. I have checked it up, and had it certified by an expert accountant. A. You are doubtless right about the hours.

Q. Do you know that they allowed you and Erskine & Erskine at the rate of $26.60 per hour for that total time?—A. Is that what it amounts to?

Q. It does.—A. I take your word for it.

Q. What is the largest fee you ever personally received before this receivership?

Mr. LINFORTH. I object to that as being foreign to this inquiry. The question is as to the value of these services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What was the question?

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. What is the largest fee you ever personally received before this receivership?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I suppose that, strictly speaking, it would not be competent, but the Chair overrules the objection. Let the witness answer.

The WITNESS. I have never received any very large fees. I think the largest fee I can recall receiving was $3,000 for some work in connection with handling the 401 Orchard & Land Co.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. During the several years before this you had been borrowing considerable from your father-in-law, had you not?—A. No. For a period of practically a year prior to that I had been having trouble with my other properties, and I had considerable real estate, and it was in difficulties; I had lost tenants.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I move that that be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question and answer will be read.

The Official Reporter read the last question and answer.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. For several years previous to your appointment as receiver you had been borrowing money constantly from your father-in-law, Mr. Hathaway?—A. No; that is not so. The first money I ever borrowed from him was approximately a year before this, and if you want the reason for it—

Q. I will ask for an explanation when I want it. On the 27th of March 1931, out of moneys received by you as attorney for the receiver of the Russell-Colvin Co., you sent Mr. Hathaway $5,000, did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. And 2 days before that he either loaned or gave to Mr. Leake a thousand dollars, did he not?—A. According to the record, and all I know of it, he loaned him a thousand dollars.

Q. And of that $5,000 your father-in-law said that you did not owe him a thousand dollars, did he not?—A. He refused to admit that I did owe him, and I insisted, and said it was too great a sacrifice for him to have made, and he returned it.

Q. He paid it back to you?—A. Yes; every cent of it.

Q. So the net result was that you did not pay the whole $5,000 to your father-in-law?—A. The net result was that I really paid him an advance and he refused to accept the balance I had fixed as the amount I owed him on the Woodside property, and said it was a gift to us. That is correct. I have the canceled checks for it if you wish them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have sent an interrogatory to the desk which I desire to have propounded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Q. What was the average of your annual income from legal services apart from the $200 monthly paid you by Erskine & Erskine?

The WITNESS. I should say not to exceed a thousand dollars a year. I had an independent income of about $5,000 a year at that time.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Was the independent income included in income from services?—A. No.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Then I move that that be stricken out as not responsive and not competent. A man's private income from investments has nothing to do with this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I think it may remain in the record. I do not see that it does any good or any particular harm.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Do you know the Matson Navigation Co.?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you not apply for a position from them a short time before this appointment?

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, we object to that as being utterly immaterial to any issue here involved, the only question being as to the value of these services, and whether or not the respondent allowed excessive fees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the theory on which the question is asked?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We are endeavoring to show that this gentleman had practically no business and no income, that he was living on borrowed money, and that this fee was entirely excessive—out of line with anything he had ever done in his life before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may answer.

The WITNESS. Some 2 or 3 years before this, I think, I had a talk with Mr. Bailey, a friend of mine, who was one of the officers of the Matson Co. and discussed the possibility of my going with them.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Getting out of the law business and going into the litigation company?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you say?—A. That was before I joined Keyes & Erskine.

Q. What did you say was the total of your income the year previous to your appointment as attorney for the receiver in this matter?—A. My total income?

Q. From the law business.—A. As I said—I answered that inquiry by saying it was probably $1,000, in addition to the moneys I received from Keyes & Erskine.

Q. So that your total income for the year previous to the time you were acting as attorney for the receiver was about $3,400. Is that right?—A. Probably. It might have exceeded that. I recall several years when I had better fees than that. I have no record handy.

Q. Substantially all of the services rendered to the receiver were rendered by Mr. Short, were they not?—A. A great deal of the work was done by me. I do not think the most important work was done by me.

Q. Of the total of 1,741 hours for which this fee of $42,500 was rendered, you performed 1,407 hours, Mr. Erskine 329, and 5 were rendered by some unidentified person. Is not that correct?—A. Have you added up both the applications or just the first application?

Q. I am dealing merely with the allowance of $42,500.—A. Whatever you say on that I will admit, Mr. PERKINS, because I have never checked it. My principal services were in connection with handling the reclamation proceedings and preparing the report on claims, which you have published in your record. I think it was the first time that work was ever done in the West.

Q. Can you tell us the day you actually got the $46,500?—A. I could not tell you the day; no.

Q. It was just a few days previous to the 27th of March 1931, was it not?—A. Yes; because I know I wanted to pay

Mr. Hathaway as soon as I could after getting the check. I secured a check from Mrs. Clarkson, Mr. Hunter's secretary, gave it to our bookkeeper—

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I object. I have not asked any question. The witness is volunteering, and we will get through more quickly if he will not volunteer answers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just answer the questions.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has counsel for the respondent any further questions?

Mr. LINFORTH. No further questions.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have a question to propound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland propounds an inquiry, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Q. How long did the attorneys who recommended your fee keep the papers, the petitions filed for the purpose of fixing the fee?

The WITNESS. Each of the attorneys who testified at that proceeding had the reports and the application for compensation, and I think at least 2 of the 3 who testified visited the receiver's office and went over the general lay-out of the work that was done in connection with the reclamation proceedings, in other words, investigated the work of tracing the securities, the work of apportioning the securities into the forty-six-odd pools, the work of drawing back all the customers' claims, and finally, summing up, said papers were in their hands for a period of 5 or 6 days.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Presiding Officer whether or not the record of the number of lawsuits in connection with this receivership has been put in the record?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not certain on that score.

Mr. TYDINGS. Were a number of separate pieces of litigation instituted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will counsel for the respondent or the managers on the part of the House answer the question of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We understand there were practically no lawsuits?

The WITNESS. That is correct. There were a few. I do not know when he took charge of the estate. I think there were five filed prior to the proceedings in pursuit of what we call "desperate" accounts, bad accounts; two of those were tried, and the others were settled. There was very little litigation.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask—I do not want to repeat the question if it has already been answered—if the character of the services rendered has been projected in extenso at any time in his testimony?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair were stating the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, it would be to the effect that that has been gone into with this witness.

The WITNESS. I would be very glad to take the time of the court to say—

Mr. LINFORTH. It was also gone into by a witness who preceded him—Mr. Erskine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the statement of counsel.

Mr. LINFORTH. I say it was gone into also by the testimony of a preceding witness, a member of the firm—Mr. Erskine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further questions in the examination of this witness? If not, the witness is excused. The next witness will be summoned.

STIPULATED TESTIMONY OF W. L. HATHAWAY

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, at this time, pursuant to the stipulation entered into by the respective parties, due to the illness of the witness, we read his testimony given at the preliminary examination held in San Francisco in September 1932, and we read the testimony of the witness W. L. Hathaway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there stipulation to that effect, the Chair will inquire of the managers on the part of the House?

Mr. Manager BROWNING. Yes; there is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. Counsel will proceed.

Mr. HANLEY read the testimony given by W. L. Hathaway at the hearing before the special committee of the House of Representatives at San Francisco, Calif., September 6 to September 12, 1932, as follows:

W. L. Hathaway, being duly sworn by the chairman, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. LaGuardia:

Q. Mr. Hathaway, where do you reside?—A. Fairmont Hotel.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. About 12 years.

Q. What is your business, Mr. Hathaway?—A. I am manager for a life insurance company.

Q. Are you related to Mr. Short?—A. He is my son-in-law, married to my oldest daughter.

Q. That is John Douglas Short?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know Mr. Sam Leake?—A. Very well.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Oh, I have known Sam since somewhere in the eighties.

Q. Did you ever personally consult him for treatments?—A. I have talked over his system with him, I took his books and read them, and tried, generally, as I do most things I come in contact with, to know something about it. I never considered myself a patient until I read it the other day. I think Sam thought he was treating me, and maybe he was doing me a lot of good, more than I know.

Q. But you did not consult him for treatments?—A. I did not ask him to treat me; no.

Q. Now during the months of 1931 did you give Mr. Leake any money?—A. What month?

Q. During the year 1931?—A. I gave him $250; yes.

Q. I show you a check drawn by you dated April 17, 1931, and ask you if you can identify that.—A. This is a check I drew. I was leaving the next morning for my vacation in the Canadian Rockies and the Yellowstone, and I drew this check for my traveling expenses, and bidding Sam good-bye he told me the terrible condition he was in. His wife was expecting to die, and he did not know how he was going to eat or how he was going to pay his doctors, and he was very hard-up, and I gave him half of this amount, as I recall it, of this $250; that is my recollection. I told him, I said, "Sam, if this will help you, here, take it."

Q. This was in May?

Mr. HANLEY. It is the fifth month on the check. That would be May.

A. Yes; if that is the date on the check, that must be so.

(Check dated San Francisco 5-17-1931, no. 2121, on Crocker First National Bank, of San Francisco, pay to the order of cash, $500, signed by W. L. Hathaway, indorsed by Fairmont Hotel Co., and paid through American Trust Co., marked in evidence as Exhibit No. 29.)

Q. During the month of March 1931 did you give Mr. Leake any money?—A. Yes.

Q. How much?—A. I loaned him $1,000.

Q. Have you the check for this $1,000 that you gave Mr. Leake?—A. No.

Q. How did you give it to him?—A. Cash.

Q. Did he make any request that he preferred cash?—A. Yes.

Q. And also the $250, did he request cash at that time?—A. He did not request that of me at all. I did that voluntarily. He did not ask me for money. He just told me his terrible condition, and as I had helped him a short time before and was perhaps his oldest friend, and as I was going away for a 6 months' vacation, I felt a little gully to go away and spend a lot of money on vacations and maybe he would be hungry.

Q. Did you take a note from Mr. Leake?—A. For the $1,000.

Q. Did you take it at that time?—A. Yes; I took it at that time.

Q. Is this the note?—A. Yes; that is the note. That is my handwriting. I wrote the note.

Mr. LaGuardia. May that be considered as marked, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. SUMNERS. That is the note itself of the witness?

Mr. LaGuardia. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. Suppose you just state the substance of the note to the reporter.

At this point appears the note. We now offer in evidence the photostatic copy of the note, which reads as follows:

U.S.S. EXHIBIT K

$1,000. SAN FRANCISCO, March 25, 1931.

On demand after date (without grace) I promise to pay to the order of W. L. Hathaway one thousand dollars for value received with interest at 6 percent per annum from date—until paid, both principal and interest payable only in United States gold coin.

No. — Payable —

W. S. LEAKE.

(Endorsed on back of note:)

Interest of sixty dollars ($60.00) paid April 1, 1932.

We ask that it be considered the next numbered exhibit in evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. HANLEY continued reading from the testimony of W. L. Hathaway, as follows:

The WITNESS. Mr. LaGuardia, Mr. Leake wrote that interest payment on the back. That is his handwriting. He asked me if I had the note. I thought he was going to pay it. I said, "Will you bring it up to my room?" and went to get the note. It was in my hotel. I had never taken it to the office. He took it and went over to his desk and come back and gave me $60 in currency with the note back again, and he had written this interest payment on the back.

Q. Are you sure it was in April of 1932?—A. Well, I assume he wrote the right date on there.

Q. As a matter of fact, wasn't it later than the month of April 1932?—A. No; I have no reason to think it was.

Q. You are sure it was April, are you?—A. Well, I don't know just why he wrote the date—do you mean it is something of recent date? No; it was not.

Q. This mark "April 1932"?—A. Yes.

Q. You are not sure whether it was May or June, are you, or July?—A. I think if there was any discrepancy in that date I would have noticed it.

Q. But you are not sure—positive—

Mr. SUMNERS. The witness has answered.

A. I would say that it was the date, without question; but to recall it to memory as the date there was nothing in the transaction that would. If the thought is in your mind that he wrote a later date there and that I knew it—no; there was nothing of that sort.

Q. Or he might have written an earlier date?—A. I think not, because he said, "That note is past due"; and I said, "Just about"; and when I looked at it I realized it was just about a year, and I said, "Sam, this was not a year note—this was a demand note"; and he said, "I thought it was to run for a year"; so it was just somewhere in the neighborhood of a year.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Hathaway, when this loan was made had you expectations that it would ever be paid?—A. Well, according to his interpretation of the letter, it was six thousand and some odd dollars.

Mr. HANLEY. Show it to me, please.

Mr. LaGuardia. I will certainly show it to you before I put it in evidence.

Q. According to the letter, there were cash advances of $2,235?—A. Cash advances; that is correct.

Q. And he gave you a check for $5,000?—A. That is right. He also offered to pay me and wanted to pay me an amount of money in connection with a property I had turned over to him that would still leave a balance of a thousand and something.

Q. That was not a loan, though. That was property that you had turned over to your daughter.—A. That we had turned over to them jointly. I proposed, however, when that was turned over, Mr. LaGuardia, to make this thing clear. They wanted a piece of property to build on at Woodside, a subdivision of an acreage I had bought from the Spring Valley Water Co., and which I had been paying on so much a year in installments. They took out one corner, 11½ by 12 acres, and said they would like it, and I finally said, "I will tell you what I will do; if you will pay the remaining money due the Spring Valley on that portion of the property, I will turn it over to you." The property had become very valuable compared with what it previously was, and that was a gift, anyway, because the price I was asking on it was small compared to its value.

The circumstance is this: I named a small amount. I am a man with a steady income but with a scheme of living that I have to live up to all the time, so this extra acreage was quite important to me. I took his formal memorandum. We had no written agreement outside of this memorandum that he gave me.

They went on and took the property that I gave to them, and when they came to build they did not have money enough to carry out the building scheme if they had to return me this money, and so I mortgaged a piece of property here in this city and paid off the Spring Valley so I could give them a deed to these 12 acres. Up to this time it was the intention that he should pay me back that amount.

A short time afterward my other daughter and her husband felt they would like to build on a like acreage jointly—oh, a year or so afterward—and they selected eleven and some hundredths acres. Well, they were not in very good financial condition and they could not pay me, so I gave them outright the deed to their property.

In order to adjust the thing as a family matter I proposed this: I said, "To keep what the two girls were getting equal, I will make you a present of that part also."

Q. That is, to Mr. Short?—A. Yes; that is to Mr. Short. Mr. Short was always sensitive on such matters. He felt he did not want to be taking too much from me, and while it was generally understood that I had given the two girls these two pieces of property, Short showed that the first time he had some money he wanted to repay it, and insisted—wrote this note you have there and brought it to me, and when he brought it to me I said, "Douglas, that thing stands." "Well", he said, "it has been embarrassing. Everybody has heard that 'father gave the girls property.' Now, take at least that part of it." I said, "I won't accept it that way, but I have got to borrow money. I have a building program going on at my ranch that is going to require about $5,000 more money than my income would look out for in a few months, and it requires it." I said, "If you can give me $5,000 over and above what you owe me—loan me $5,000 over and above what you owe me"—which he could not, because we had figured it out. So I got from him about $2,500, as you will see—twenty-five hundred and some odd dollars, and the other twenty-five hundred, if you will look in my bank account.

I went and borrowed from the Crocker Bank, because you know it took that $5,000 to look out for my building program and pay up the bills, so that was the way that statement came from Mr. Short.

Q. So that the overpayment was after you had offered to give him the property the same as you did the other daughter?—A. Yes. He said, "I won't accept it that way." I said to him, "I won't accept the money. Now, I will take it as a loan, and if you need money again—" Well, it run on, and when he got to that period that seems to come to my young people ever so often—I don't know how it is, but they come to father. I did not urge him to pay it back, but when a few months went by he came in and he needed some money, and gradually I have paid it all back. I have more than paid that off, and he owes me several hundred again. It is one of these family matters that is not run exactly like a bank would.

Mr. HANLEY. I think this letter ought to go in evidence.

Mr. SUMNERS. All right, let it go in.

Mr. HANLEY. I think it is a very nice letter from the son-in-law to the dad. No objection to it going in? I am offering it.

(Letter admitted and marked "Exhibit 30.")

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Anything you offer will go in.

Mr. HANLEY. It is dated March 27, 1931, and addressed to Mr. W. L. Hathaway, Hunter-Dulin Building, San Francisco, Calif.

Mr. SUMNERS (interrupting). Just put it in the record.

Mr. HANLEY. Some letters got lost. I want it in the record. [Reading:]

MARCH 27, 1931.

Mr. W. L. HATHAWAY,

Hunter-Dulin Building, San Francisco, Calif.

DEAR MR. HATHAWAY: We have finally received our compensation to date in the Russell-Colvin & Co. matter, and I can now take up at least a part of my obligations to you. The record in my two check books shows the following advances made me by you:

October 1929 (Crocker Bank).....	$200
December 1929 (Crocker Bank).....	100
February 1930 (Crocker Bank).....	100
June 1930 (Crocker Bank).....	60
October 1930 (Bank of Italy).....	100
December 1930 (Bank of Italy).....	100
January 1931 (Crocker Bank).....	1,500
	<hr/> 2,235

I also have a note in my bill file stating that I owe you "$500 for advances in 1929", which indicates that there is $200 due in addition to the first two items above. If your records do not show this, we can correct it later.

In addition to these advances there is our understanding in respect to the 12½ acres you deeded us at Woodside, that I should reimburse you for the balance remaining due on that portion of your purchase from the Spring Valley Water Co. in accordance with the memorandum you prepared at the time we arranged to build our house. The balance arrived at was $3,651.61.

I am enclosing my check for $5,000, of which $2,435 is in repayment of your advances as above and the rest is on account of the Woodside property, which leaves a balance on this account of $1,086.61.

Sincerely yours,

DOUGLAS.

By Mr. LA GUARDIA:

Q. Subsequent to that letter, this conversation about giving the property and accepting the surplus as a loan took place?—A. Subsequently.

Q. It was after this letter from Douglas?—A. He brought that letter over to the office.

Q. And then you had the conversation?—A. And then we had the conversation. He said he wanted to pay me. I told him I would accept the difference as a loan. That was on that date, I imagine, or the day after. I don't know what the exact date is.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. May I have the committee's permission to return this note, or may I have it at this time entered in evidence?

Mr. SUMNERS. It is sufficiently in the record. It is sufficiently identified.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I return it to you, Mr. Hathaway. (Note returned to Mr. Hathaway.)

Thus ends the stipulated testimony.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, may I ask counsel for the respondent a question in order to get a matter clear?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no objection to the question being asked, if counsel is willing to answer it.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. The question I want to ask is, without going into detail, what is the difference indicated that Mr. Hathaway said he would receive as a loan? Have you figured that out?

Mr. HANLEY. It is a question of arithmetic. I have not figured it out yet.

STIPULATED TESTIMONY OF MRS. CARO L. HATHAWAY

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, at this time we offer an agreed statement as to what Mrs. Hathaway would testify to if present, opposing counsel having stipulated that such course might be followed. It is very brief and I read it as follows, it being contained in the statement marked "U.S.S. Exhibit L":

My name is Caro L. Hathaway. I am, and for many years past have been, the wife of William L. Hathaway. For more than 14 years past we have lived at the Fairmont Hotel, San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Leake were living there at the time we commenced to reside there, and Mrs. Leake continued to live there down to the time of her death, November 15, 1931, and Mr. Leake has continued to live there until the present time. Almost immediately upon beginning to live at the hotel I became acquainted with Mrs. Leake and a very warm and intimate friendship grew up and existed between us. In March 1931 Mrs. Leake was desperately ill and bedridden. She had been ill continuously for more than a year prior thereto and this desperate illness of hers continued down to the time of her death. In March 1931 she had day and night nurses in attendance and several doctors. During this time and for some time prior and subsequent I saw her nearly every day, and shortly prior to March 25, 1931, she confided in me the inability of her husband to meet these doctors' and nurses' bill and other expenses incident to her illness. Mr. Leake also advised me of their desperate financial condition and immediate need for help.

My husband had a policy of insurance on his life in the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York. I was the beneficiary in this policy. On or about March 25, 1931, I joined with my husband in an application to that company for a loan of $1,000. This was granted. On March 25, 1931, my husband brought me a check or draft issued by the Mutual Life Insurance Co. for $1,000, being check or draft no. 53636, payable to my husband and myself. My husband endorsed the check and I also endorsed it, telling him to get the money and deliver it to Mr. Leake. All of this was done so we could make a loan of $1,000 to Mr. Leake, and was done by me due to my affection for Mrs. Leake and on account of their then embarrassed financial condition, and for no other reason.

On the making of this loan to Mr. Leake, he gave to my husband his promissory note for $1,000. This note has not been paid and neither has the amount we borrowed from the life-insurance company. The reason that this sum was borrowed upon the insurance policy was because at that time neither my husband nor myself had sufficient money on hand to comply with the request of Mr. Leake for the loan of $1,000.

STIPULATION AS TO TESTIMONY OF GERALD W. MURRAY

Mr. LINFORTH. We now offer, Mr. President, the stipulation entered into by counsel representing the other side while in San Francisco relating to the testimony of the witness, Gerald W. Murray. That stipulation is entitled in this matter, and is as follows, omitting the reading of the title:

U.S.S. EXHIBIT M

In order to avoid the necessity of Gerald W. Murray, cashier, San Francisco branch of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York, appearing in person as a witness upon the trial of the above-entitled matter, it is stipulated as follows:

That if present at the trial of said proceeding before the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment, the said Gerald W. Murray would testify as follows:

1. That on or prior to March 25, 1931, William L. Hathaway and his wife, Caro L. Hathaway, made application to the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York for a loan of $1,000 on policy 2129807, theretofore issued and then in force on the life of William L. Hathaway.

2. That such loan was granted, and on March 25, 1931, the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York issued its check or draft therefor, no. 53636, for $1,000, payable to the order of William L. Hathaway-Caro L. Hathaway, a photostat of said check, marked "1", being hereto annexed.

3. That the photostat hereto annexed, marked "2", is the loan statement to which the said check was attached.

4. That the said Murray, at the request of William L. Hathaway, cashed said check at the Crocker Bank, being the bank where the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York has its account in San Francisco, and thereupon delivered to the said William L. Hathaway the said $1,000 he had obtained upon the cashing of said check.

5. That no part of said loan has been repaid, as shown by the records of said insurance company.

That the said subpoena already served upon the said Gerald W. Murray may be withdrawn.

Attached to the stipulation is a photostat of the check, showing that it is made payable to the order of William L.

Hathaway and Caro L. Hathaway, and endorsed "William L. Hathaway", "Caro L. Hathaway", and by the witness, Gerald W. Murray. Annexed to it also is a photostat of the loan agreement made at the time.

We offer the stipulation and ask that it be marked as the next exhibit in order.

EXAMINATION OF WILLIAM L. GLASHEEN

Mr. LINFORTH. If Mr. Edwards is here, we will call him; if not, the witness Mr. Glasheen.

William L. Glasheen, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Will you please state your name, residence, and occupation?—A. William L. Glasheen; San Francisco; division traffic superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Q. How long have you occupied that position with the Western Union Telegraph Co.?—A. Since 1921.

Q. Do you know the witness, G. H. Gilbert, who has been appointed receiver in some of these matters?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Since 1897, I believe—about 25 or 26 years.

Q. At the time you first met him was he connected with the Western Union Telegraph Co.?—A. Yes, sir; he was.

Q. During your acquaintanceship with him how long did he continue in the employment of that company?—A. His service was continuous.

Q. Continuously?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Down to what time?—A. I think his furlough expired in August 1932.

Q. When did he obtain the furlough that you have referred to?—A. I believe it was February 17 or 18, 1932.

Q. So that continuously from that time you became connected with that company down to February 1932 he was connected with it?—A. Correct.

Q. During the last 10 years of his service there, what was his official position?—A. He was night traffic manager.

Q. And, as night traffic manager, what were his hours?—A. From 4 p.m. until midnight.

Q. And what were his duties?—A. Well, he had charge of the entire operating department—general supervisor, you might say. He had entire charge of all of the different departments in the operating room.

Q. In that capacity, did he have any employees under him?—A. Yes; he did.

Q. How many?—A. Approximately 150; sometimes a little less, and sometimes more.

Q. You were his immediate superior officer, were you?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Were you a superior officer of his?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did he discharge his duties in the capacity in which he was at the time that he took the furlough you have referred to?—A. His work was very satisfactory.

Q. Did you find him efficient?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. LINFORTH. We have no further questions.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. What was the business of Mr. Gilbert when you first knew him?—A. He was a telegraph operator.

Q. When did he become traffic manager?—A. He was appointed night traffic manager I believe in 1918.

Q. And continued in that capacity until he was relieved from duty by the furlough?—A. Correct.

Q. Is his furlough still extended?—A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Is his furlough still in operation?—A. No, sir; it is not.

Q. What happened to that?—A. At the expiration of his furlough he failed to return to duty, and he was written off.

Q. Do you know why he failed to return?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Who was his immediate superior?—A. Traffic Manager Mifka.

Q. He was general traffic manager?—A. He was the traffic manager of the San Francisco office. He was in full charge of it for 24 hours a day.

Q. And he had under him a day manager and also Mr. Gilbert, the night manager?—A. Well, in the daytime he had a number of assistants, but he was the only one that held the title of traffic manager during the day tour. There were 3 traffic managers—1 day, 1 night, and 1 late night.

Q. What were Mr. Gilbert's duties?—A. Well, they are rather difficult for me to describe.

Q. I do not mean to go into detail.—A. He had an assistant, the chief operator, for example, in charge of the automatic department, and likewise a man with a similar title in charge of the Morse department, and another one, a lady, with that title in charge of the telephone department, and another in charge of the service department; and he had a wire chief and a repeater chief under him.

Q. He had to do mainly with the mechanical operation of your branch, did he not?—A. No; it would not be "mainly." It would be more a general supervision, to see that the traffic moved promptly.

Q. I think you must have misunderstood my question. He had to do with the traffic operations, did he not?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. That is to say, when a message came in at night he had responsibility to see that the message got out promptly to the party to whom it was consigned?—A. Well, let us put it this way: He was in charge of the entire office, and he had about 150 people working under him.

Q. You put it that way once before; but I am trying to find out what the 150 did.

Mr. LINFORTH. Just a moment, Mr. President. We protest against counsel interrupting the witness in the middle of an answer when the answer is responsive.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes; I will not interrupt, either, when the answer is responsive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Some latitude must be allowed on cross-examination.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. What did he do with these people?—A. What did Mr. Gilbert do?

Q. Yes; that is what I asked you. What did he do?—A. Well, he did not do anything. He was in charge of the office. The organization was such that all of these men knew where to report in their respective departments. They reported to their department head.

Q. What I am trying to find out is, what did he direct these people to do?—A. I do not know just exactly what question you are asking me. I do not know how to answer that. I can tell you what his duties were.

Q. All right; tell me those. Tell me what his duties were.—A. He went around to the different departments, if he did his job correctly, and talked to his assistant chief operator, and observed generally to see that all of the employees were attending to their work, and naturally he must have frequently scrutinized the pile of telegrams to see that they were moving promptly; and, if they were not, to go to the assistants to see why they were not.

Q. The question I asked you a moment ago was if he did not have to do with keeping the messages properly moving to the parties to whom they were respectively directed?—A. Yes; he was in charge of that, to see that all—

Q. I am asking you a specific question. That was part of his duties, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. What were his other duties?—A. That was practically all.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I send a question to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee propounds an interrogatory, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. What salary did Mr. Gilbert receive from the telegraph company?

The WITNESS. $255 a month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further questions? If not, the witness will be excused. Summon the next witness.

EXAMINATION OF GEORGE N. EDWARDS

Mr. LINFORTH. Please call Mr. Edwards.

George N. Edwards, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Edwards, you also have been confined in the hospital since you reached Washington?—A. I have.

Q. Can you hear me distinctly? I ask you that because I understood your operation in the hospital was on the ear.—A. Yes; I can.

Q. If you do not hear me distinctly, do not hesitate to say so. What is your occupation and where is your residence?—A. Where is my what?

Q. Residence.—A. My occupation is fruit and vegetable canner. My residence is Berkeley, Calif.

Q. Were you the receiver in the Golden State Asparagus case, so called?—A. I was.

Q. How did you become receiver in that matter? Will you briefly state?—A. I was selected by the committee—creditors' committee—to take charge of the Golden State affairs, and after I had been there about 3 or 4 days some complications arose regarding the bank that held collateral, warehousemen's receipts secured by a certain amount of collateral, also a second mortgage covering the balance of the property.

Q. Mr. Edwards, may I be pardoned for interrupting? I just want at this time to ask by whom were you selected as receiver?—A. By Judge Louderback.

Q. At whose recommendation were you selected?—A. The American Can Co.

Q. The American Can Co., the plaintiff in the case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Represented by what firm?—A. Lawyers?

Q. Yes.—A. Chickering & Gregory.

Q. Before you were appointed, did the American Can Co. and its representatives make any arrangement with you as to what your compensation should be?—A. They did.

Q. What, per month, was that arrangement?—A. $1,000.

Q. And you were their appointee as receiver?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at their request Judge Louderback appointed you; is that right?—A. Yes, sir; I understand so.

Q. Did you talk with Judge Louderback as to who you should have as your attorney?—A. No.

Q. Let me repeat my question, Mr. Edwards, in case you did not get it. What talk, if any, did you have with Judge Louderback as to who should be the attorney for you as receiver?—A. Well, I will have to go back in order to explain it a little bit.

Q. Will you do it, but do it briefly?—A. Well, when they applied out there for a receivership, the judge said that we could have either the attorney or the receivership, and we decided—the attorneys decided—on the receivership. Then the judge said that he would appoint an attorney, that he would not appoint any particular one, but he would give us a list of attorneys, would give me a list of attorneys, and I could choose one from them. So the next day I went out there to see the judge in his chambers, and he asked me, I believe, if I had any particular preference, and I said no, and he gave me the name of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel. I might qualify that by saying that I did not know that I would have to take the matter up with Mr. Fox as to who would be a competent attorney to handle the matter, so he gave me the name of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel and told me if they were not satisfactory to come back and he would give me another one. So I took that name down to Mr. Fox, of Chickering & Gregory, and he told me that he did not think we could have any better firm acting.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, may I have the latter part of the answer read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporter will read.
The Official Reporter read as follows:

So the next day I went out there to see the judge in his chambers, and he asked me, I believe, if I had any particular preference, and I said no, and he gave me the name of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel. I might qualify that by saying that I did not know that I would have to take the matter up with Mr. Fox as to who would be a competent attorney to handle the matter, so he gave me the name of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, and told me if they were not satisfactory to come back and he would give me another one. So I took that name down to Mr. Fox, of Chickering & Gregory, and he told me that he did not think we could have any better firm acting.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Did you then go to Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, after getting that opinion from your own lawyer?—A. I did.

Q. Did you employ them as your counsel?—A. I did.

Q. Were they your counsel during the entire receivership?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State in a few words what assistance or cooperation you got from them, and whether it was satisfactory.—

A. Well, I could not state in a very few words the assistance I got from them. I got their whole-hearted cooperation. For the first 6 or 8 months I was in communication with them every day, I would say. From my point of view I considered them a very efficient and competent firm.

Q. When it came to the question of an application for fees for yourself and for the attorneys, was that taken up by you gentlemen with Chickering & Gregory, the attorneys for the American Can Co., the plaintiff in the suit?—A. It was.

Q. Did they make any objection to the amount of the fees to either one of you?—A. No.

Mr. LINFORTH. Take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. BROWNING:

Q. Mr. Edwards, if I understand you correctly, when you were appointed receiver, Judge Louderback told you at that time he would give you a list of attorneys from which you could choose one. Is that correct?—A. Well, I would not say "give me a list." I think there were two attorneys and myself there; and I just understood that it was not just going to be any individual attorney that he would pick out; it would be a number of ones we could choose from. Whether he actually told me he would give me a list or not I do not know.

Q. In other words, you thought you were going to have a number of legal firms submitted to you to choose from?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you actually came back to get the designation of your attorney, how many did he give you?—A. One.

Q. Who was that?—A. Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel.

Q. And you went back to Mr. Fox and asked him whether they would do?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at that time Mr. Fox told you that was about as good as you could do, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, he said to you at that time that that was as good as the judge would give you?—A. No; he did not say it in that way. He said that he did not know a better firm of attorneys in San Francisco—I think those were his exact words—to handle a case of this character.

Q. When did you pay Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel their fee in this case?—A. I have never paid them the entire amount.

Q. How much have you paid them?—A. Up to date?

Q. Yes.—A. $5,000.

Q. When did you pay that?—A. Oh, at different times. I do not think I paid them over $500 at any one time. As I had surplus funds on hand, I would give them a check for $500.

Q. Do you know the dates of those checks?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you any way of finding out what it is?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you do it today?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why have you not paid all of the fee in that case?—A. I have not had the funds available for that purpose.

Q. Did you have any money in the estate at all at the time this fee was allowed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why was it not paid at that time?—A. Well, we had quite a few obligations outstanding which I created, and I did not want to take that out until after we had taken care of these other outstanding obligations.

Q. Has the receivership run at a profit or at a loss?—A. Up to date?

Q. Yes.—A. I would say it broke about even.

Q. Have the creditors gotten anything?—A. The secured creditors have.

Q. Have the general creditors gotten anything?—A. You mean the unsecured creditors?

Q. Yes.—A. The unsecured creditors have not.

Q. How much obligation do you owe to these unsecured creditors?—A. About $300,000.

Q. Did the secured creditors get their money out of the sale of property on which they had the security?—A. Some of them did and some of them did not.

Q. How much of them did not, but were paid from the funds of the operation?—A. Offhand, I would say about $50,000.

Q. Can you approximate the date on which these fees were paid to Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel?—A. One of the first payments was made shortly after the court allowed it. The last one I made was just before I left for the East.

Q. How much was the last one you paid?—A. $500.

Q. How much was the first one you paid?—A. I am not sure, but I think it was $500. It may have been a thousand.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. That is all.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington propounds an interrogatory, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. What salary or income did you receive per month previous to your appointment as receiver?

The WITNESS. $750 a month.

Mr. DILL. I submit another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. How much money were you paid?

The WITNESS. By whom?

Mr. DILL. By the receiver, of course.

By Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. I think the member of the court means as receiver, out of the estate in which you have served.—A. I have been paid $750 a month since I have been acting.

Q. How many months have you served?—A. Since September 1930.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I understood the witness to say that he would receive a thousand dollars a month as receiver. My question was how much he was receiving in his own private business previous to his appointment. I do not know that he understood my question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that explanation of the interrogatory, let the witness answer, if he can.

The WITNESS. I was employed by the Hunt Bros. Packing Co. I had been running my own business from 1916 to 1926. I sold out my business to the Hunt Bros. Packing Co. in 1926. They wanted me to stay with them, and I was simply spending my spare time around there. I did not have any particular job, and they paid me $750 per month as a sort of retainer. In addition to that, I had my own income of probably $15,000 a year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further questions to be asked the witness?

Redirect examination by Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. You said that during the receivership you paid off the secured creditors. How much did you pay them off, in round numbers?—A. About $300,000.

Q. I understood you to say that your attorneys told you that you could not get a better firm than Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel for this particular work. Was that the reason why you did not go back to the judge to get any other name?—A. It was.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. I do not think his reason that he would want to give for his action at that time would be competent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think it does any harm. Let it stand in the record.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. One further question: Did you give to Judge Louderback, or to anyone else, any part or portion of the fees that you have received as receiver in this matter?—A. I did not.

Mr. LINFORTH. I have no further questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further questions on the part of the managers of the House, the witness will be excused. Let the next witness be summoned.

STIPULATED TESTIMONY OF MAX THELEN

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, under stipulation entered into by opposing counsel, we now read the testimony of the witness Max Thelen, given at the preliminary hearings in San Francisco in September 1932.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do the managers upon the part of the House agree to this stipulation?

Mr. Manager BROWNING. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; then the testimony will be read.

Mr. HANLEY read the testimony given by Max Thelen at the hearing before the special committee of the House of Representatives at San Francisco, Calif., September 6 to September 12, 1932, as follows:

Max Thelen, being first duly sworn by the Chair, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. LA GUARDIA:

Q. Your name?—A. Max Thelen.

Q. You are an attorney and counselor at law?—A. Yes.

Q. Practicing in the State of California?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is your office, Mr. Thelen?—A. It is in the Balfour Building on California Street, corner of California and Sansome.

Q. Where is your residence?—A. Berkeley.

Q. You are familiar with certain facts of the Russell-Colvin Co. matter?—A. I am only familiar with certain facts. My firm was the attorney for the plaintiff, and my partner, Mr. Marrin, did most of the detail work, but I am familiar with certain facts of what took place.

Q. In the early stages of these proceedings did you have occasion to confer with Judge Louderback?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you make memorandums of these conferences?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. Do you require your memorandums to refresh your memory?—A. Yes; because this is very sudden. I did not realize until just an hour or two ago that I was to be called, and I thought it wise to bring this memoranda along so that my recollection might be refreshed.

Q. When were these memorandums made?—A. On the same day on which these various transactions took place.

Q. Immediately thereafter?—A. Well, there might be an hour or two intervening; just a short time.

Q. And these memorandums contained what you at that time set down as your recollection of what transpired?—A. That is correct.

Q. May I ask you to look at those memorandums to refresh your memory?

[Witness complies.]

A. I have them here.

Q. Now, by refreshing your memory, will you be good enough to relate in your own way just what transpired between you and others in the matter of the application for a receivership in equity for the firm of Russell-Colvin & Co. with Judge Louderback around the 11th of March 1930, and thereabouts?—A. The complaint in this case was filed on March 11, 1930, by my firm. We then went to the room of Judge Louderback's secretary, and arrangements were made for a conference with him at 11 o'clock. At that time—

Mr. HANLEY (interrupting). Mr. Thelen, so that the chairman will get it, the records on file show it was the 10th.

A. There were several complaints filed, Mr. Hanley.

Mr. HANLEY. All right, let's get no. 1 file.

A. We went to Judge Louderback's office at 11 o'clock. At that time there went into his office Mr. Marrin, my partner; Mr. Francis Brown; Mr. Guy Colvin; Mr. Berlinger; and Mr. Strong, of Hood & Strong; and Mr. Lloyd Dinkelspiel.

We requested—that is, the attorneys for the plaintiff—requested the appointment of Mr. Addison G. Strong as receiver, and that request was concurred in by the other counsel who were present. Mr. Strong had been particularly familiar with the affairs of the stock exchange, and had been familiar with the affairs of this particular concern, and we thought that he was well qualified to act as receiver.

Judge Louderback agreed to appoint Mr. Strong as receiver on his filing of bond in the sum of $50,000, and also the plaintiff's filing of the bond in the sum of $50,000 to protect any creditors who might be injured by the appointment of a receiver. My memorandum of March 11 then contained these remarks:

"Judge Louderback emphasizes the proposition that Mr. Strong will be an officer of the court and that he must confer with the judge in the matter of the appointment of his attorney. The judge asked Mr. Strong whether he had selected any attorney, and particularly whether he had selected any of the attorneys who were there present in the room. Mr. Strong said no, that he had not. Judge Louderback also insisted on the dismissal of case no. 2594, which had preceded case no. 2595, before the receiver should be appointed in the latter case. After leaving Judge Louderback's courtroom, the attorneys conferred, and it seemed that it would be impossible to raise a bond of $50,000 for the plaintiff, so the attorneys returned to Judge Louderback's chambers and he thereupon consented to reduce the amount of the plaintiff's bond to $10,000."

And by this time it was 12:30. The next memorandum I have is dated March 13. It recites that about 9:20, Miss Berger, who was Judge Louderback's secretary, phoned that the judge would agree to see either Mr. Marrin or myself at 12 o'clock, and it developed later that a similar message had been sent to Mr. Frank Brown, so the three of us called on the judge at 12 o'clock and he told us—and I am referring constantly to my memorandum because I think that would be far more satisfactory. I think you understand now that I haven't the recollection of what took place several years ago. My memorandum states:

"The judge told us that he was dissatisfied with the attitude of Mr. Strong, and that he had failed to keep an engagement to return to see him the afternoon before, and that instead of that, a member of the Heller firm had called upon the judge, and then said that he regarded Mr. Strong's signature to a petition to have the Heller firm appointed as his attorney as an attempt to force the judge's hand, and thereupon the judge said that he had suggested to the receiver the possible appointment of other counsel besides the firm of Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, or the firm of Sullivan, Sullivan & Theodore J. Roche, but that the receiver did not regard either of those suggestions favorably."

My memorandum says:

"The judge did not say anything of having mentioned to the receiver the name of Douglas Short or of Keyes & Erskine. The judge said that he had decided that he would not go along with Mr. Strong as receiver, but he had asked him to come back at 12:45, at which time he would permit him to sign a resignation which the judge had already prepared. The judge said that if Mr. Strong did not sign that, he would then immediately make an order removing Strong as receiver, and that he would serve a certified copy thereof on the receiver. The judge further said that he had given careful consideration to the selection of some other man as receiver whose ability and standing would be above reproach, and that there had occurred to him the name of H. B. Hunter, who was connected with the firm of William Cavalier & Co. The judge said that Mr. Hunter was a juror in his court and also that he had been recommended to him by Mr. Sidney L. Schwartz, who was the former president of the San Francisco Stock Exchange. The judge asked us whether we knew anything against Mr. Hunter. He gave us until 4 o'clock to make inquiries and advise him, if we so desired, concerning Mr. Hunter. We all three took the position that if any error had been committed, that it was not an error on Mr. Strong's part."

And I am again quoting from my memorandum:

"Mr. Brown pleaded for a reconsideration of the judge's decision as to Mr. Strong, but the judge would not change his mind. He said that if Mr. Strong was retained and the judge did not permit the Heller firm to be his attorneys, it would put the judge in an embarrassing position, and he said that the only way to handle the matter is to cut the Gordian knot by getting rid of Strong as receiver. The judge further said that it would be entirely agreeable to him or this firm (meaning my firm, Thelen & Marrin) to dismiss the pending proceeding, thereby getting rid of the entire matter, but our firm of course could not consent to such action for the reason that we knew that in the interest of the creditors and the partnership a receiver was necessary, and so we could not dismiss the proceeding. Judge Louderback further said that a number of names had been suggested to him for receiver and that two parties who had consulted him in the corridor had suggested the appointment of William A. Sherman, former master of the Masonic lodge in San Francisco, but the judge added he could not think of appointing Mr. Sherman for the reason that his attorneys are Joseph McEnerney and Samuel Shortridge, Jr. The judge further said that he would ask Mr. Hunter, if he decided to invite him to serve, whether any attorney had spoken to him about the matter, and that he would then let him go his own way. He further said that if Mr. Strong resigned, he would withhold notice of the action until 4 o'clock. At that time he might announce the appointment of H. B. Hunter, but that if Mr. Strong refused to resign and the judge made an order removing him, he would file such order promptly."

At 12:45 we three—that is, my partner, Mr. Marrin, Mr. Brown, and myself—left the judge with the understanding that we might communicate to him anything which we desired to say concerning Mr. Hunter prior to 4 o'clock, but as we went out we noted Mr. Strong in the anteroom, apparently awaiting his turn.

My next memorandum is likewise dated March 13, 1930, and states:

"About 1:40 that afternoon Miss Berger, Judge Louderback's secretary, phoned while I was out of the office asking that we call her about 3 o'clock, and shortly after 3 o'clock I came into the office and Miss Berger put me on Judge Louderback's phone. The judge said that he wanted me to know that Mr. Strong had first attempted to straighten out the situation and had admitted that he had done wrong, but (this is the judge's language to me) after that he did not intend to resign, and had been told by his attorneys not to resign. The judge said that Mr. Strong had stated that he considers that he owes allegiance to his attorneys and not to the court."

This action is what the judge told me. My memorandum continues—of course this is hearsay—

"The judge thereupon made and filled his order discharging him."

This is a matter that is not within my personal knowledge. Now Mr. LaGuardia, those are my only memorandums that brought on the initiation of this matter. After that, my partner, Mr. Marrin, did practically all the work that was done by our firm. But I do want to make one comment that bears on the angle of the fees of the receiver and of counsel for the receiver. I heard testimony here this afternoon that all the attorneys had agreed to those fees, and I want to make it perfectly clear that the firm of Thelen & Marrin never did agree to any fees that were requested by the receiver or his counsel or to the fees that were finally allowed by the judge. I want the record to be perfectly clear that this firm made no such agreement. I know other facts in connection with the fixing of the fees, but I don't know whether you are interested, so I have not mentioned them.

Q. You state that you did not consent to the fees asked?—A. We did not consent to any fees asked for by the receiver or by his counsel, and I can expand on that if you desire.

Q. Well now, Mr. Thelen, have you made careful inquiry as to the amount of work that was required to liquidate this partnership?—A. Well, I am sorry that I have not. My partner was very much more familiar with the affairs of the entire liquidation, and he would probably know about it, but as I say, I was in on the beginning, then he did the rest, and I just came in later toward the end.

Q. Just what is it you would like to add concerning these fees?—A. What I would like to add is this, in exemplification of the comment I made, that we had never agreed to those fees. Shortly before the matter of the fees came before the court, our firm was, of course, advised as to the demands which would be made or the requests which would be made by the receiver and by his counsel, and my partner came into the room to discuss what position our firm should take in connection with that matter. Mr. Marrin expressed the opinion that the fees that were being asked were extremely high, and he was bothered to know as to whether this firm owed an obligation to contest those fees. We analyzed the situation and came to this conclusion, as far as one of our clients, the plaintiff Olmstead, is concerned, that he was to get practically everything for which he had asked. His securities were going to be returned to him, so that he had practically no interest in the question of the amount of the fees.

We had another client who was in a different position and who did have an interest. He had a large claim. I think it was at least partly not secured, and we decided that the right thing to do was to ask that client as to what position we should take in connection with the fees that were being asked for the receiver and his counsel, and we did so and pointed out to him—that is, my partner did this—that in case we should be overruled by the court and it should be necessary finally to appeal to the next higher court considerable expense would be involved, and finally our client told us that it would not be necessary for us to take any position in opposition to those fees.

Now, furthermore, later on, when the question of fees came before the court, there were many conferences in the corridor, about which I heard some reference this afternoon, and I want to make it perfectly clear that I never agreed, either in the conferences or in this court room, to the fees that were finally fixed for the receiver and his counsel.

I have no legal interest in the matter, but I make that statement here because I considered it extremely high. I want the record to be perfectly clear on that subject.

Q. When Judge Louderback suggested to you to dismiss the petition, a previous petition had already been dismissed in this matter, had it not, Mr. Thelen?—A. Yes. There had been a former complaint, which I think had been then dismissed. In any event, before our receiver was finally appointed and qualified I believe that prior complaint was dismissed.

Q. So that the only matter before the court was the application then pending in which Mr. Strong had been appointed receiver and was officially receiver at that time?—A. That is correct.

Q. The partnership had already been suspended from the San Francisco Stock Exchange?—A. Yes; that had been done before our complaint was filed.

Q. That was common knowledge?—A. Yes; the newspapers were full of it.

Q. So that a compliance with the request of Judge Louderback to dismiss your petition, the only petition then pending, in order to eliminate an unpleasant situation, would have caused a great deal of confusion and loss to some of the creditors, would it not?—A. I did not mean to say that Judge Louderback had requested that we dismiss the complaint, but he suggested that if we dismiss the complaint the entire matter would be solvable. I don't believe he made the direct request that we dismiss it.

Q. You were in the judge's chambers, were you not?—A. That is correct.

Q. And there were several attorneys before the judge of the court?—A. That is correct.

Q. With due deference to the judge in chambers, the same as on the bench. Attorneys always so conduct themselves, do they not?—A. Yes.

Q. So that the hint was thrown out by the judge that if the complaint were dismissed it would solve all of this trouble concerning the receiver?—A. My memorandum says:

"The judge said it would be entirely agreeable to him if this firm should dismiss the pending proceeding, thereby getting rid of the entire matter."

Q. And leaving the creditors, and leaving the situation at the mercy of the partners or some of the creditors, with the firm suspended from the stock exchange, and this information already having gone out?

Mr. HANLEY. That is argumentative. He has stated what was said.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I think you are right.

Cross-examination by Mr. HANLEY:

Q. Mr. Thelen, on the desk of the chairman is the original petition. It shows the filing date as of the 10th day of March.—A. There may be an error of a day there, Mr. Hanley.

Q. Were you present when the papers were both filed?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they filed—the number of this case is 2595-L—"L" meaning Judge Louderback—and the former case that was dismissed was 2594-S—"S" meaning Judge St. Sure. They were filed simultaneously, were they?—A. I think that is correct.

Mr. HANLEY. I think that is all.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair suggest to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] in the absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that it might be well to move a 10-minute recess.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess for 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess for 10 minutes. At the conclusion of the recess the Senate, sitting as a court, reassembled.

EXAMINATION OF SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE, JR.

Mr. LINFORTH. Please call Mr. Shortridge.

Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr., having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Will you please state your name, occupation, and residence?—A. Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr., attorney at law, Menlo Park, Calif.

Q. Are you a son of the former Senator of the same name from California?—A. I am; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the respondent, Judge Louderback?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. About 10 years.

Q. And what has been the extent of your acquaintance with him?—A. Very casual.

Q. During the time that he was judge of the State court during a term of 8 years, were you appointed to any office by him?—A. I was not.

Q. During the time he has been Federal judge, covering a period of 5 years, did you receive any appointments from him?—A. Yes, sir; two.

Q. Do two appointments cover your entire appointments during the 5 years that he has been Federal judge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were those two cases?—A. H. G. Lane & Co. and the Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association.

Q. In either one, did he fix the amount of your compensation?—A. He did not in the Lane case, but he did in the Lumbermen's case.

Q. Did he receive any part or portion of any compensation awarded to you in either one of those cases?—A. He did not.

Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. What other receivership matters, Mr. Shortridge, have you had in the Federal court?

Mr. LINFORTH. One minute. We object to the question as not cross-examination and utterly immaterial to this inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that is correct. The objection is sustained.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. Mr. President, do I understand that I will not be permitted to go into anything except these two cases with this man to show his relationship with the Federal court?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair would be bound to hold that it would not be proper cross-examination in connection with the evidence that has already been brought out by the counsel for the respondent.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. When he is presented as a witness, I understand that we have a right to test his relationship to the Federal court when that is the question involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Precisely; but—

Mr. LINFORTH. May I add a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just a second. The Chair believes that the ruling is correct.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. Very well, sir.

By Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. What was your fee in the H. G. Lane case?—A. $10,000.

Q. When did you get that fee—what date?—A. Along in the spring of 1929.

Q. Do you know what month?—A. It was either May or June, I believe. I am not positive.

Q. Did this fee go into your firm?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you put it?—A. In the bank.

Q. Have you a safe-deposit box?—A. I have; yes.

Q. Did any of it go into that?—A. No, sir.

Q. In the Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association case there was an appeal taken to the circuit court on your appointment as receiver, was there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The circuit court reversed the respondent in his holding that you were rightful receiver, and sent the case back to be turned over to the State commissioner, did it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And an order was made by the respondent to turn the estate back to the Commissioner of Insurance for the State of California?—A. It was.

Q. Do you recall the provision in that matter—

Mr. LINFORTH. Just one moment, may it please the Presiding Officer. We submit that this is not cross-examination in any sense of the word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that this may have to do with testing the credibility of the witness; and counsel can go into that matter in any fiduciary relationship the witness has had, except that it must be connected with this respondent, as the Chair understands the law.

As the questions were asked by counsel for respondent, and as the Chair understands the law to be, the managers for the House may go into any question connected with this witness's relation with the respondent in connection with these receiverships; but so far as receiverships are concerned with which this respondent has nothing to do, and clear outside of the record, the Chair has ruled on that question. Therefore the objection will be overruled.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, my main thought in making the objection was in the interest of time, as I am trying to conclude today, if possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is interested in that suggestion also, and the Chair is satisfied that counsel for the respondent will do the best possible to save time.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. Mr. President, the suggestion comes rather late from counsel.

By Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. You recall the provision in the order that it will be turned over only on condition that there would be no appeal taken from the fees awarded counsel?—A. I never saw the order.

Q. But you do know that is in the order, do you not?—A. I have been so advised since then.

Q. Appeal was taken from the allowance of fees, was it not?—A. It was.

Q. How much in fees did Judge Louderback allow to you in the Lumbermen's Reciprocal case?—A. Six thousand dollars.

Q. How much to your counsel?—A. Six thousand dollars.

Q. That was paid by you as receiver out of the assets of this concern?—A. It was.

Q. Since that time an order has been made on you, because of the partial reversal of that allowance on the second appeal, to pay a portion of the fee back, has it not?—A. I have seen something about it in the newspapers, but I have had no formal order served on me.

Q. Have you been made acquainted with the opinion that was rendered last September reversing, partially at least, the order of respondent in allowing fees?—A. I read it in the advance reports.

Q. It does what?—A. I read the opinion in the advance reports.

Q. You know that it requires a portion to be paid back?—A. So I understand.

Q. You have not returned that fee, have you?—A. I have not been called upon to do so. When I am called upon I will do so, naturally.

Q. Do you mean to say the mandate has not come down from the circuit court?—A. The last I heard of it was about 2 months ago, when I was home very ill, and I read something about it in one of the newspapers, that Mr. Guereña, the attorney for the insurance commissioner, was getting out some writ in the State supreme court.

Q. Do you not know that, at the solicitation of your counsel in that case, the respondent has made an order, since that mandate came down from the court of appeals, calling for that to be paid within 30 days from that order which he made, and that 30 days has long since expired, has it not?—A. It has; yes.

Q. What part of your fee were you asked to refund?—A. One half.

Q. And how much of your expenses?—A. You mean in percentage?

Q. In amount.—A. I think it amounted to around $2,000, I believe it was.

Q. How long have you known W. S. Leake?—A. He once told me that he first saw me when I was 2 days old.

Q. In fact, you have known him practically all your life?—A. Yes.

Q. You have been a patient of his?—A. In a way.

Q. What do you mean by "in a way"?—A. My mother has been a semi-invalid for 25 years. Mr. Leake has treated her for about 10 or 12 years. She has been in a very nervous condition, nervous prostration, and I would go to see Mr. Leake, consulting him about my mother's health, and—I guess this is off the record—but she used to ask him to have me treated, to try to have me stop smoking cigarettes.

Q. Is that the only trouble you have ever been treated for?—A. By him; yes.

Q. Did you pay him for that?—A. Yes; but he was not successful.

Q. How much money have you paid Mr. Leake for that?—A. For that?

Q. Yes.—A. Nothing.

Q. How much money have you given him over this course of years that he has been treating either you or your mother?—A. Oh, maybe $1,500.

Q. Did you pay him in cash or by check?—A. Once or twice by check, and then my mother would give me envelopes to give to him; it may have been cash in them, or it may have been a check—one of my mother's checks.

Q. But you knew it was compensation to him?—A. It was; yes.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. I believe that is all.

Mr. LINFORTH. Just one question, with your permission, Mr. President.

Redirect examination by Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. When the fee for $10,000 was allowed to you in the Lane case, what judge allowed it?—A. Referee in Bankruptcy T. J. Sheridan, sitting as a special master in equity, fixed the fee.

Mr. LINFORTH. No further question.

Recross-examination by Mr. BROWNING:

Q. That was under an appointment, though, made by Judge Louderback?—A. It was.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will be excused. The witness retired from the stand.

EXAMINATION OF HARRY L. FOUTS (RECALLED)

Mr. LINFORTH. Call Harry L. Fouts.

Harry L. Fouts, heretofore sworn as a witness, was recalled and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Fouts, you have already testified that you are one of the deputy clerks in the ninth circuit, northern district of California?—A. That is correct.

Q. Have you examined the records to ascertain, during the 5 years that Judge Louderback has been a judge of that department, in how many cases he has appointed receivers?—A. In 10 equity cases, 16 bankruptcy cases.

Q. Have you examined the records for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not, prior to the filing in the Russell-Colvin case, there was ever a double filing made before?—A. I have.

Q. How far back did you examine the records?—A. I went back to the beginning of the equity dockets. That was about 1912.

Q. Did you find any such situation except in this one case?—A. This is the only instance it has ever been done.

Mr. LINFORTH. Take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Have you found any double filing in bankruptcy cases?—A. No; I have not.

Q. You do not find any of the number of gentlemen who are referred to in connection with receivership or attorneyship in any but the five cases with which you are familiar, the ones to which the inquiries are being directed?—A. No; I do not believe they are connected with any of the other cases.

Q. What is the largest amount, either as a fee for attorney or as a fee for receiver, you found in the other equity cases?

Mr. LINFORTH. We object to that as not being cross-examination in any sense of the word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection will be overruled. Answer the question.

The WITNESS. The largest amount I know of for any receiver amounted to $70,000.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. What case was that?—A. That was in the receivership of the Western Pacific Railroad Co.

Q. Was that a case in which Judge Louderback appointed the receiver?—A. No; that was back in 1915 or 1916.

Q. That was with reference to a Pacific railroad company, was it not?—A. With reference to what?

Q. A receivership with reference to a Pacific railway company?—A. Western Pacific Railway Co.; yes.

Q. Have you a list of the 10 cases as to which you have examined the record concerning which Judge Louderback appointed receivers or attorneys?—A. I can produce a list of those cases. I have not it with me.

Q. Perhaps this would refresh your memory: Pioneer Fruit case, Fageol Motors case, Lumbermen's case, Asparagus case, Sempel-Cooley case, the Prudential case, the Russell-Colvin case, and the Sonora case. Do you remember the other cases?—A. I think three of those cases you mentioned are bankruptcy cases, and not equity.

Q. They were all instituted in equity cases, were they not?—A. No; that is not true. The Sonora case and the Sempel-Cooley case were both bankruptcy in the original filing. I think one other.

Q. Will you get a list of the cases to which you refer?—A. Yes; I can produce that.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further questions? If not, the witness will be excused.

The witness retired from the stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are counsel prepared to proceed further?

Mr. LINFORTH. I desire to ask the witness a question or two in redirect examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the witness be recalled.

EXAMINATION OF HARRY L. FOUTS (RECALLED)

Harry L. Fouts, having been heretofore duly sworn, was recalled and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Fouts, opposing counsel asked you with reference to amounts allowed in receivership cases. Are you familiar with the case of the First National Bank of Medford against the Stewart Fruit Co.?—A. Yes; I am.

Q. Did you examine the record in that case?—A. I did.

Q. In that case, how much were the assets?—A. I think it is a little over a million dollars.

Q. A million ninety-four thousand; is that right?—A. That is about it.

Q. Who were the receivers in that case; do you recall?—A. E. G. Potter.

Q. How much was allowed as receiver's fees in that case?—A. If I remember right, it is about $48,000.

Q. Who were the attorneys for the receiver in that case, if you recall?—A. I think it is Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro.

Q. Merely to refresh your memory, was it Knight, Boland & Christen?—A. Yes; Knight, Boland & Christen.

Q. How much were the fees allowed to them in that case, which concerned approximately a million ninety-four thousand dollars?—A. I do not recall the exact amount now.

Q. In round numbers?—A. I think it is around forty to forty-five thousand dollars, and besides that, they were allowed $75 for every day in court, plus 10 percent of all collections made.

Q. Does it refresh your memory if I call your attention to a record where the aggregate fees were $48,606?—A. I know that it is very nearly that.

Q. That matter was not before Judge Louderback, was it?—A. No; those fees were allowed by both Judge St. Sure and Judge Kerrigan.

Mr. LINFORTH. No further questions.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, it is understood that this witness is excused, with the privilege on our part of calling him tomorrow when he shall have gotten data.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. The witness will be excused, subject to being recalled tomorrow.

WITNESS MALING—SERVICE OF SUBPENA

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate, sitting as a court, a communication from the Sergeant at Arms, which was read, as follows:

[Chesley W. Jurney, Sergeant at Arms; J. Mark Trice, Deputy Sergeant at Arms and Storekeeper]

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
OFFICE OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS,
May 20, 1933.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,
Vice President and President of the Senate,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: There is attached hereto a subpoena for Walter G. Malting, of San Francisco, Calif., which was ordered by the Senate on May 18, 1933. The subpoena has been duly served and return made according to law.

Respectfully,

(Signed) CHESLEY W. JUNEY,
Sergeant at Arms.

EXAMINATION OF WALTER G. MALING

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, we should like to call Mr. Walter G. Malting.

Walter Malting, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Would you please state your name, your residence, and your occupation?—A. Walter G. Malting, Mill Valley, Calif.; clerk of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California.

Q. How long, Mr. Malting, have you been clerk of that court?—A. Since 1912.

Q. Continuously?—A. Continuously.

Q. Have you examined the records to determine when, if at all, before the filing of the two complaints in the Russell-Colvin case such a condition ever existed before—that is, of two filings being made?—A. I have examined the records.

Q. And did you find any?—A. I did not find one; I found no such thing.

Q. How far back did you examine?—A. I went back carefully about 4 or 5 years; and then I discussed this with my assistants, who had been there for a long time, and a number of us looked through the various dockets quite quickly, but we found no such case; and we were all satisfied, from our knowledge of the business there, that no such situation had existed before.

Q. Do you know Mr. Marrin, the attorney of the firm of Thelen & Marrin?—A. I do

Q. Did you know him at the time of the filing of the two complaints or the one complaint, the first one in the Russell-Colvin matter?—A. Well, I knew him slightly. I did not know him as well as I do some of the other counsel.

Q. Upon the filing of the first complaint in that matter, which the record here shows went to Judge St. Sure's department, did you then or at any other time tell him that no judge present would act for Judge St. Sure in such a matter during his absence?—A. I have no recollection of it, and I am satisfied that he is mistaken if he thinks I said that. He must have misunderstood me, because I never would have made such a statement to any counsel to that question or answer it in that way. I have never undertaken to say what any judge would do in the matter of making an order.

Q. According to your best recollection, no such conversation took place?—A. I am satisfied that if we had a conversation, he misunderstood my statement, because I never would have said that.

Mr. LINFORTH. Take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. In checking over these equity cases, did you make a note of any of them where one judge acted for another in his absence?—A. Yes; I did note that. I noted that from the time that Judge Louderback was appointed down to the Russell-Colvin case. In those cases I looked particularly to see to whom the case was assigned and who had made the order appointing the receiver.

Q. Well, is it not a fact that each one was appointed receiver by the one to whom it was assigned?—A. From the date that Judge Louderback went on the bench up to the time that the Russell-Colvin case was filed we had only about a dozen or 15 equity receivership cases, and in all those cases the appointment of the receiver was made by the judge to whom the case was assigned. I am speaking about equity receiverships.

Q. How many did they have—how many equity receiverships?—A. I cannot tell you the exact number, but it was about a dozen or 15, I should say. I could check up on that possibly by some data that I have here.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other questions? If not, the witness will be excused.

(The witness thereupon retired from the stand.)

DEPOSITION OF LLOYD ACKERMAN

Mr. LINFORTH. We now read the deposition of Lloyd Ackerman taken by consent in San Francisco.

Mr. HANLEY read the direct examination as appearing in the deposition, as follows:

U.S.S. EXHIBIT N

Lloyd Ackerman, called on behalf of Harold Louderback; sworn. By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Ackerman, what is your profession, please?—A. I am an attorney at law.

Q. And you have been following that profession for a good many years?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. In San Francisco and elsewhere?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you acquainted with Addison G. Strong?—A. Yes; I am.

Q. Did you know him in the month of March 1930?—A. I did.

Q. And prior to that time?—A. I did.

Q. About the 9th of March 1930 did you have a conversation with him about your acting as his attorney in the event that he should be appointed receiver in the Russell-Colvin case, so-called?—A. I did.

Q. Where did you have that conversation?—A. It was at my home.

Q. Where was that, Mr. Ackerman?—A. I live at 3080 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

Q. Can you state when that conversation took place with reference to the time the order was made appointing him a receiver in that matter?—A. I am under the impression it took place the night prior to his application for appointment as receiver.

Q. And by use of the expression that you have just made that you are under the impression, is that your best recollection?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you please state what the conversation was you had with him at that time and place on that subject?—A. Mr. Strong stated that he had been selected by the San Francisco Stock Exchange to act as receiver of Russell-Colvin & Co., and that he anticipated being appointed receiver, I think it was the following day; it may have been possibly the day succeeding the following day; he said he had given the matter some thought with respect to his legal counsel, and was desirous of knowing whether I would be willing to act as his counsel.

Q. What did you say in reply, if anything?—A. I replied that I should like to give the matter some thought; that if he would give me his telephone number, I would call him on the phone that evening—I think it was Tuesday night—and let him know what my decision was. I called him back later and informed him that I would accept the appointment.

Q. Did you subsequently hear from him again on that same subject?—A. I heard from him on the following day.

Q. Was that after his appointment?—A. I think it was prior to his appointment.

Q. So that both of your conversations with him were prior to his appointment?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was the second conversation that you had with him?—A. I think it was on the telephone while I was at my office; he called me up on the telephone.

Q. And what did he say to you, if anything, on the subject of your acting as his attorney in the event of his receiving the appointment?—A. He said that he was in a situation of some embarrassment; that he learned after consultation with the attorneys for the San Francisco Stock Exchange in the morning of the day that he spoke to me—that was subsequent to my conversation with him on the preceding evening—he learned that the counsel for the San Francisco Stock Exchange expected to act as his counsel as receiver, and he felt under obligation to me in the matter, and that it was an awkward situation for him; and I replied that he need not consider me in the matter at all, that I was entirely willing to eliminate myself, and that he should make whatever selection his interests dictated without consideration of any obligation that he might have to me.

Q. Did he say who the attorneys were for the San Francisco Stock Exchange?—A. Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe.

Q. Did he say in that talk with you whether or not he had already been in communication with those lawyers?—A. Yes; he stated he had been in communication with those attorneys prior to his telephone conversation with me. That, of course, was the origin of his information that he was in an awkward position in the matter.

Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

Mr. Manager PERKINS read the cross-examination as appearing in the deposition as follows:

Cross-examination by Mr. PERKINS:

Q. How long had you known Mr. Strong?—A. I should say for 2 years.

Q. Had you ever acted as his attorney?—A. I never did.

Q. Do you know why he first spoke to you about acting as his attorney?—A. I know what he told me, Mr. Perkins; he said that he wished to select counsel who had had experience in stock brokerage law. He selected me because of the fact that he was under the impression that I was expert in that field of the law.

Q. Was he correct in his thought about that?—A. I will leave that to my critics.

Q. Well, you had had a good deal of experience in stock brokerage law, had you?—A. Yes. I have been closely connected with the brokerage business for a period of more than 10 years. A great deal of my practice is in that field.

Q. Are you certain as to whether the second conversation was before or after his appointment as receiver?—A. I am quite certain it was before his appointment.

Q. That was a conversation over the telephone?—A. Yes. I am not sure, Mr. Perkins, I am rather of the recollection now that it was a personal interview. He came to my office. I am quite sure he did.

Q. What was the date of the month of the second conversation?—A. It was either the same day or the day preceding his appearance before Judge Louderback for qualification as receiver.

Q. Can you fix the date in the month?—A. Can you tell me the date of his appointment?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, certain colloquy then appears. Shall I read that, or merely the testimony itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the manager may do as he chooses about that. If he reads the record, that is the important thing for the Senate sitting as a court.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I will read it all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may interrupt the manager, if it is agreeable to the managers on the part of the House and to the counsel for the respondent, let the colloquy go in and be printed without being read. That will be entirely agreeable to the Chair, and it is to be assumed it will be agreeable to the Senate sitting as a court.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Very well.

The matter ordered to be printed in the RECORD from the deposition of Lloyd Ackerman is as follows:

Mr. LINFORTH. I have the date here, Judge, if you would like to know it.

Mr. PERKINS. The date of his appointment was the 11th of March 1930?

Mr. LINFORTH. Yes; it was the 11th of March 1930.

A. And what day of the week was that, Mr. Linforth?

Mr. LINFORTH. I think it was Tuesday, Mr. Ackerman; I am not sure as to that.

Mr. BROWNING. It was.

Mr. Manager PERKINS (continuing the reading):

A. I should say the last conversation to which I have testified took place on the 10th of March, either the 10th or the 11th.

Mr. HANLEY. May I draw the attention of the managers to the fact that Mr. Linforth put the question and the answer was then given by witness? The question appears on the fifth line of the page.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. Linforth made this statement:

Yes; it was the 11th of March 1930.

A. And what day of the week was that, Mr. Linforth?

Then:

Mr. LINFORTH. I think it was Tuesday, Mr. Ackerman; I am not sure as to that.

Mr. BROWNING. It was.

Then the witness continued his answer, as follows:

A. I should say that the last conversation to which I have testified took place on the 10th of March, either the 10th or the 11th.

Mr. PERKINS. Were there any other conversations?

A. Well, there was a conversation subsequent to his appointment in which he told me what had transpired when he appeared before Judge Louderback to qualify as receiver.

Q. What did he say?

Mr. LINFORTH. We object to that as not cross-examination in any sense of the word, and hearsay.

Mr. LINFORTH. I submit that that objection was well taken. What the witness said to somebody else not in our presence is not binding on us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was this objection made at the time the deposition was taken?

Mr. LINFORTH. It was made at the time the deposition was taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to see the question.

(The deposition was handed to the Presiding Officer, who examined it.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the question may be answered as in the deposition. It is not particularly vital.

Mr. Manager PERKINS (reading):

A. He said that he had offered the name of Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe as his counsel, and that that firm was not satisfactory to Judge Louderback; that he thereupon offered my name, and my name was not satisfactory either; and that thereupon Judge Louderback had, I think he said, revoked his appointment, or declined to confirm it.

Mr. PERKINS. That is all.

EXAMINATION OF LLOYD A. LUNDSTROM

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, we will call Lloyd A. Lundstrom as our next witness.

Lloyd A. Lundstrom, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Will you please state your residence and your occupation?—A. I live in Oakland, Calif., and am manager for the Fageol Motor Co.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, we cannot hear either counsel or the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Senate be in order, and this admonition applies to occupants of the galleries as well. Counsel and the witness will both speak louder.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. May I repeat the question? Please state your name and occupation.—A. Lloyd A. Lundstrom, manager for the Fageol Motor Co., Oakland, Calif., and I live there.

Q. Do you know Mr. G. H. Gilbert?—A. I do.

Q. When did you first make his acquaintance?—A. On February 19, 1932.

Q. At that time where did you make his acquaintance?—

A. In the office of John A. Dinkelspiel, of San Francisco, the attorney.

Q. Did he at that time employ you in the Fageol Motor Co. case receivership?—A. No, sir.

Q. How soon after that did he employ you?—A. On March 11, 1932.

Q. Before his employment of you did you furnish him references?—A. I had a conference with him and he asked me for people and my experience, and I gave him some names.

Q. Subsequently you were employed by him, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity?—A. To manage the sales part of the business, the affairs of the Fageol Motor Co. then being in equity receivership.

Q. During that time were you in daily touch with him after that?—A. I was in constant touch with him.

Q. During the entire receivership, from the time you were so employed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were his hours at the office of the Fageol Motor Co.?—A. From 8 in the morning until 5:30 in the evening.

Q. Do you know what he did in the way of reducing the current expenses of that concern?—A. In dollars and cents, I could not answer.

Q. Can you state generally what changes, if any, he made in the personnel of the company or the employees?—A. He let the president and general manager go, and the sales manager and secretary of the company.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. The receivership let those people go, and we hardly see how it would be competent for this witness to testify that Mr. Gilbert did.

Mr. LINFORTH. The charge made is that this was an incompetent man to be receiver of this particular business.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. Absolutely.

Mr. LINFORTH. And that as receiver he merely took instructions from the president of the company. It is the intention of counsel by these questions to show what matters the receiver did of his own initiative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no objection to the witness' stating what he knows of his own knowledge.

Mr. LINFORTH. That is all I am asking, and I hope he will confine it to what he knows of his own knowledge.

The WITNESS. I know the president and general manager were let go during the equity receivership.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Do you know what the salary of the president was prior to his removal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. $600 a month.

Q. Was anybody put in his place?—A. No; I was employed for that purpose.

Q. And your salary at that time was what?—A. $200 when Mr. Gilbert hired me.

Q. And subsequently increased to what?—A. $400.

Q. At whose suggestion were you employed?—A. I was sent to Mr. Dinkelspiel, Mr. Gilbert's attorney, by Mr. Wainwright, one of the creditors.

Q. Mr. Wainwright was the representative of the bank that was the largest unsecured creditor? Is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the time of your appointment, did you, the receiver, and Mr. Wainwright consult on various matters of policy and action that was taken in the matter of the receivership?—A. Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Wainwright and myself were present at all creditors' meetings.

Q. Was there any matter in which you were drawn in where you did not receive cooperation from Mr. Gilbert?—A. No, sir.

Mr. LINFORTH. Take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You were employed at the suggestion of the creditors' committee, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never knew Mr. Gilbert before the creditors' committee suggested your employment, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are the man who supplanted the management there, are you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were the practical managing head of that business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Gilbert knew nothing about running the automotive industry, did he?—A. No, sir.

Q. The reason you had to be employed was that he did not know anything about it, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may be excused. (The witness retired from the stand.)

DEPOSITION OF JOSEPH H. STEPHENS, JR.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. President, we now offer depositions taken in San Francisco at the same time the deposition of the witness Lloyd Ackerman was taken. I will not read the deposition of Althea Thomas, found on page 6 of those depositions. I do not believe there is any necessity for reading that deposition. Instead we will read the deposition of Joseph H. Stephens, Jr., found on page 16 of the depositions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; proceed.

Mr. HANLEY thereupon read the direct examination in the deposition of Joseph H. Stephens, Jr., as follows:

U.S.S. EXHIBIT O

Joseph H. Stephens, Jr., called on behalf of Harold Louderback; sworn.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Stephens, where do you reside?—A. Sacramento.

Q. Whereabouts in Sacramento?—A. Twenty-sixth and H.

Q. What is your business at the present time?—A. Contractors Adjustment Bureau.

Q. And in the month of August 1931 did you know of a concern commonly called the Prudential Co.?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the correct name of that company, the full name of it?—A. The Prudential Holding Co.

Q. Were you an officer and director in that company at that time?

Mr. PERKINS. Just don't lead him. Just ask him what he was. Wouldn't that be better?

Mr. LINFORTH. I think the question is perfectly proper; it is not leading.

Q. Were you an officer in that company at that time?—A. I was.

Q. What officer were you in that company at that time?—A. Vice president.

Q. At the time of the filing of a complaint in the office of the Clerk of the United States District Court on the 15th day of August 1931 in a suit entitled Character Finance Co., of Santa Monica v. Prudential Holding Co., were you present in the clerk's office when that complaint was filed?—A. I was.

Q. Who else was present at the time?—A. Mr. Kearsley and Judge Louderback.

Q. I am asking you about when the complaint was filed in the clerk's office.—A. I don't know; there were clerks in there, but I didn't know any of them.

Q. Let me put it in this way: After the complaint was filed you saw Judge Louderback, did you?

Mr. PERKINS. Now you are leading him.

Mr. LINFORTH. I will put it in another form to accommodate you, judge.

Q. Did you see Judge Louderback after the complaint in that case was filed?—A. We did.

Q. Where did you see Judge Louderback?—A. In his chambers.

Q. Was that the first time that you had seen Judge Louderback?—A. Correct.

Q. Who was with you when you went to the chambers of Judge Louderback?—A. Mr. Kearsley.

Q. Who was Mr. Kearsley, what was his occupation, if you know?—A. He is an attorney.

Q. Were you introduced to Judge Louderback?—A. I was.

Q. By whom?—A. Mr. Kearsley.

Q. How were you introduced to Judge Louderback?—A. Just the ordinary introduction, that I was Mr. Stephens, of the Prudential Holding Co. That is all there was to it.

Q. Did Judge Louderback ask you anything about in what capacity you were representing the Prudential Holding Co.?

Mr. PERKINS. I object to that. It does not appear that he was representing it, and it does not appear that Judge Louderback had any conversation with him.

Mr. LINFORTH. Let me withdraw the question, judge, and I think I will meet your objection and get at it in another way.

Q. State in your own way the conversation that was had in Judge Louderback's presence by the three of you.—A. Mr. Kearsley had this petition and said that he was representing the stockholders of the Character Finance Co., and that they wanted to conserve the assets of the Prudential Holding Co., and asked that a receiver be appointed. That is all there was to it.

Q. When Mr. Kearsley said that what, if anything, did you or the judge say?—A. Well, the judge asked me what I thought about it, and I told him that I thought something should be done.

Q. In what respect, if anything?—A. For the appointment of a receiver.

Q. Was the petition presented to Judge Louderback at that time by Mr. Kearsley?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it examined or read by the judge?—A. It was.
 Q. After the judge read it and examined it, did he ask you any questions in regard to it?—A. He asked me if I had read it.
 Q. And what did you tell him?—A. That I had.
 Q. What else, if anything, did the judge ask you in regard to that paper?—A. As I remember it, he asked me what I thought about the petition, and I told him that something should be done.
 Q. Did you tell Judge Louderback at that time what your office in the company was?—A. I believe during the conversation Mr. Kearsley told him.
 Q. What did he tell him?—A. That I was vice president.
 Q. Of the company?—A. Of the company.
 Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

Mr. Manager PERKINS read the cross-examination in the deposition of John H. Stephens, Jr., as follows:

Cross-examination by Mr. PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Stephens, have you ever seen or spoken to Mr. Kearsley since that date?—A. I have not.
 Q. Did you ever see or speak to him before that date?—A. Before what date?
 Q. Aren't you telling us about a time and didn't you identify a date?—A. Oh, in August, there; yes. I saw Mr. Kearsley before that; yes, once.
 Q. Where?—A. In San Francisco.
 Q. On what date did you see him?—A. I am sure I don't remember.
 Q. How many days before the presentation of the petition?—A. It was probably the day prior.
 Q. When was the petition presented?—A. You mean in the judge's office here in the building?
 Q. Have we talked or have you testified about any other time or about any other petition than the one just asked about?—A. No.
 Q. That is what I mean.—A. All right, what is the question, again?
 Q. The question is, When was the petition presented to the judge?—A. On August 15.
 Q. Do you remember that right out of a clear sky?—A. No; I have been told that right here.
 Q. So you adopted the date rather than remembered it?—A. It was in the month of August, sometime or other.
 Q. Please answer my question. You adopted the date rather than remembered it?—A. Yes.
 Q. Have you told us all that transpired at the time of the filing of the petition by Kearsley?—A. As I remember it; yes.
 Q. No attorney was present representing the Prudential Holding Co., was there?—A. No.
 Q. Who was the attorney of the Prudential Holding Co. then?—A. I think Mr. Hawkins was.
 Q. Did you notify him that you were going to appear?—A. No; I did not.
 Q. Did you advise anybody connected with the company that you were going to appear with Kearsley before Judge Louderback?—A. I did not.
 Q. Did anybody connected with the company, so far as you know, know that you were going to appear?—A. No, sir.
 Q. So far as you know, did the company have any notice whatever that the petition was about to be presented?—A. No.
 Q. What induced you to appear with the attorney of this adversary of your company before the judge?—A. There was no inducement at all. The—
 Q. No inducement at all?
 Mr. LINFORTH. Let him finish his answer, Judge. Please finish your answer.

Mr. PERKINS. No; I am controlling the examination now.
 Mr. LINFORTH. I submit that the witness has a right to finish his answer, and counsel should not interrupt him in the middle of his answer.

Mr. PERKINS. I submit he has answered the question.
 Mr. LINFORTH. I ask to have the record read. (Record read by the reporter.) The record shows he was still answering, Judge, when you interrupted him with another question.

Mr. PERKINS. How long a time had elapsed since you had been at the office of the Prudential Holding Co.?

Mr. LINFORTH. One moment. We object to the asking of that question, or any other question, until the witness is permitted to finish the answer which counsel interrupted.

The WITNESS. What do you mean by that question?

Mr. PERKINS. Previous to the 15th of August 1931.—A. How long a time had elapsed—I am sure I do not follow you at all.

Q. When were you at the office of the Prudential Holding Co. previous to August 15, 1931?—A. When? I was over there, I think, about a year.

Q. About a year before?—A. Yes; if that is what you want to know.

Mr. PERKINS. That is all.

Mr. LINFORTH (when the objection above set forth was reached). We waive the objection.

Mr. HANLEY thereupon read the redirect examination, as follows:

Redirect examination by Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Where was the office of the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. In Oakland.

Q. Do you recall just where in Oakland?—A. Between Seventeenth and Eighteenth on Franklin; 1731, I think it was, to be exact.

Q. Will you state, as clearly and as nearly as you can, when you were last in the office of the Prudential Holding Co. at the place you have indicated before your visit with Mr. Kearsley to Judge Louderback's chambers?—A. It was not over 2 days.

Mr. LINFORTH. I thought he did not understand your question, Judge.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I will have to go on with my cross-examination further.

Mr. LINFORTH. Go ahead, Judge, and I will suspend until you complete it.

Mr. Manager PERKINS thereupon read the further cross-examination, as follows:

Mr. PERKINS:

Q. You say that about 2 days before your appearance before Judge Louderback with Mr. Kearsley you had been at the office of the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. Yes.

Q. When Judge Louderback was introduced to you, or you were introduced to the judge, what did you state your relationship or connection with the Prudential Holding Co. was?—A. During the conversation Mr. Kearsley said I was the vice president; that is as I remember it.

Q. Did Judge Louderback ask you if the Prudential Holding Co. was represented by an attorney?—A. I don't remember that angle.

Q. Did Judge Louderback ask if there was any lawyer representing the Prudential Holding Co. in the matter of the filing of the petition?—A. I don't remember that, either.

Q. You are not a lawyer?—A. I am not.

Q. And you did not represent yourself to the judge to be a lawyer, did you?—A. No.

Q. Did you ask the judge for time until you could get a lawyer there?—A. No. This fellow—Mr. Kearsley—was an attorney.

Q. Yes; but he was an attorney opposing your company, was he not?—A. He was representing the stockholders.

Q. Of what company?—A. The Character Finance and the Prudential Holding Co. Here is the situation: The Prudential Holding Co. had taken over the Character Finance Co. of Santa Monica and they had taken stock of the Character Finance Co., as I remember the deal.

Q. So your idea now is that Kearsley was representing the Prudential Holding Co. before the judge?

Mr. LINFORTH. Just a moment. I object to that as contrary to his testimony. He said he was representing stockholders.

Mr. PERKINS:

Q. Did you look at the papers to see whether they said that Kearsley was representing any stockholders of the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. I don't remember the exact words of the petition now.

Q. So you now think that Mr. Kearsley was acting for the stockholders of the Character Finance Co., as well as of the Prudential Co., do you?—A. Yes; I do.

Q. And did he so state to Judge Louderback?—A. He did.

Q. He told Judge Louderback that he, Kearsley, was representing stockholders of the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. And the Character Finance Co.

Q. Are you sure about this, that he said he was representing stockholders of the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. I am pretty sure about it.

Q. Did Judge Louderback say anything about whether there were any other stockholders represented by any other lawyer present?—A. I don't remember that, either.

Q. Did he ask anything about whether a lawyer was present representing the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. I don't remember that.

Q. Did he say anything about giving notice to the Prudential Holding Co. of the application for a receiver?—A. I don't remember those questions at all.

Q. So far as you recollect, did Judge Louderback say anything whatever about giving notice to the Prudential Holding Co. or any stockholder of the Prudential Holding Co. of the intended appointment of a receiver?—A. I don't remember.

Q. How long after your appearance with Mr. Kearsley did you go back to the office of the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. Well, it was not very long.

Q. That means nothing to me. How long?—A. Less than a day.

Q. Who was the president of the Prudential Holding Co. then?—A. Mr. Beck.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Beck that you were going to go before Judge Louderback?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you notify anybody connected with the Prudential Holding Co. that you were going to go before Judge Louderback?—A. Mr. Beck was not here; he was out of the State.

Q. Did you notify anybody connected with the Prudential Holding Co., its lawyer, or any of its officers that you were going to go before Judge Louderback?—A. I did not.

Q. Did Judge Louderback ask you whether any other officer of the Prudential Holding Co. knew that you were there in the matter of the application for a receiver?—A. I don't remember that question at all.

Q. Do you remember any other conversation on the part of Judge Louderback at the time that has been mentioned, when the petition for receiver was presented, other than you have already spoken of?—A. No; I can't remember.

Q. Do you remember anything else he said there other than you have already described?—A. No. It was all new to me.

Q. Please answer my question. Did Judge Louderback say anything other than you have already put into the record here?—A. No; I don't think so.

Mr. PERKINS. That is all.

Mr. LINFORTH. That is all.

EXAMINATION OF J. G. REISNER

Mr. LINFORTH. May we call J. G. Reisner?

J. G. Reisner, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Reisner, will you please state your name, your residence, and your occupation?—A. J. G. Reisner, San Francisco, attorney.

Q. You have been a lawyer practicing in California for how long?—A. Twenty-three years.

Q. Were you one of the attorneys in the case of Helen Lay against the Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association?—A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you represent?—A. I represented the plaintiff, Helen Lay.

Q. And who represented the defendant?—A. Bronson, Bronson & Slaven.

Q. Did you, accompanied by Mr. Slaven, present to Judge Louderback the application for the appointment of the receiver?—A. I did.

Q. Who suggested the appointment of Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr., as receiver?—A. Mr. Slaven.

Q. Did you agree to it?—A. I did.

Q. Did the judge have you both put it in writing before he made the appointment?—A. I believe Mr. Slaven had the papers himself; and the one that I signed was left blank, and I filled in the name of Shortridge at that time. We both signed a request.

Q. When Mr. Slaven suggested the name of Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr., as receiver, what did you say?—A. Well, I told him that there was another man that wanted the appointment, but that I did not feel like recommending the other man and that I would be satisfied with Shortridge, as I thought he was qualified.

Q. Were you present when the complaint or the petition was filed?—A. I was.

Q. Did you see anybody hand to Mr. Slaven a slip with any names on it from which a receiver could be selected?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see any such message?—A. I did not.

Q. Did Mr. Slaven speak to you about any such message?—A. He did not.

Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. No cross-examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will be excused. Call the next witness.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, I understand there is one witness whose cross-examination was not completed. If counsel is ready to complete that cross-examination, the witness is here—Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We do not care to proceed with cross-examination at this moment. We will undertake to cross-examine that witness when we come to the point where we have the privilege of offering rebuttal testimony.

EXAMINATION OF GEORGE D. LOUDERBACK

Mr. LINFORTH. May we call George D. Louderback?

George D. Louderback, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Will you please state your name, your occupation, and your residence?—A. George Davis Louderback; geologist; 107 Ardmore Road, Kensington, Contra Costa County, Calif.

Q. Are you a professor engaged at the University of the State of California?—A. I am.

Q. What is your title at that university?—A. Professor of geology, chairman of the department of geological sciences, and dean of the college of letters and sciences.

Q. Are you a brother of the respondent Harold Louderback?—A. I am.

Q. Where do you live, please; what exact place?—A. I gave that; 107 Ardmore Road, Kensington, Contra Costa County, Calif.

Q. With reference to the Alameda line, in which Berkeley is situated, where is that?—A. Kensington is immediately over the Berkeley and Alameda County line, which are coincident.

Q. A few feet over the line. About how far, in distance, is it from San Francisco?—A. In time, it is about 40 or 45 minutes.

Q. In 1930, and prior thereto, of whom did your family consist?—A. Myself and my wife.

Q. I call your attention to the 6th of April 1930. Did you on that date at your home have any talk with the respondent upon the subject of his making his home and residence with you?—A. I did.

Q. How do you recall the date?—A. I recall that because it was my birthday, and my brother came over to celebrate that day with me.

Q. Will you please state, for the information of the Presiding Officer and the Senators, what conversation you had with him in the presence and hearing of your wife on that occasion?—A. I was delayed at the university, and my brother had arrived before I got home. When I came in, after greetings concerning my birthday, and after presenting me with a gift for that occasion, my wife said that they had been talking about his coming over to make his home with us again. I said that I was highly delighted, and the conversation then was concerning where he should be located and the satisfactory character of his room, and we went into the place suggested by my wife, the room, to see whether it was satisfactory and what arrangements we should make to be suitable for him.

Q. Was a room at that time agreed upon and set apart for him in your home?—A. It was.

Q. Had he prior to that, at sometime prior, made his home with you and your wife?—A. Yes; for 3 years in Reno, Nev.

Q. Do you recall whether or not, following this conversation on the 6th of April 1930, any of his belongings were sent to your home?—A. Yes; in a day or two he had sent over a couple of trunks, and then a few days later he brought over, I think, another trunk and some hand baggage and various other things, and had these installed in his quarters.

Q. Has he had that room ever since?—A. He has.

Q. Was he furnished with a key to the room at the time you speak of—I mean to the house; not to the room?—A. Yes; a key to the house; no key to the room.

Q. Do you know whether or not on each election day following that time the respondent has voted in that county?—A. Yes; he has always come over, and the whole family has gone out to the polls together.

Q. Have you gone with him on those occasions?—A. I have.

Q. On how many occasions since that time do you know that he has voted in that county?—A. Five times.

Q. When was the last?—A. The last general election in November.

Q. How soon after this arrangement was made on the 6th of April 1930 did the respondent come over to your home to stay?—A. A week or so after; about the middle of April.

Q. How many evenings did he remain there overnight?—A. I believe two evenings.

Q. What happened those two evenings, so far as your own knowledge goes?—A. On the second evening he was taken with a rather severe attack of asthma.

Q. Was he subject to attacks of asthma prior to that?—A. Yes; since he was a small boy 5 or 6 years old.

Q. Upon the second evening, after being subjected to that attack of asthma, when did he next return to your home?—A. He thought he had better wait until this cleared up, and he came over in about 2 weeks, I think. The next time was the 2d of May.

Q. On that occasion did he remain overnight in this room that had been set apart to him?—A. He did.

Q. What, if anything, happened with reference to his condition that evening?—A. He had another attack of asthma, and was unable to eat breakfast the next morning.

Q. The following night did he also return?—A. I think not.
Q. How soon after that did he return again?—A. About the middle of May, about 2 weeks later.

Q. What happened on the third visit with reference to his condition?—A. He suffered again from an attack of asthma, which came on early, and he was unable to eat more than the very start of his dinner, and that caused him a very great deal of trouble during the night.

Q. Have you plants and flowers in your house and around the house?—A. We have.

Q. Have you any animal in the house also?—A. We have a pet cat.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge that just prior to leaving California for Washington the respondent went to your home in order to get his belongings to come here?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I object to the form of the question.

Mr. LINFORTH. I withdraw it if there is any objection to it. I am trying to save time if I can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is withdrawn. By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. When was the last time you saw the respondent at your home?—A. The day that he left for Washington this last trip.

Q. You mean on this trip?—A. Yes.

Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Doctor, you have told the Senate all of the occasions when your brother spent time at your house, have you not?—A. I think those are all the occasions when he slept there at night.

Q. That is, he slept there three nights?—A. I think I testified to four.

Q. Four nights since when?—A. I did not get the question.

Q. Four nights since when?—A. Since the middle of April 1930.

Q. That is to say, in 3 years and 1 month he has slept at your house four nights. Is that right?—A. Four nights.

Q. As a matter of fact, you and your wife are away over week-ends, are you not, as a rule?—A. No; not as a rule.

Q. So that he did not spend any week-ends with you, did he?—A. Yes; he very frequently spent week-ends.

Q. Overnights?—A. Not overnights; no.

Q. He came over and made a visit upon his brother. Is that right?—A. I suppose he did.

Q. Did he pay you any money during that time?—A. He did not.

Q. He did not pay any room rent?—A. He did not.

Q. He did not pay any board?—A. He did not.

Q. The four occasions he came over, four of those times, he voted, did he not?—A. He did not.

Q. He did not vote then?—A. Not those four times.

Q. You said he voted five times there.—A. He did vote five times, but those are not the times I testified to that he slept there overnight.

Q. That is to say, in 3 years and 1 month he has slept at your house four times, and he has voted from your house five times. Is that right?—A. He has.

Q. You have told the Senate all you know about the residence of your brother at your house, have you not?—A. I have not.

Q. When was the last time that your brother slept at your house?—A. The last time was, I think, in July 1931.

Q. So that for 2 years, less 2 months, he has not even slept there, has he?—A. That is correct.

Q. And for the other 1 year and 3 months he has been there four times overnight?—A. Yes.

Q. And he always has suffered attacks of asthma when he comes, has he not?—A. When he tries to stop overnight.

Q. Do you keep the cat in the house overnight?—A. We generally do.

Q. You know that asthma is due to breathing effluvia of some kind, is it not?—A. I am not sure about the cause.

Q. As a matter of fact, it was impossible for him to stay at your house overnight without having asthma, was it not?—A. That appeared to be the case.

Q. He never paid a dollar for board or a dollar for room, did he?—A. He did not. I did not expect him to.

Q. What did you use that room for previously?—A. That room was used previously as what my wife called the spare room, where guests came in.

Q. How many guest rooms have you in the house?—A. We now have one.

Q. You have one guest room?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that the room you assigned to your brother?—A. No.

Q. You mean one in addition?—A. One in addition.

Q. How do you know he voted five times in your municipality?—A. Because I went with him to the polls.

Q. And he also registered his motor car there, did he not?—A. Yes.

Q. He told you that he had trouble with his wife, and he wanted to come over and live in your home, did he not?—A. He did not.

Mr. LINFORTH. One moment. We object to that as not cross-examination in any sense of the word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is sustained.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. May I submit that the conversation that took place is supposed to have been related by the witness, and I might have a right to cross-examine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is under the impression that the relations of the respondent with his wife are not particularly in issue.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. No; but the purpose of establishing this pretended residence is very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will stand on the ruling which has been made.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The managers bow to the ruling of the Chair. That is all.

Mr. LINFORTH. May I ask one further question, Mr. President?

Redirect examination by Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Professor, not to be exact, but approximately, how often has the respondent been to your house per week, on an average, since 1931, April of that year?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We object to that because it is not redirect examination and is not based on the cross-examination, and it assumes things not in evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would seem to the Chair that that very question was gone into in cross-examination, and now on redirect examination the counsel for the respondent would have a right to refer to the question. The objection is overruled.

The WITNESS. Except for the times when he is out of town, he comes almost every week.

Mr. LINFORTH. No further questions.

Recross-examination by Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You mean he makes a visit there sometime during the afternoon in a week?—A. He stays there frequently throughout the afternoon and evening.

Q. As a matter of fact, you know that he has resided continuously at room 26 in the Fairmont Hotel during this period, do you not?

Mr. LINFORTH. One moment. We object to that as calling for the opinion or conclusion of the witness on a legal proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If he has knowledge of the subject, he can answer. Answer the question. The objection is overruled.

Mr. LINFORTH. May I add, Mr. President, with your permission, that the point of my objection is that the question is, "He has resided"? A question of residence is a legal question, and that is the point of the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood counsel to suggest that the chief reason was that he called for a conclusion, and the Chair simply suggested to the witness that he state what he knows of his own knowledge.

Mr. LINFORTH. I adopt that reasoning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will answer the question.

The WITNESS. May the question be read?

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. As a matter of fact, you know that he has resided continuously at room 26 in the Fairmont Hotel during this period, do you not?

The WITNESS. I am not sure what that question means. By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Well, he has continually had a room in the Fairmont Hotel which he has occupied there every night during the 3 years and 1 month mentioned?

Q. I know that he has had the use of a room in the Fairmont Hotel, but I would hardly say that he has practically occupied it every night for the last 3 years.

Q. Have you visited him at the Fairmont Hotel?—A. I have a couple of times.

Q. And you visited him in his room, did you not?—A. I think once or twice.

Q. And you know from your visitation there that he has occupied room No. 26 in the Fairmont Hotel?—A. He has; yes.

Q. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will be excused, if there are no further questions.

Mr. LINFORTH. There are no further questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

EXAMINATION OF MARSHALL B. WOODWORTH

Mr. LINFORTH. May we call Marshall B. Woodworth? Marshall B. Woodworth, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Would you please state your name, residence, and your occupation?—A. Marshall B. Woodworth; residence, San Francisco; attorney at law.

Q. And are you the Marshall B. Woodworth spoken of this afternoon or today as being United States attorney at San Francisco at one time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you appointed as the attorney for the receiver in the Helen Lay case, the so-called Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association case?—A. I was.

Q. And do you recall who spoke to you about acting in that capacity?—A. Mr. Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr., spoke to me about the matter. He telephoned to my office some 2 or 3 days, as I recall it, previous to his appointment and asked me whether I would act as his attorney in that case.

Q. How long did you act in that receivership matter, Mr. Woodworth? I don't mean to be exact, but just approximately.—A. One year and six months, from the 29th day of July 1930, and until the 9th day of January 1932.

Q. Are you familiar with the orders signed by the respondent on the 15th day of December 1931 settling the final accounts of the receiver?—A. I am very familiar with the order, having myself prepared it.

Q. And did you attend upon the court proceedings at the settlement of the final account of the receiver?—A. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporter will read the question.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. And did you attend upon the court proceedings at the settlement of the final account of the receiver?

The WITNESS. I did.

Q. Did the court, upon the submission of that matter, declare that the account was settled and the receiver ordered to turn the property over to the State insurance commissioner?—A. The court did.

Q. Who, then, afterward prepared the written order?—A. I did.

Q. You are familiar with the proviso provision, so called, in that order?—A. Perfectly.

Q. Who inserted that provision in the order as originally drafted?—A. I did myself.

Q. What was your purpose in inserting that provision in that order?—A. On the first appeal the circuit court of appeals had directed the lower court to settle the account of the receiver and then to turn over the property to the State insurance commissioner. In pursuance of that order, the account was settled, and the order made directing the Federal receiver to turn over this property to the State insurance commissioner. Thereafter the attorney for the State commissioner indicated that he would take an appeal from the order of the district judge settling the account. In view of that fact, I took the position that, pending the appeal, the property should remain with the trial court, or should be turned over upon giving a proper bond. I took the position that if an appeal were taken from the order settling the account the account was not settled at all, for the reason that we did not know what action the circuit court of appeals might take with reference to the account; and I explained to the judge that the attorney for the State insurance commissioner—

Q. Pardon me a moment before you reach the point of taking the order to the judge. Did you, after drafting the order, first submit it to Mr. Guereña, the attorney for the insurance commissioner?—A. I did, and I had a number of conferences with Mr. Guereña with reference to that particular portion of the order and also with reference to his furnishing a bond in case the property was turned over by the Federal receiver to the State insurance commissioner.

Q. Now, Mr. Woodworth, we are all tired, and would you please make it as short as you can. What talk did you have with Mr. Guereña, the attorney for the State insurance commissioner, with reference to that proviso provision, so called, in that order?—A. I talked with him about that particular provision in the final decree, and Mr. Guereña's principal objection to it was not the proviso itself but the amount of bond that he should furnish. I contended that the bond should be the equivalent of the property to be turned over, to wit, some thirty or forty thousand dollars, about $25,000 in money, notes totaling some ten or fifteen thousand dollars, and other property. He claimed that the State insurance commissioner, being a public official, the amount of the bond should be nominal or should be in the sum of $5,000. That seemed to be his principal objection.

Q. Now, was it for those reasons and those reasons only—

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we respectfully make the suggestion that counsel is going too far in the discussion and detailing of conversation between the witness and Mr. Guereña. This is an instance where it is charged that the judge put a condition to the mandate of the circuit court of appeals, and really the reason that may have prompted this witness, or Mr. Guereña will not bear directly upon the motive which prompted the respondent in attaching that condition to the mandate of the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. LINFORTH. May I add just a word in reply, Mr. President? In this article of impeachment the respondent is charged with improperly and oppressively inserting that clause in that order. Surely we have a right, in defense of that charge, to show the circumstances under which the order was made so as to show that it was not oppressively done in any sense of the word.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We concede that there should be considerable latitude, but our suggestion is that the witness is going too far afield in making the explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. What took place, or substantially took place, the Chair thinks is admissible.

Mr. LINFORTH. That is all I am asking for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to counsel for the respondent and to the managers on the part of the House, and to the witness as well, to be as brief as possible, and suggests that the witness give the Senate the substantial facts as to what took place.

Mr. LINFORTH. That is my hope. I have stepped along as fast as possible today.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Woodworth, was there any other reason why you put that proviso provision in the order?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you presented that letter to Judge Louderback did you give him any explanation of the reason for that provision?—A. When I presented the order to the judge he expressed his disapproval of that particular provision, and I explained to him that the purpose of it was, in view of the fact of a second appeal having been taken from the order settling the account that, in my judgment, the whole matter was held in abeyance until the court of appeals should pass upon the second appeal. The accounts were not really settled; there was no telling what the circuit court of appeals was going to do. It might ratify the action of the district judge or it might enlarge upon the disallowances; there was no telling what would be done; and for that reason the proviso was put in for the purpose of getting a bond. That was the sole purpose.

Q. After that order was filed did you ever see the judge, the respondent, in regard to it?—A. Some 2 weeks subsequent to that I did.

Q. What did he then say to you with regard to that order?—A. He stated that he observed that the second appeal had been taken in the case; that he had reconsidered his decision with reference to the one particular provision in the final decree settling the account, and that he thought, under all the circumstances, that that proviso should be emasculated from the decree and the property turned over. I told him if that was his view that I would naturally submit to it.

Q. Did he at that time tell you that he was satisfied the provision was erroneous and wrong?—A. He did; and over my objection the order was changed, and I was directed to—

Q. What did he direct you then to do?—A. He directed me to obtain a stipulation from all the parties, the party plaintiff, the party defendant, and also the attorney for the State insurance commissioner, stipulating that, in spite of the pending appeal, the property be turned over and the matter terminated.

Q. In other words, that the order be amended by striking out that clause?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you obtained that stipulation?—A. I did.

Q. And he then made an order accordingly?—A. The order was made and the property turned over.

Q. In how many matters had you been appointed attorney for receiverships in the 5 years that Judge Louderback had been on the Federal bench?—A. In just two cases.

Q. Which two?—A. The case which I have mentioned and another one, entitled "the Pioneer Fruit Co. case."

Q. Did you give to Judge Louderback or anyone else any part or portion of any fees that were allowed you in either matter?—A. No, sir; absolutely not.

Q. During the 8 years that the judge was upon the State bench did you receive any appointment of any kind from him?—A. I did not. I hardly knew the judge at that time. It was only after he became Federal judge that I became acquainted with him.

Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. Mr. Woodworth, I believe you testified that some 3 days before the petition was filed Samuel Shortridge, Jr., approached you to know if you would act as his counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, before the petition was filed, you also contacted the respondent?—A. I did. I was requested to call upon the judge and ascertain whether my appointment would be agreeable to him, and I did so.

Q. What day were you appointed with regard to the day the receiver was appointed?—A. I think it must have been on the 30th day of July or the 1st of August 1930.

Q. Was it not in fact the same day the receiver was appointed?—A. I doubt that very much. He was first appointed and thereafter requested my appointment.

Q. You spoke of the Pioneer Fruit Co. case. In what capacity did you act in that?—A. As attorney for the receiver.

Q. Your fee first allowed in that case was how much?—A. The fee allowed by the referee was $500.

Q. You appealed from that?—A. I did appeal from that; yes.

Q. To the respondent?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. How much did he allow?—A. He increased the allowance $1,500. He allowed $2,000.

Q. When was that fee paid to you?—A. The fee was paid some time, I think, in the month—I really do not recollect just when, but some time, I think, in the month of March. I was appointed in January and acted for 2 months. It was probably paid in the month of March or April 1932 or 1931; I am not sure as to that.

Q. What fee did you get in the Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association case?—A. I was allowed $3,000 on two successive occasions.

Q. Do you remember the date exactly that you collected?—A. The first $3,000 was allowed in the month of December 1930, and the second $3,000 was allowed in the month of March 1931.

Q. Was there any hearing on the allowance of those fees?—A. All parties plaintiff and defendant, all the parties in interest, agreed that the compensation was fair and reasonable, and upon a stipulation of all parties the judge made the order.

Q. Do you mean that the commissioner of insurance stipulated to those fees?—A. He did not, because we did not consider that he was a party to the case at all.

Q. Who do you mean by the parties in interest?—A. The plaintiff, who brought the suit, and the defendant, whose property was involved.

Q. You did not have any creditor's consent about that, did you?—A. The only creditor here was the defendant himself.

Q. The allowance of fees was reversed on the second appeal?—A. The allowance was to a certain extent reversed; yes, sir.

Q. Has there been any restitution made in the amount that the circuit court ordered to be paid back to the estate?—A. I think that is in process of being done, yes, sir, upon the order of the respondent the receiver was directed to return those moneys, which included two or three thousand dollars' worth of costs on appeal taken by the State insurance commissioner. Those were also taxed against the receiver personally. Upon his failure to return the moneys within a period of 30 days, then a writ of scire facias issued, and that is pending in the circuit court. That was issued to the bonding company and also against Mr. Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr., the principal on the bonds. That has been issued and is now pending.

Q. What authority did you have for the order of the respondent permitting 30 more days before this writ could issue on the mandate of the circuit court?—A. It is usual in all court proceedings to give what is deemed to be reasonable notice.

Q. That is the only authority you know of?—A. I thought that was sufficient authority.

Q. On the order which you state now the judge objected to at the time, I will ask you if you trapped the respondent into making that order?—A. I did not trap him or any other judge. That is ridiculous.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, may we have the question read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be read. The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. On the order which you state now the judge objected to at the time, I will ask you if you trapped the respondent into making that order?

Mr. LINFORTH. There is no objection to the question. By Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. I would like to read to you, Mr. Woodworth, the statement of the respondent before the committee in last January, and ask you if this is a correct statement of what took place—

Mr. LINFORTH. At what page?

Mr. Manager BROWNING. At page 363, as follows:

Mr. BROWNING. At the time that the first order of reversal came down to turn over the assets to the receiver in the State court, or the State commission, you provided in the order that the property should be turned over if there was no appeal taken from the fees allowed?

Judge LOUDERBACK. I think that was a very erroneous order to make. That order was presented to me by Mr. Woodworth. I will concede to you that that was erroneous.

He pleaded with me this way: He said, "Can we tell what to hold out? Shall we hold out on all the 52 objections of Mr. Guereña?" He said, "Now, couldn't that order be made in that form?" And he told me that Mr. Guereña was not going to take the appeal, anyway, and then I signed it and later I told him I would not let that stand, that I had made a grave mistake in suggesting even that the money be held, and I will concede that I should not have done that. It was an error. I suppose every judge has been trapped into errors by attorneys. That was wrong, and I do not think that should have been done.

The WITNESS. That is substantially correct, but I did not purposely trap the judge.

By Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. Did you tell him that Mr. Guereña was not going to make the appeal?—A. I told him, on the contrary, that Guereña threatened to appeal, and it was for that very reason that this order was inserted. In other words, it was to protect the status quo of the estate in the hands of the Federal receiver pending the repeal, and the only objection Mr. Guereña had was to the amount of the bond.

Q. When the order was made you informed the respondent in that conversation that Mr. Guereña was threatening the appeal?—A. He certainly was. I think Mr. Guereña will so testify.

Q. You told the respondent at that time that he was threatening the appeal?—A. Yes; and that was the purpose of the proviso.

Q. Do you know Mr. W. S. Leake?—A. Yes; I know him very well.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him for quite a number of years; I should say 25 years. I knew him when he was editor of the San Francisco Call, a very influential paper in those days.

Q. That was operated by the Spreckels' interests at that time?—A. Yes.

Q. And the Spreckels' interests had him in control of it?—A. Yes; that is true.

Q. You knew him intimately, I believe?—A. I cannot say that I did. I knew him very well as a public man, but socially—intimately—I cannot say that.

Q. Since his retirement from active public life have you not been with him frequently?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. You know he has maintained an office in San Francisco?—A. Yes.

Q. You have been to that office?—A. I have been to the office; yes, sir.

Q. You gave him credit for having you appointed district attorney in the northern district of California, I believe?—A. I do not want to do the gentleman an injustice, but my appointment was due to the two Senators of the State. I must confess that Mr. Leake did all he could to help me, but with all due deference I did not owe him my appointment.

Q. You gave him credit for manipulating it for you, did you not?—A. To be charitable, I want to give him credit.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, I take exception to that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think it is pertinent.

The WITNESS. I feel very grateful to him for what he did for me; I will say that—very grateful.

By Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. You did not have a safe-deposit box, did you?—A. No, sir; I am not so fortunate.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. That is all.

Mr. LINFORTH. No further questions of this witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may be excused. (The witness retired from the stand.)

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, we would like to ask permission of the Presiding Officer for a moment to confer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

(A pause.)

EXAMINATION OF BRICE KEARSLEY, JR.

Mr. HANLEY. We should like to call Mr. Brice Kearsley, Jr.

Brice Kearsley, Jr., having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. HANLEY:

Q. State your name in full, your business, and your residence?—A. My name is Brice Kearsley, Jr. I am an attorney at law, and I live at Los Angeles, Calif.

Q. Were you at one time connected with the firm of Gold, Quittner & Kearsley?—A. I was.

Q. In the year 1931 and about the 5th day of August of that year, did you present a petition or complaint to Judge Louderback on behalf of the Character Finance Co., of Santa Monica, for the appointment of an equity receiver?—A. I did; but it was on the 15th day of August 1931.

Q. With whom did you go to the chambers of Judge Louderback?—A. With Mr. Joseph Stephens, Jr.

Q. Who was he?—A. He was the vice president of the Prudential Holding Co.

Q. Did you present the complaint to the judge and request the appointment of a receiver?—A. I did.

Q. What did you say to Judge Louderback at that time and place, in the presence of Mr. Stephens?—A. I told Judge Louderback that I represented the Character Finance Co., of Santa Monica, who owned and controlled $90,000 worth of the stock of the Prudential Holding Co.; that the Prudential Holding Co. had guaranteed certain obligations of the Character Finance Corporation and had failed to make good the guarantee; that we—that is to say, the corporation and myself—had endeavored to obtain some satisfaction out of them concerning these guaranties; that we had made an investigation of the Prudential Holding Co. and found out that their affairs were in a very precarious situation, and that something would have to be done in order to conserve the assets for the benefit of the Character Finance Corporation; that we thereupon had a meeting of the board of directors, and the board of directors voted to apply for a receiver in equity in order, if possible, to conserve what assets there were left; that I brought Mr. Stephens, who occupied a similar position to certain members of the Character Finance Corporation as the vice president of the Prudential Holding Co., to tell him what he knew about it; that Mr. Stephens was prepared to recommend an equity receivership; that, in our opinion, an equity receivership was absolutely necessary, and that we wished to have a receiver appointed. I also presented him with a petition which set out in full exactly the facts as we had discovered them in our investigation.

Q. Had you made a thorough investigation of what was the then condition of the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. We had; yes.

Q. Had you come to any conclusion from your investigation as to its condition?—A. Yes; we had.

Q. What condition did you find it to be in?—A. We found that the Prudential Holding Co. was absolutely insolvent, and that what assets were left were rapidly being depreciated and done away with; and that the officers of the corporation, in our opinion, were incapable of handling it, and were looting it in every possible way.

Q. Did you in absolute good faith, on behalf of your plaintiff, present these matters in the complaint that was had?

Mr. Manager BROWNING. I think that is going very far afield.

Mr. HANLEY. Oh, no; he is accused—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Answer the question; but the Chair will suggest to counsel to conserve time as much as possible.

The WITNESS. We did; yes.

By Mr. HANLEY:

Q. Immediately upon the presenting, did you suggest any receiver to Judge Louderback?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you leave an order requesting the appointment of a receiver?—A. I did.

Q. Whom did he appoint?—A. Mr. G. H. Gilbert.

Q. Had you anything to do with the appointment of Mr. G. H. Gilbert?—A. I had not.

Q. Had you anything to do with the appointment of his attorney?—A. I had not.

Q. After the appointment of the receiver, did your office cease at that time?—A. Yes, sir. I never saw him again at any time until here in Washington.

Q. Thereafter a motion was made on behalf of the Prudential Co. set aside the receivership. Did you personally appear in that?—A. I did not; my associate did.

Q. What member of your firm appeared in it?—A. Mr. Francis Quittner.

Q. And he resisted the dismissal that was finally entered in that case?—A. He did.

Mr. HANLEY. You may examine.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager BROWNING:

Q. Mr. Kearsley, you are not now a member of that firm?—A. I am not.

Q. Your connection with that firm was terminated because of the conduct of this case, was it not?—A. It was not.

Q. You alleged in the petition you filed that the assets of the concern were $1,050,000, did you not?—A. I alleged that, yes; upon information and belief.

Q. And you swore to it yourself?—A. I did.

Q. On information and belief?—A. Correct.

Q. And that is the only verification you had of the petition?—A. That is correct.

Q. What did you allege in that petition were the liabilities of the concern?—A. I do not recall.

Q. How large a bond did you have the receiver put under?—A. I think it was $100,000. I cannot remember exactly. It may have been $50,000.

Q. Was it not $50,000, and was not the bond running in favor of the Government itself?—A. The usual bond was put up.

Q. You did not have any indemnity to the defendant company, did you?—A. I did not.

Q. And you did not have any to the other creditors?—A. I did not.

Q. And nobody appeared for the company there that day in the way of counsel, did they?—A. They did not.

Q. They had no notice of it, did they?—A. They did not.

Q. You give it as your opinion now, do you not, Mr. Kearsley, that the court had no jurisdiction on the face of that petition?—A. I absolutely do not; and subsequent cases have shown the contrary.

Q. What was the termination of this case in that regard?—A. That was dismissed.

Q. And it was dismissed on the ground that there was no jurisdiction?—A. Exactly correct.

Q. Where are you practicing law now?—A. In Los Angeles.

Q. Do you have an office?—A. I do.

Q. Where is it located?—A. 414 Pacific National Building.

Q. Are you associated with any firm now?—A. Not now.

Q. When you went to San Francisco to file this petition, whom did you have associated with you in the preparation of it?—A. No one.

Q. Do you know Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known them?—A. I met them when I went to San Francisco.

Q. To file this petition?—A. Correct.

Q. Where did you meet them?—A. I met Mr. John Dinkelspiel the morning the petition was filed.

Q. Where?—A. I met him at the court room.

Q. What was he doing up there?—A. Well, I can only assume what he was doing. I understand he came to be counsel for Mr. Gilbert.

Q. But you had seen him before that time?—A. No; I had not seen him before that time; no.

Q. Had you seen his brother Martin?—A. No.

Q. You had been to his office?—A. Yes; I had been to his office.

Q. Whom did you see at his office?—A. Mr. Stephens.

Q. Did you not see either one of the Dinkelspiels at their office that day?—A. Yes; I did later on that day, after the petition was filed.

Q. I mean before the petition was filed.—A. No, sir.

Q. But you did meet Mr. Stephens at their office?—A. That is correct.

Q. How came he there? Why was he at their office?—A. Because I asked him to meet me there.

Q. Had you had any correspondence with them about it before you went up there?—A. No. I had talked to Mr. Stephens on the telephone and asked him to meet me at their office. I can explain that.

Q. How did you get hold of Mr. Stephens in the matter?—A. Called him on the telephone.

Q. Had you had any communication with him before that?—A. No. I was directed by the board of directors of the Character Finance Corporation to get in touch with Mr. Stephens concerning this matter.

Q. Why did you not call the president?—A. Mr. Beck?

Q. Yes.—A. Because they did not desire to call the president.

Q. Why did you not call Miss Lind, the secretary?—A. I never heard of her before.

Q. You did not know anything about this concern, did you?—A. I most certainly did.

Q. Did you get your information through Mr. Stephens alone?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you ever met him before that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you ever had any correspondence with him before that day?—A. I had not; no.

Q. Had your firm had any correspondence with him?—A. No; they had not that I know of.

Q. Why did you pick Dinkelspiel's office for him to meet you?—A. Because we—the firm that I was associated with, not myself—had used the office of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel on other occasions as corresponding attorneys in San Francisco. I personally had never met either of them at any time or been in their office before.

Q. You say now that you did not meet them that morning when you were at their office?—A. I met them afterward. I met Martin Dinkelspiel.

Q. I mean that morning.—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see them?—A. No. I met him in the anteroom. I was in a great hurry that morning to get over to court.

Q. In fact, it was quite a hurried-up proceeding, was it not?—A. It was not. It was deliberated for approximately a month before we took any steps.

Q. How long did you stay in the presence of the respondent when you filed the petition and asked for the receivership?—A. I should say approximately one half hour.

Q. That was the time when you told him about Mr. Stephens' attitude?—A. Yes; that is correct.

Q. Did Mr. Stephens make any statement about it?—A. He did.

Q. What was it?—A. He told Judge Louderback that, in his opinion, it was absolutely necessary that something be done, and that he thought that the appointment of a receiver would be a wise thing to do.

Q. You remember that language?—A. Not exactly. I remember it in effect.

Q. What was it? What did he say?—A. I do not recall his exact words.

Q. Stephens did not represent himself there that day as representing the firm, the Prudential Holding Co., did he?—A. He told Judge Louderback that he was the vice president of the Prudential Holding Co.

Q. That is not the question I asked you. I asked you if he represented to the respondent at that time that he was representing the firm, the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. Not strictly in the sense of representing it; no.

Q. Did he claim that he was authorized to represent them?—A. He did not.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. That is all.

The witness retired from the stand.

EXAMINATION OF DAVID K. BYERS

Mr. LINFORTH. Please call David K. Byers.

David K. Byers, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. HANLEY:

Q. Let us have your name, your business, and your residence.—A. David K. Byers; San Francisco, Calif.; secretary and accountant, Western Coast Engineering Co.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Please speak louder.

By Mr. HANLEY:

Q. Were you employed at any time as an auditor for the Prudential Holding Co.?—A. I was.

Q. Who employed you?—A. Mr. Beck, the president.

Q. Where is Mr. Beck?—A. To my last knowledge, in Mexico City.

Q. Did he, at the time he employed you, hand you what purported to be a balance sheet of that company as of December 31, 1930?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, we object.

The WITNESS. He did.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. It is wholly immaterial in this proceeding what Mr. Beck did with this employee of his company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the theory of counsel in offering this testimony?

Mr. HANLEY. The theory is this: We wish to show by this witness that the officers of the Prudential Holding Co., when they employed the auditor, and at the present time, had a stuffed condition of alleged assets, that a balance sheet would not be a balance sheet, that it would not tally; that it practically had no assets, that it was a bankrupt corporation right up to the hilt, and that all it had was a few hundred dollars in bank; that it had hypothecated one piece of property on top of another; that it had made one deed of trust and a second deed of trust; that the officers of the company had decamped with the money; and that Beck had taken the money, after the first officer had died; that this man worked for 2 years and ascertained each and all of those facts. We can go down the balance sheet from the beginning to the end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be quicker to have the witness answer the question than to have the explanation of counsel. Let the witness go ahead and answer.

Mr. HANLEY. I will ask the reporter to read the last question.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. Did he, at the time he employed you, hand you what purported to be a balance sheet of that company as of December 31, 1930?—A. He did.

By Mr. HANLEY:

Q. What assets, if any, did you find in that company?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We object. If this be admissible, we will have to go in and try the whole case of whether or not the Prudential Holding Co. was or was not in fact insolvent, and the only inquiry here is as to the conduct of the respondent with reference to the petition filed, and not with respect to the actual assets of the company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is in issue here, but that it is more or less unimportant. Might not the Chair suggest to counsel to confine himself to the issue as closely as possible, and go along with the evidence?

Mr. HANLEY. We are trying to do that and do it expeditiously. It is alleged that this was a million-dollar corporation. It is alleged that they did so-and-so and so-and-so. Now I am going to show the real condition of this alleged, mythical corporation of some millions of dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is overruled.

By Mr. HANLEY:

Q. What did you find, if anything, with reference to its assets, as given to you by the president?—A. Owing to the condition of the accounts, it was impossible to determine any definite values to any of their assets. The accounts they showed me in most cases could not be supported by any evidence supporting any values whatsoever; and with regard to the depreciation of the properties which they entered on their books, they never had any authentic appraisal made.

The president of the company would simply add the values, depreciate the values, and have them entered on the books. Insofar as their operations since their inception, they always ran at a heavy loss, their operating expense was very heavy, their trades in real estate and stocks always showed a big loss to the corporation; and in later days, when I attempted to find deeds of trust or stock certificates supporting the assets as they appeared in their ledgers, they were not there, and I never was given a satisfactory explanation as to where they disappeared to.

Q. Was the property mortgaged and second mortgaged?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you, during the 2 years you were connected with the company, ever able to get from anyone connected with the company an intelligent statement or set-up of the assets or the liabilities?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we object to that question as being leading. We object to the line of testimony because, insofar as we have undertaken to develop the evidence, and as far as we think it can be developed, the issues are these, that the respondent took jurisdiction of this matter when, as a matter of fact, he had no jurisdiction under the law. No hearing was given to the defendant, and then later on the matter went into the bankruptcy court, and this proceeding in equity was then dismissed, and the same parties were appointed receiver and attorney, respectively, in the bankruptcy court. Without regard to the condition of the business, the point is, in the first instance, a matter of jurisdiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The managers on the part of the House insist that the court had no jurisdiction in the matter at all?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And regardless of the condition?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is right. That issue was never touched by anybody. We are going to have to go over this case. We cannot afford to take the testimony of this auditor. We would have to have an opportunity to check up on that case, and see whether, with all respect to this witness, the witness' testimony is correct or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will permit this question to be answered, but other questions along this line will be subject to objection by the managers on the part of the House.

The reporter repeated the pending question as follows:

Q. Were you, during the 2 years you were connected with the company, ever able to get from anyone connected with the company an intelligent statement or set-up of the assets of the liabilities?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, in order to get the record straight, we respectfully request that the question and answer be stricken from the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is overruled.

By Mr. HANLEY:

Q. Were you ever paid for your services?—A. No, sir.

Mr. HANLEY. That is all. Cross-examine.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Mr. Byers, you have no personal knowledge of the assets of this corporation, have you?—A. I have not actually seen the assets.

Q. You have no personal knowledge of what assets this corporation had, have you?—A. I have personal knowledge of the values.

Q. If you have never seen the assets, how can you tell anything about their values?—A. For the reason that as to all the operations reported on there was always heavy loss.

Q. All the railroads in the country would be valueless according to that system, would they not?

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, I submit these questions are all argumentative. Counsel should not argue with the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On cross-examination, counsel has a good deal of latitude.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You were with the company 2 years, were you not?—A. I was not permanently with them. I was merely visiting.

Q. You only visited this company?—A. My arrangement with the president was that I was to come over and supervise and assist the bookkeeper.

Q. You were not the bookkeeper?—A. Oh, no.

Q. You supervised? How often did you get there?—A. Three and four times a week; sometimes less than that.

Q. And during all the time you were coming there, 3 or 4 times a week, it was a going concern, was it not?—A. The doors were open; yes, sir.

Q. I said, "It was a going concern."—A. Yes.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further questions? If not, the witness will be excused.

(The witness retired from the stand.)

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, there are several witnesses whom we have in attendance whose testimony would be merely cumulative. Due to the stress under which the Senate is working, with emergency measures and the like, we have concluded not to call those witnesses, and I take it that there will be no reflection, so far as the honorable Senate is concerned, for our not doing so, having brought them this distance to testify. If that is correct, I am now prepared to announce that we have one short witness, who will not take longer than 10 minutes, if we conclude to call him, and then the respondent; and then we will be prepared to rest. Mr. President, with this statement, I would appreciate it very much if the honorable Senators could see their way clear at this time to take a recess until tomorrow morning.

RECESS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, take a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p.m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 23, 1933, at 10 o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The Senate, pursuant to the order for the recess entered on Saturday, May 20, resumed legislative session.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5480) to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Edward J. Hughes, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true photostatic copy of House Resolution No. 55, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of the State of Illinois. Done at the city of Springfield this 19th day of May A.D. 1933.

[SEAL]

EDWARD J. HUGHES,
Secretary of State.

House Resolution 55

Whereas hundreds of thousands of depositors in State and National banks throughout the State of Illinois, and millions of depositors in banks throughout the Nation, have their moneys tied up in closed banks; and

Whereas heretofore only a small percentage of such deposits has been paid by some of the closed banks to the depositors at great cost and expense to the depositors on account of exorbitant fees paid to receivers and attorneys for receivers; and

Whereas in order to reestablish the confidence of the people at large in the State and Nation and to restore confidence in banks and bankers, as well as to stimulate business in this State and Nation, it is of vital importance that some Federal agency be created to take over all the assets and liabilities of closed banks in the State and Nation and pay all the depositors in said closed banks 100 cents on the dollar: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That this body urgently request the Congress of the United States at its present session to enact such legislation and make such appropriations as may be necessary to put into effect the suggestions contained herein; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this preamble and resolution be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, and to each Senator and Congressman from Illinois.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth General Assembly of the State of Illinois on May 17, 1933.

CHAS. P. CUSEY,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to enact laws providing for the use of ethyl alcohol in all motor fuels

Whereas at present low prices it is impossible for farmers to meet insurance, interest, and taxes, and a continuation of this condition will result not only in depriving the majority of farmers of their farms and life savings but in making impossible any substantial improvement in general economic conditions; and

Whereas the only real solution to this situation lies in an increased demand, market, and price for farm products; and

Whereas legislation providing that motor fuel must be blended with alcohol made from farm products grown in this country would increase the demand and price for farm products; and

Whereas the blending of gasoline with alcohol made from farm products has proved to be a more efficient motor fuel than that now in use, and would result in placing this country on an import rather than on an export basis and would greatly increase the price of farm products; and

Whereas 14 foreign countries have already passed legislation requiring such blending of motor fuels: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass a law providing that all petroleum products used as a fuel in internal-combustion engines shall be blended with ethyl alcohol made from agricultural products grown within the United States; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Representative and Senator from Wisconsin.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.

R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.

JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a cablegram embodying a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, as follows:

HONOLULU, May 21, 1933.

HON. JOHN N. GARNER,

President Senate, Washington, D.C.:

We have the honor to transmit the following concurrent resolution unanimously adopted this day by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

"Whereas it has come to the attention of this legislature through items in the public press and otherwise that action is contemplated in Washington toward the amendment of the Hawaiian organic act removing the 3-year residence qualification for the Governor of Hawaii; and

"Whereas it is well known that there are among those who have resided in this Territory during the preceding 3 years numerous men of the Democratic Party who are fully and ably qualified for this high office; and

"Whereas it is also the firm conviction of this legislature that it would result most unfairly and unfortunately for the Territory should a nonresident of necessity unfamiliar with local conditions and problems be appointed to this office; and

"Whereas the threatened procedure would be absolutely contrary to all principles of American self-government, in the fulfillment of which principles this Territory has heretofore given an excellent account of itself: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii, seventeenth regular session (the house of representatives concurring), That on behalf of the people of this Territory this legislature earnestly protests against any action by the Congress of the United States of America toward the elimination of the 3-year residence qualification for the Governor of this Territory; and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States of America, to each of the two Houses of Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii."

GEO. P. COOKE,
President of the Senate.

HERBERT N. AHUNA,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Galveston Boosters' Club and the Kiwanis Club, both of Galveston; the Chambers of Commerce of Buffalo, Dalhart, and Hearne; the board of directors of the Lamar County Chamber of Commerce; and the Commissioners' Courts of the Counties of Galveston, McCulloch, and Wood, all in the State of Texas, endorsing the program of President Roosevelt and favoring the inauguration of a public-works program for unemployment relief providing highway construction in the State of Texas, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Hope Council, No. 1, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Washington, D.C., favoring the prompt passage of House bill 4114, the so-called "Dies bill", establishing a fixed quota pertaining to the immigration of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by John A. Hadley Chapter, No. 3, Eighth Army Corps Association of the United States, Los Angeles, Calif., protesting against the curtailment or elimination of pensions of Spanish-American War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present resolutions adopted by the mayor and City Council of Brockton, Mass., favoring the further study of veterans' legislation toward the end of a favorable adjustment, and ask that they be printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF BROCKTON,
COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
In Common Council, May 4, 1933.

Whereas it has come to the attention of the mayor and City Council of the City of Brockton that unwarranted misery and suffering will be caused disabled veterans of the Spanish-American and World Wars due to the operation of the act to curtail current expenses of benefits to war veterans recently enacted by the Federal Government, including many veterans who incurred their disabilities or disease in line of duty while in the active military service; and

Whereas the reduction in benefits from the Federal Government will compel many beneficiaries to apply to our local relief agencies to enable their families to obtain sufficient sustenance, thereby shifting the burden of providing for ex-soldiers from the National Government to the local government, thus departing from the established custom which has been in existence since the days of the Revolutionary War that men who served the Federal Government in time of stress should be cared for by the United States; and

Whereas this council believes that these unwarranted and drastic cuts in compensation now being paid to veterans does not meet with the approval of the American public in general, and believing that if the matter was brought to the personal attention of the President of the United States that immediate legislation would be enacted to bring about a more equitable and fair adjustment of veterans' benefits: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the mayor and City Council of the City of Brockton hereby goes on record in favor of a study of the entire matter of veterans' legislation in the hope that such study will bring about a favorable adjustment to the end that no veteran suffering from a disability incurred in line of duty while in the active military and naval service of the United States shall be called upon to bear a greater sacrifice than other classes of the American public, bearing in mind the hardships and tribulations that they endured during the period of war; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, United States Senators from Massachusetts, and the Member of the United States House of Representatives from this district.

In common council May 4, 1933, passed and sent up for concurrence.

HAROLD C. BYRAM, Clerk.

In board of aldermen May 8, 1933, passed in concurrence.

J. ALBERT SULLIVAN, Clerk.

Approved May 11, 1933.

THE FOREIGN DEBT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions I have just received from the John Boyle O'Reilly Club, of West Newton, Mass., in opposition to cancellation or further reduction of foreign war debts due the American people.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,

United States Senator, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The resolutions which follow were adopted by a unanimous vote at a meeting of the John Boyle O'Reilly Club, which was held at West Newton, Mass., on Wednesday evening, May 10.

We have been directed to forward the resolutions to you for your information and consideration. The members hope that you will take a firm stand against the further reduction or cancellation of foreign war debts.

Respectfully yours,

TIMOTHY O'CONNELL, Chairman.

PATRICK J. GLEASON, Secretary,

78 Walnut Street, Wellesley Hills, Mass.

Whereas Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, the British Premier, in public utterances while in this country expressed his desire for "international harmony", decried "economic retaliation", and professed the interest of himself and his Government in world peace and unity; and

Whereas the Government of which Mr. MacDonald is head has been and is carrying on a relentless economic war against the people of the Irish Free State; and

Whereas the British Government declines to submit to an independent tribunal Britain's claim to Irish land annuities and rejects with scorn Ireland's demand for restitution of overtaxation of more than £360,000,000, which, according to the finding of the Irish Financial Relations Committee, a body appointed by Britain, the Government in London has wrung from the taxpayers of Ireland since 1801: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we draw the attention of our National Government in Washington and of our fellow citizens generally to this striking difference between Mr. MacDonald's amicable statements and the belligerent attitude of his Government toward the people of the 26 counties of Ireland, known as the "Irish Free State"; and be it

Resolved, That we brand as insincere the statements of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald regarding "economic harmony" and "world peace", and that we declare his disapproval of "economic retaliation" is contradicted by the attempt of his Government to throttle the people of the Irish Free State by economic aggression; and be it also

Resolved, That as loyal citizens sincerely interested in the welfare of the United States, we request the Members of both Houses of Congress to oppose the cancellation or further reduction of foreign war debts due to the American people, because cancellation or downward revision of those debts would transfer Europe's burden to the shoulders of American taxpayers of the present time and of generations to come; and we exhort our fellow citizens generally to prevent any such ruinous development by vigilantly guarding their rights and vigorously asserting their claim to what belongs to them.

CAPITAL STRUCTURE OF THE RAILROADS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred a communication from Massachusetts Lodge, No. 229, of the Brotherhood of Railroad Clerks, urging that the capital structure of the railroads be revised.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS,

FREIGHT HANDLERS, EXPRESS AND STATION EMPLOYEES,

COMMONWEALTH LODGE, No. 229,
Worcester, Mass., May 15, 1933.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,

Senator from Massachusetts, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you on behalf of the members of Commonwealth Lodge, No. 229, of Brotherhood of Railroad Clerks relative to the railroad legislation now pending before Congress.

We are given to understand that the main purpose of this legislation is to effect economy on the railroads. We are informed that the means to attain this end will be by dismissing thousands of employees who are now at work.

In view of the fact that the Government has been doing all within its power to provide jobs for some of the people who are now out of work, does it seem logical to now proceed to throw out those who now have work?

It is said that the financial structure of the railroads must be protected and made secure. With that we agree, but we ask in all sincerity if you think that labor should bear all the burden.

We are firmly of the opinion that the capital structure of the railroads should be revised and that this is one of the avenues through which economy should be made.

It is conceded by all that the main objective now is to increase the purchasing power of the masses and that now that the skies seem to be brightening it would seem too bad if this proposed law should have the effect of destroying the purchasing power of a large number of railroad employees.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that if the now apparent upturn in business should continue to increase that the added revenue that would flow to the railroads would make it unnecessary for a program so drastic as is now proposed? If this be true, might it not be the part of wisdom to proceed in a less drastic manner and thereby safeguard the jobs of thousands?

We are not unmindful of the superhuman efforts of our President to restore prosperity to the country and the loyal support given him by the Members of Congress. May we take this opportunity to extend to you our sincere appreciation of your assistance in these efforts?

In conclusion may we presume to suggest that you give this matter your careful consideration to the end that those who are now enjoying the blessing of peace and contentment derived from the fruits of their labor may be allowed to continue to do so?

Yours sincerely,

[SEAL]

J. A. McCUM, President.

NAVAL AND MARINE HOSPITALS AT CHELSEA, MASS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions I have just received from the secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the United States Naval Hospital and the United States Marine Hospital at Chelsea.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions relative to the United States Naval Hospital and the United States Marine Hospital at Chelsea

Whereas the United States Naval Hospital and the United States Marine Hospital in the city of Chelsea have for many years rendered invaluable service in the care and treatment of veterans and employees of the Federal Government and are equipped with excellent medical and surgical facilities and apparatus and skilled personnel; and

Whereas said hospitals have established a notable record for efficient and humanitarian work in this section of the United States, and have made an indelible impression upon the citizens of our Commonwealth for the admirable service rendered during a long period of years: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the senate respectfully petitions the President of the United States, in the interests of the public health and convenience, to continue these hospitals as necessary institutions of our Federal Government in the performance of the efficient and humanitarian functions for which they are especially adapted and fitted, because of location, equipment, and personnel, as clearly demonstrated by their long record of public service; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded forthwith by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Members thereof representing this Commonwealth.

In senate, adopted, May 11, 1933.

A true copy. Attest:

IRVING N. HAYDEN, Clerk.

F. W. COOK,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S.Res. 82) authorizing a further expenditure in connection with the impeachment trial of Judge Harold Louderback, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DILL, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1580) to relieve the existing national emergency in relation to interstate railroad transportation, and to amend sections 5, 15a, and 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 87) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1581) to amend the act approved July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 1005), authorizing commissioners or members of international tribunals to administer oaths, etc., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 88) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. VANDENBERG:

A bill (S. 1740) to extend certain benefits of the Public Health Service to certain seamen, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NYE:

A bill (S. 1741) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 1742) granting consent of Congress to Ernest N. Hutchinson, Otto A. Case, and A. C. Martin to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Deception Pass between Whidby Island and Fidalgo Island in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 1743) authorizing the extension of time for the payment of governmental fees in the nature of purchase price payable to the United States Government under applications for commutations of homestead entries, the purchase of timber lands; and the purchase of coal lands of the United States; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 1744) enabling certain farmers and fruit growers to receive the benefits of the Federal Farm Loan Act and amendments thereto and the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 1745) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Umpqua River at or near Reedsport, Douglas County, Oreg.;

A bill (S. 1746) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Yaquina Bay at or near Newport, Lincoln County, Oreg.;

A bill (S. 1747) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Alsea Bay at or near Walport, Lincoln County, Oreg.;

A bill (S. 1748) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Coos Bay at or near North Bend, Coos County, Oreg.; and

A bill (S. 1749) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Siuslaw River at or near Florence, Lane County, Oreg.; to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC-WORKS BILL

Mr. BARBOUR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 1712, the industrial control and public-works bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. DIETERICH each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to Senate bill 1712, the industrial control and public-works bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF BANKING

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the pending amendment to the banking bill is my proposal dealing with the immediate application of an insurance formula. The mutual savings banks have requested that the amendment be changed to permit them to qualify within the amendment.

The entire amendment has now been canvassed on both sides of the Senate by a number of Members of the Senate, and a final reprint, in conclusive form, is now available. I ask unanimous consent that this final print, identified as printed on May 15, 1933, be the pending amendment to the bill, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. VANDENBERG to the bill (S. 1631) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of Federal Reserve banks and of national banking associations, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes, viz:

On page 45, after line 3, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 12C. (a) There is hereby created a Temporary Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Fund (hereinafter referred to as the 'Fund'), which shall become operative on July 1, 1933, and whose duty it shall be to insure deposits as hereinafter provided until July 1, 1934.

"(b) Each member bank licensed before July 1, 1933, by the Secretary of the Treasury, pursuant to the authority vested in him by the proclamation of the President issued March 10, 1933, shall, on or before July 1, 1933, become a member of the Fund; each member bank so licensed after such date, and each State bank or trust company which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System after such date, shall, upon being so licensed or so admitted to membership, become a member of the Fund; and any State bank or trust company and/or mutual savings bank which is not a member of the Federal Reserve System may, upon application therefor, become a member of the Fund on or before January 1, 1934, if such application is accompanied by a certificate of the State banking authority that such State bank or trust company or mutual savings bank is, on the date of such application, solvent with respect to its unrestricted deposits.

"(c) The Fund shall insure the amounts owed to each of the depositors of each of its members, but not to exceed $2,500 in the case of any one depositor; but the provisions of this section shall not apply to any impounded deposit or any impounded portion thereof. Any restrictions heretofore or hereafter proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury shall not render a deposit ineligible for insurance.

"(d) Each member of the Fund which shall become a member on or before July 1, 1933, shall file with the Fund on or before such date, a certified statement under oath showing the number of its depositors and the total amount of its deposits as of June 15, 1933, which are eligible for insurance under this section, together with a certified check in an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of the total amount of the deposits so certified; and each member bank, State bank, and trust company which shall become a member of the Fund after July 1, 1933, shall at the time of its admission to membership file with the Fund such a statement showing the number of its depositors and the total amount of its deposits as of the 15th day of the month preceding the month in which it was so admitted, which are eligible for insurance under this section, together with a certified check in an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of the total amount of the deposits so certified. A similar statement shall be filed by each such member on January 1, 1934, showing the number of its depositors and the total amount of its deposits as of December 15, 1933, which are eligible for such insurance, together with a certified check in an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of the increase, if any, in the total amount of such deposits since the date covered by the statement filed upon its admission to membership in the Fund.

"(e) If at any time prior to July 1, 1934, the Fund requires additional funds with which to meet its obligations under this section, each member of the Fund shall be subject to one additional assessment only in an amount not exceeding the total amount theretofore paid to the Fund by such member.

"(f) During the period that deposits are insured under this section, no member of the Fund shall pay interest at a rate in excess of 2½ percent per annum on the amount of any of its deposits so insured.

"(g) Whenever any member of the Fund shall have been closed by the appropriate legal authorities, the Fund shall pay to the depositors of such member as soon as possible thereafter the amount of their deposits on the date of such closing which are insured under this section. After such payment the Fund shall be subrogated to all rights against the closed bank of the owners of such insured deposits and shall be entitled to receive the same dividends from the proceeds of the assets of such closed bank as would have been payable to each such depositor with respect to his insured deposit.

"(h) In the event that the Fund shall be unable to pay any of its obligations, when due, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. If any such advances are made by the Secretary of the Treasury, they shall be subsequently reimbursed to the Treasury by the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation by means of a special annual assessment on the members of the Fund of one fourth of 1 percent of the total insured deposits of such members on January 1, 1934, which the corporation is hereby authorized to collect until such time as such advances shall have been fully reimbursed, but no such assessment shall be made after the expiration of 10 years after July 1, 1934.

"(i) In the event that the Fund shall pay all of its obligations without recourse to the provisions of subsection (h) of this section, any balance remaining in the Fund on July 1, 1934, shall be transferred to the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation and credited to its deposit insurance account.

"(j) The Fund shall be a body corporate with power to adopt and use a corporate seal; to make contracts; to sue and be sued, complain and defend in any court of law or equity, State or Federal; to appoint by its board of directors, which shall consist of the members of the Federal Reserve Board, such officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out the powers granted to the Fund by this section, to define their duties, fix their compensation, require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers or employees; to prescribe by its board of directors bylaws, not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed; and to exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers or agents, all powers specifically granted by this section and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted. No member of the board of directors of the Fund shall receive any additional compensation for his services as such member.

"(k) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000, which shall be made immediately available to the Fund for the purpose of paying any of its expenses or obligations.

"(l) All functions of the Fund shall cease on July 1, 1934; except that it may proceed to collect any liquidating dividends to which it may be entitled under subsection (g) of this section. The net proceeds of all such collections after July 1, 1934, shall be paid to the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation for credit to its deposit insurance account, unless there is a balance due the Treasury under subsection (h) of this section, in which event such collections shall first be paid into the Treasury to the extent of such balance."

MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION COMMISSION

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the temporary absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I desire to propose the following order. It meets with his approval, and I should like to have it entered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chair appoints the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] as a member of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of the Senator from Missouri, Mr. Hawes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the order read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chair appoints the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]—

Mr. NORRIS. That is far enough. That is not an order. The Chair has not appointed him. We cannot say what the Chair has done. As a matter of fact, the Chair has not done anything of the kind. It does not make it any stronger if we pass the resolution, if it might be called that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is a vacancy on the Commission due to the retirement of former Senator Hawes, of Missouri. This is an order I want the Chair himself to make. It does not require a vote. It is simply an order to be made, and I have requested it in the absence of the Senator from Arkansas, at his request.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not objecting to the appointment of the Senator from Nevada to fill the vacancy. We are trying to vote an order through the Senate when the order says, "The Chair appoints the Senator from Nevada", and so forth. If it is desired to have the Senate do it, I have no objection.

Mr. McNARY. It is not necessary for the Senate to do it. It is an order prepared for the Chair to make himself in his own way. It does not require action of the Senate at all. I simply sent it to the Chair to have it entered as his order.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Chair wants to do that, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] as a member of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of the Senator from Missouri, Mr. Hawes.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Chair! [Laughter.]

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, before we leave the subject, if I can have just a moment for the purpose, I should like to explain the order of the Chair and its significance at this time.

The executive Commission to enforce the Migratory Bird Treaty Act is an important body. A special meeting of the Commission has been called for tomorrow at 11:30. There is a vacancy on the Commission, created by the resignation from the Senate of Senator Hawes, and the powers that be are very anxious to have the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] fill that vacancy.

Probably there is no one in the Senate as well qualified to take that place as the Senator from Nevada. He is very much in earnest about the work of conservation and is very well qualified for it and can and will be present at the meeting tomorrow. That is why there was some haste in getting this appointment through—because during the last few days a very important program has been laid out by several conservationists in different parts of the country that will be seriously considered tomorrow by the Commission and, I hope, will be approved.

PROTECTION OF INVESTORS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present a conference report which was adopted in the House today. I should like to have it considered now. I do not think it will lead to any debate.

The report presented by Mr. FLETCHER is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5480) to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I

"SHORT TITLE

"SECTION 1. This title may be cited as the 'Securities Act of 1933.'

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2. When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires—

"(1) The term 'security' means any note, stock, Treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of interest in property, tangible or intangible, or, in general, any instrument commonly known as a security, or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing.

"(2) The term 'person' means an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a trust, any unincorporated organization, or a government or political subdivision thereof. As used in this paragraph the term 'trust' shall include only a trust where the interest or interests of the beneficiary or beneficiaries are evidenced by a security.

or agreements between an issuer and any underwriter. Any security given or delivered with, or as a bonus on account of, any purchase of securities or any other thing, shall be conclusively presumed to constitute a part of the subject of such purchase and to have been sold for value. The issue or transfer of a right or privilege, when originally issued or transferred with a security, giving the holder of such security the right to convert such security into another security of the same issuer or of another person, or giving a right to subscribe to another security of the same issuer or of another person, which right cannot be exercised until some future date, shall not be deemed to be a sale of such other security; but the issue or transfer of such other security upon the exercise of such right of conversion or subscription shall be deemed a sale of such other security.

"(4) The term 'issuer' means every person who issues or proposes to issue any security or who guarantees a security either as to principal or income; except that with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors (or persons performing similar functions) or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term 'issuer' means the person or persons performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which such securities are issued; and except that with respect to equipment-trust certificates or like securities, the term 'issuer' means the person by whom the equipment or property is or is to be used.

"(5) The term 'Commission' means the Federal Trade Commission.

"(6) The term 'Territory' means Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, and the insular possessions of the United States.

"(7) The term 'interstate commerce' means trade or commerce in securities or any transportation or communication relating thereto among the several States or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State or other Territory, or between any foreign country and any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or within the District of Columbia.

"(8) The term 'registration statement' means the statement provided for in section 6, and includes any amendment thereto and any report, document, or memorandum accompanying such statement or incorporated therein by reference.

"(9) The term 'write' or 'written' shall include printed, lithographed, or any means of graphic communication.

"(10) The term 'prospectus' means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication, written or by radio, which offers any security for sale; except that (a) a communication shall not be deemed a prospectus if it is proved that prior to such communication a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 was received, by the person to whom the communication was made, from the person making such communication or his principal, and (b) a notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication in respect of a security shall not be deemed to be a prospectus if it states from whom a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 may be obtained and, in addition, does no more than identify the security, state the price thereof, and state by whom orders will be executed.

"(11) The term 'underwriter' means any person who has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or sells for an issuer in connection with, the distribution of any security, or participates or has a direct or indirect participation in any such undertaking, or participates or has a participation in the direct or indirect underwriting of any such undertaking; but such term shall not include a person whose interest is limited to a commission from an underwriter or dealer not in excess of the usual and customary distributors' or sellers' commission. As used in this paragraph the term 'issuer' shall include, in addition to an issuer, any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer.

"(12) The term 'dealer' means any person who engages either for all or part of his time, directly or indirectly, as agent, broker, or principal, in the business of offering, buying, selling, or otherwise dealing or trading in securities issued by another person.

"EXEMPTED SECURITIES"

"Sec. 3. (a) Except as hereinafter expressly provided, the provisions of this title shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities:

"(1) Any security which, prior to or within 60 days after the enactment of this title, has been sold or disposed of by the issuer or bona fide offered to the public, but this exemption shall not apply to any new offering of any such security by an issuer or underwriter subsequent to such 60 days;

"(2) Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State of the United States, or by any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or by any public instrumentality of one or more States or Territories exercising an essential governmental function, or by any corporation created and controlled or supervised by and acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States, or by any national bank, or by any banking institution organized under the laws of any State or Territory, the business of which is substantially confined to banking and is supervised by the State or Territorial banking commission or similar official; or any security issued by or representing an interest in or a direct obligation of a Federal Reserve bank;

"(3) Any note, draft, bill of exchange, or banker's acceptance which arises out of a current transaction or the proceeds of which have been or are to be used for current transactions, and which has a maturity at the time of issuance of not exceeding 9 months, exclusive of days of grace, or any renewal thereof the maturity of which is likewise limited;

"(4) Any security issued by a corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, educational, benevolent, fraternal, charitable, or reformatory purposes and not for pecuniary profit, and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any person, private stockholder, or individual;

"(5) Any security issued by a building and loan association, homestead association, savings and loan association, or similar institution, substantially all the business of which is confined to the making of loans to members (but the foregoing exemption shall not apply with respect to any such security where the issuer takes from the total amount paid or deposited by the purchaser, by way of any fee, cash value, or other device whatsoever, either upon termination of the investment at maturity or before maturity, an aggregate amount in excess of 3 percent of the face value of such security), or any security issued by a farmers' cooperative association as defined in paragraphs (12), (13), and (14) of section 103 of the Revenue Act of 1932;

"(6) Any security issued by a common carrier which is subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended;

"(7) Certificates issued by a receiver or by a trustee in bankruptcy, with the approval of the court;

"(8) Any insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract or optional annuity contract, issued by a corporation subject to the supervision of the insurance commissioner, bank commissioner, or any agency or officer performing like functions, of any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia.

"(b) The Commission may from time to time by its rules and regulations, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed therein, add any class of securities to the securities exempted as provided in this section, if it finds that the enforcement of this title with respect to such securities is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors by reason of the small amount in-involved or the limited character of the public offering; but no issue of securities shall be exempted under this subsection where the aggregate amount at which such issue is offered to the public exceeds $100,000.

"EXEMPTED TRANSACTIONS"

"Sec. 4. The provisions of section 5 shall not apply to any of the following transactions:

"(1) Transactions by any person other than an issuer, underwriter, or dealer; transactions by an issuer not with or through an underwriter and not involving any public offering; or transactions by a dealer (including an underwriter no longer acting as an underwriter in respect of the security involved in such transaction), except transactions within 1 year after the last date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public by the issuer or by or through an underwriter (excluding in the computation of such year any time during which a stop order issued under sec. 8 is in effect as to the security), and except transactions as to securities constituting the whole or a part of an unsold allotment to or subscription by such dealer as a participant in the distribution of such securities by the issuer or by or through an underwriter.

"(2) Brokers' transactions, executed upon customers' orders on any exchange or in the open or counter market, but not the solicitation of such orders.

"(3) The issuance of a security of a person exchanged by it with its existing security holders exclusively, where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly in connection with such exchange; or the issuance of securities to the existing security holders or other existing creditors of a corporation in the process of a bona-fide reorganization of such corporation under the supervision of any court, either in exchange for the securities of such security holders or claims of such creditors or partly for cash and partly in exchange for the securities or claims of such security holders or creditors.

"PROHIBITIONS RELATING TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND THE MAILS"

"Sec. 5. (a) Unless a registration statement is in effect as to a security, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to sell or offer to buy such security through the use or medium of any prospectus or otherwise; or

"(2) to carry or cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce, by any means or instruments of transportation, any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to carry or transmit any prospectus relating to any security registered under this title, unless such prospectus meets the requirements of section 10; or

"(2) to carry or to cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale, unless accompanied or preceded by a prospectus that meets the requirements of section 10.

"(c) The provisions of this section relating to the use of the mails shall not apply to the sale of any security where the issue of which it is a part is sold only to persons resident within a single State or Territory, where the issuer of such securities is a person resident and doing business within, or, if a corporation, incorporated by and doing business within, such State or Territory.

"REGISTRATION OF SECURITIES AND SIGNING OF REGISTRATION STATEMENT"

"Sec. 6. (a) Any security may be registered with the Commission under the terms and conditions hereinafter provided, by filing a registration statement in triplicate, at least one of which shall be signed by each issuer, its principal executive officer or officers, its principal financial officer, its comptroller or principal accounting officer, and the majority of its board of directors or persons performing similar functions (or, if there is no board of directors or persons performing similar functions, by the majority of the persons or board having the power of management of the issuer), and in case the issuer is a foreign or territorial person by its duly authorized representative in the United States; except that when such registration statement relates to a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, it need be signed only by the underwriter of such security. Signatures of all such persons when written on the said registration statements shall be presumed to have been so written by authority of the person whose signature is so affixed and the burden of proof, in the event such authority shall be denied, shall be upon the party denying the same. The affixing of any signature without the authority of the purported signer shall constitute a violation of this title. A registration statement shall be deemed effective only as to the securities specified therein as proposed to be offered.

"(b) At the time of filing a registration statement the applicant shall pay to the Commission a fee of one one-hundredth of 1 percent of the maximum aggregate price at which such securities are proposed to be offered, but in no case shall such fee be less than $25.

"(c) The filing with the Commission of a registration statement, or of an amendment to a registration statement, shall be deemed to have taken place upon the receipt thereof, but the filing of a registration statement shall not be deemed to have taken place unless it is accompanied by a United States postal money order or a certified bank check or cash for the amount of the fee required under subsection (b).

"(d) The information contained in or filed with any registration statement shall be made available to the public under such regulations as the Commission may prescribe, and copies thereof, photostatic or otherwise, shall be furnished to every applicant at such reasonable charge as the commission may prescribe.

"(e) No registration statement may be filed within the first 40 days following the enactment of this act.

"INFORMATION REQUIRED IN REGISTERED STATEMENT

"SEC. 7. The registration statement, when relating to a security other than a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the information, and be accompanied by the documents, specified in schedule A, and when relating to a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the information, and be accompanied by the documents, specified in schedule B; except that the Commission may by rules or regulations provide that any such information or document need not be included in respect of any class of issuers or securities if it finds that the requirement of such information or document is inapplicable to such class and that disclosure fully adequate for the protection of investors is otherwise required to be included within the registration statement. If any accountant, engineer, or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him, is named as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement, or is named as having prepared or certified a report or valuation for use in connection with the registration statement, the written consent of such person shall be filed with the registration statement. If any such person is named as having prepared or certified a report or valuation (other than a public official document or statement) which is used in connection with the registration statement, but is not named as having prepared or certified such report or valuation for use in connection with the registration statement, the written consent of such person shall be filed with the registration statement unless the Commission dispenses with such filing as impracticable or as involving undue hardship on the person filing the registration statement. Any such registration statement shall contain such other information, and be accompanied by such other documents, as the Commission may by rules or regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"TAKING EFFECT OF REGISTRATION STATEMENTS AND AMENDMENTS THEREOF

"SEC. 8. (a) The effective date of a registration statement shall be the twentieth day after the filing thereof, except as hereinafter provided, and except that in case of securities of any foreign public authority, which has continued the full service of its obligations in the United States, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the refunding of obligations payable in the United States, the registration statement shall become effective 7 days after the filing thereof. If any amendment to any such statement is filed prior to the effective date of such statement, the registration statement shall be deemed to have been filed when such amendment was filed; except that an amendment filed with the consent of the Commission, prior to the effective date of the registration statement, or filed pursuant to an order of the Commission, shall be treated as a part of the registration statement.

"(b) If it appears to the Commission that a registration statement is on its face incomplete or inaccurate in any material respect, the Commission may, after notice by personal service or the sending of confirmed telegraphic notice not later than 10 days after the filing of the registration statement, and opportunity for hearing (at a time fixed by the Commission) within 10 days after such notice by personal service or the sending of such telegraphic notice, issue an order prior to the effective date of registration refusing to permit such statement to become effective until it has been amended in accordance with such order. When such statement has been amended in accordance with such order the Commission shall so declare and the registration shall become effective at the time provided in subsection (a) or upon the date of such declaration, whichever date is the later.

"(c) An amendment filed after the effective date of the registration statement, if such amendment, upon its face, appears to the Commission not to be incomplete or inaccurate in any material respect, shall become effective on such date as the Commission may determine, having due regard to the public interest and the protection of investors.

"(d) If it appears to the Commission at any time that the registration statement includes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, the Commission may, after notice by personal service or the sending of confirmed telegraphic notice, and after opportunity for hearing (at a time fixed by the Commission) within 15 days after such notice by personal service or the sending of such telegraphic notice, issue a stop order suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement. When such statement has been amended in accordance with such stop order the Commission shall so declare and thereupon the stop order shall cease to be effective.

"(e) The Commission is hereby empowered to make an examination in any case in order to determine whether a stop order should issue under subsection (d). In making such examination the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it shall have access to and may demand the production of any books and papers of, and may administer oaths and affirmations to and examine, the issuer, underwriter, or any other person, in respect of any matter relevant to the examination, and may, in its discretion, require the production of a balance sheet exhibiting the assets and liabilities of the issuer, or its income statement, or both, to be certified to by a public or certified accountant approved by the Commission. If the issuer or underwriter shall fail to cooperate, or shall obstruct or refuse to permit the making of an examination, such conduct shall be proper ground for the issuance of a stop order.

"(f) Any notice required under this section shall be sent to or served on the issuer, or, in case of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, to or on the underwriter, or, in the case of a foreign or Territorial person, to or on its duly authorized representative in the United States named in the registration statement, properly directed in each case of telegraphic notice to the address given in such statement.

"COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

"SEC. 9. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order of the Commission may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or be set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree, affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

INFORMATION REQUIRED IN PROSPECTUS

"Sec. 10. (a) A prospectus—

"(1) when relating to a security other than a security issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the same statements made in the registration statement, but it need not include the documents referred to in paragraphs (28) to (32) inclusive of schedule A;

"(2) When relating to a security issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof shall contain the same statements made in the registration statement, but it need not include the documents referred to in paragraphs (13) and (14) of schedule B.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)—

"(1) When a prospectus is used more than 13 months after the effective date of the registration statement, the information in the statements contained therein shall be as of a date not more than 12 months prior to such use.

"(2) There may be omitted from any prospectus any of the statements required under such subsection (a) which the Commission may by rules or regulations designate as not being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(3) Any prospectus shall contain such other information as the Commission may by rules or regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(4) In the exercise of its powers under paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, the Commission shall have authority to classify prospectuses according to the nature and circumstances of their use, and, by rules and regulations and subject to such terms and conditions as it shall specify therein, to prescribe as to each class the form and contents which it may find appropriate to such use and consistent with the public interest and the protection of investors.

"(c) The statements or information required to be included in a prospectus by or under authority of subsection (a) or (b), when written, shall be placed in a conspicuous part of the prospectus in type as large as that used generally in the body of the prospectus.

"(d) In any case where a prospectus consists of a radio broadcast, copies thereof shall be filed with the Commission under such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe. The Commission may by rules and regulations require the filing with it of forms of prospectuses used in connection with the sale of securities registered under this title.

"CIVIL LIABILITIES ON ACCOUNT OF FALSE REGISTRATION STATEMENT

"Sec. 11. (a) In case any part of the registration statement, when such part became effective, contained an untrue statement of a material fact or omitted to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, any person acquiring such security (unless it is proved that at the time of such acquisition he knew of such untruth or omission) may, either at law or in equity, in any court of competent jurisdiction, sue—

"(1) every person who signed the registration statement;

"(2) every person who was a director of (or person performing similar functions), or partner in, the issuer at the time of the filing of the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted;

"(3) every person who, with his consent, is named in the registration statement as being or about to become a director, person performing similar functions, or partner;

"(4) every accountant, engineer, or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him, who has with his consent been named as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement, or as having prepared or certified any report or valuation which is used in connection with the registration statement, with respect to the statement in such registration statement, report, or valuation, which purports to have been prepared or certified by him;

"(5) every underwriter with respect to such security.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) no person, other than the issuer, shall be liable as provided therein who shall sustain the burden of proof—

"(1) that before the effective date of the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted (A) he had resigned from or had taken such steps as are permitted by law to resign from, or ceased or refused to act in, every office, capacity, or relationship in which he was described in the registration statement as acting or agreeing to act, and (B) he had advised the Commission and the issuer in writing that he had taken such action and that he would not be responsible for such part of the registration statement; or

"(2) that if such part of the registration statement became effective without his knowledge, upon becoming aware of such fact, he forthwith acted and advised the Commission, in accordance with paragraph (1), and, in addition, gave reasonable public notice that such part of the registration statement had become effective without his knowledge; or

"(3) that (A) as regards any part of the registration statement not purporting to be made on the authority of an expert, and not purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert, and not purporting to be made on the authority of a public official document or statement, he had, after reasonable investigation, reasonable ground to believe, and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading; and (B) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made upon his authority as an expert or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of himself as an expert, (i) he had, after reasonable investigation, reasonable ground to believe, and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, or (ii) such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent his statement as an expert or was not a fair copy of or extract from his report or valuation as an expert; and (C) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made on the authority of an expert (other than himself) or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert (other than himself), he had reasonable ground to believe, and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, and that such part of the registration statement fairly represented the statement of the expert or was a fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation of the expert; and (D) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, he had reasonable ground to believe, and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true, and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, and that such part of the registration statement fairly represented the statement made by the official person or was a fair copy of or extract from the public official document."

"(c) In determining, for the purpose of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section, what constitutes reasonable investigation and reasonable ground for belief, the standard of reasonableness shall be that required of a person occupying a fiduciary relationship.

"(d) If any person becomes an underwriter with respect to the security after the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted has become effective, then for the purposes of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section such part of the registration statement shall be considered as having become effective with respect to such person as of the time when he became an underwriter.

"(e) The suit authorized under subsection (a) may be either (1) to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or (2) for damages if the person suing no longer owns the security.

"(f) All or any one or more of the persons specified in subsection (a) shall be jointly and severally liable, and every person who becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution as in cases of contract from any person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become liable was, and the other was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

"(g) In no case shall the amount recoverable under this section exceed the price at which the security was offered to the public.

"CIVIL LIABILITIES ARISING IN CONNECTION WITH PROSPECTUSES AND COMMUNICATIONS

"SEC. 12. Any person who—

"(1) sells a security in violation of section 5, or

"(2) sells a security (whether or not exempted by the provisions of section 3, other than paragraph (2) of subsection (a) thereof), by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails, by means of a prospectus or oral communication, which includes an untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading (the purchaser not knowing of such untruth or omission), and who shall not sustain the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of such untruth or omission—

"shall be liable to the person purchasing such security from him, who may sue either at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.

"LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

"SEC. 13. No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under section 11 or section 12 (2) unless brought within 2 years after the discovery of the untrue statement or the omission, or after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence, or, if the action is to enforce a liability created under section 12 (1), unless brought within 2 years after the violation upon which it is based. In no event shall any such action be brought to enforce a liability created under section 11 or section 12 (1) more than 10 years after the security was bona fide offered to the public.

"CONTRARY STIPULATIONS VOID

"SEC. 14. Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person acquiring any security to waive compliance with any provision of this title or of the rules and regulations of the Commission shall be void.

"LIABILITY OF CONTROLLING PERSONS

"SEC. 15. Every person who, by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise, or who, pursuant to or in connection with an agreement or understanding with one or more other persons by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise, controls any person liable under section 11 or 12, shall also be liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as such controlled person to any person to whom such controlled person is liable.

"ADDITIONAL REMEDIES

"SEC. 16. The rights and remedies provided by this title shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist at law or in equity.

"FRAUDULENT INTERSTATE TRANSACTIONS

"SEC. 17. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person in the sale of any securities by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or by the use of the mails, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud, or

"(2) to obtain money or property by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading, or

"(3) to engage in any transaction, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon the purchaser.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or by the use of the mails, to publish, give publicity to, or circulate any notice, circular, advertisement, newspaper, article, letter, investment service, or communication which, though not purporting to offer a security for sale, describes such security for a consideration received or to be received, directly or indirectly, from an issuer, underwriter, or dealer, without fully disclosing the receipt, whether past or prospective, of such consideration and the amount thereof.

"(c) The exemptions provided in section 3 shall not apply to the provisions of this section.

"STATE CONTROL OF SECURITIES

"SEC. 18. Nothing in this title shall affect the jurisdiction of the Securities Commission (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, over any security or any person.

"SPECIAL POWERS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 19. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, including rules and regulations governing registration statements and prospectuses for various classes of securities and issues, and defining accounting and trade terms used in this title. Among other things, the Commission shall have authority, for the purposes of this title, to prescribe the form or forms in which required information shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in the balance sheet and earning statement, and the methods to be followed in the preparation of accounts, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or desirable, of consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer; but insofar as they relate to any common carrier subject to the provisions of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to accounts shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under authority of such section 20. The rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe.

"(b) For the purpose of all investigations which, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary and proper for the enforcement of this title, any member of the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it are empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, or other documents which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States or any Territory at any designated place of hearing.

"INJUNCTION AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES

"SEC. 20. (a) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission, either upon complaint or otherwise, that the provisions of this title, or of any rule or regulation prescribed under authority thereof, have been or are about to be violated, it may, in its discretion, either require or permit such person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath, or otherwise, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the subject matter which it believes to be in the public interest to investigate, and may investigate such facts.

"(b) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this title, or of any rule or regulation prescribed under authority thereof, it may in its discretion, bring an action in any district court of the United States, United States court of any Territory, or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General who may, in his discretion, institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this title. Any such criminal proceeding may be brought either in the district wherein the transmittal of the prospectus or security complained of begins, or in the district wherein such prospectus or security is received.

"(c) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, shall also have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this title or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

"HEARINGS BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 21. All hearings shall be public and may be held before the Commission or an officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept.

"JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

"SEC. 22. (a) The district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of offenses and violations under this title and under the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission in respect thereto, and, concurrent with State and Territorial courts, of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by this title. Any such suit or action may be brought in the district wherein the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business, or in the district where the sale took place, if the defendant participated therein, and process in such cases may be served in any other district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No case arising under this title and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States. No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this title brought by or against it in the Supreme Court or such other courts.

"(b) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any person, any of the said United States courts, within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides, upon application by the Commission may issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or one of its examiners designated by it, there to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or there to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and other documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpoena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him, may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"UNLAWFUL REPRESENTATION

"SEC. 23. Neither the fact that the registration statement for a security has been filed or is in effect nor the fact that a stop order is not in effect with respect thereto shall be deemed a finding by the Commission that the registration statement is true and accurate on its face or that it does not contain an untrue statement of fact or omit to state a material fact, or be held to mean that the Commission has in any way passed upon the merits of, or given approval to, such security. It shall be unlawful to make, or cause to be made, to any prospective purchaser any representation contrary to the foregoing provisions of this section.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 24. Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this title, or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission under authority thereof, or any person who willfully, in a registration statement filed under this title, makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"JURISDICTION OF OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES OVER SECURITIES

"SEC. 25. Nothing in this title shall relieve any person from submitting to the respective supervisory units of the Government of the United States information, reports, or other documents that are now or may hereafter be required by any provision of law.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 26. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SCHEDULE A

"(1) The name under which the issuer is doing or intends to do business;

"(2) the name of the State or other sovereign power under which the issuer is organized;

"(3) the location of the issuer's principal business office, and if the issuer is a foreign or Territorial person, the name and address of its agent in the United States authorized to receive notice;

"(4) the names and addresses of the directors or persons performing similar functions, and the chief executive, financial and accounting officers, chosen or to be chosen if the issuer be a corporation, association, trust, or other entity; of all partners, if the issuer be a partnership; and of the issuer, if the issuer be an individual; and of the promoters in the case of a business to be formed, or formed within 2 years prior to the filing of the registration statement;

"(5) the names and addresses of the underwriters;

"(6) the names and addresses of all persons, if any, owning of record or beneficially, if known, more than 10 percent of any class of stock of the issuer, or more than 10 percent in the aggregate of the outstanding stock of the issuer as of a date within 20 days prior to the filing of the registration statement;

"(7) the amount of securities of the issuer held by any person specified in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of this schedule, as of a date within 20 days prior to the filing of the registration statement, and, if possible, as of 1 year prior thereto, and the amount of the securities, for which the registration statement is filed, to which such persons have indicated their intention to subscribe;

"(8) the general character of the business actually transacted or to be transacted by the issuer;

"(9) a statement of the capitalization of the issuer, including the authorized and outstanding amounts of its capital stock and the proportion thereof paid up, the number and classes of shares in which such capital stock is divided, par value thereof, or if it has no par value, the stated or assigned value thereof, a description of the respective voting rights, preferences, conversion and exchange rights, rights to dividends, profits, or capital of each class, with respect to each other class, including the retirement and liquidation rights or values thereof;

"(10) a statement of the securities, if any, covered by options outstanding or to be created in connection with the security to be offered, together with the names and addresses of all persons, if any, to be allotted more than 10 percent in the aggregate of such options;

"(11) the amount of capital stock of each class issued or included in the shares of stock to be offered;

"(12) the amount of the funded debt outstanding and to be created by the security to be offered, with a brief description of the date, maturity, and character of such debt, rate of interest, character of amortization provisions, and the security, if any, therefor. If substitution of any security is permissible, a summarized statement of the conditions under which such substitution is permitted. If substitution is permissible without notice, a specific statement to that effect;

"(13) the specific purposes in detail and the approximate amounts to be devoted to such purposes, so far as determinable, for which the security to be offered is to supply funds, and if the funds are to be raised in part from other sources, the amounts thereof and the sources thereof shall be stated;

"(14) the remuneration, paid or estimated to be paid, by the issuer or its predecessor, directly or indirectly, during the past year and ensuing year to (a) the directors or persons performing similar functions, and (b) its officers and other persons, naming them wherever such remuneration exceeded $25,000 during any such year;

"(15) the estimated net proceeds to be derived from the security to be offered;

"(16) the price at which it is proposed that the security shall be offered to the public or the method by which such price is computed and any variation therefrom at which any portion of such security is proposed to be offered to any persons or classes of persons, other than the underwriters, naming them or specifying the class. A variation in price may be proposed prior to the date of the public offering of the security, but the Commission shall immediately be notified of such variation;

"(17) all commissions or discounts paid or to be paid, directly or indirectly, by the issuer to the underwriters in respect of the sale of the security to be offered. Commissions shall include all cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value, paid, to be set aside, disposed of, or understandings with or for the benefit of any other persons in which any underwriter is interested, made, in connection with the sale of such security. A commission paid or to be paid in connection with the sale of such security by a person in which the issuer has an interest or which is controlled or directed by, or under common control with, the issuer shall be deemed to have been paid by the issuer. Where any such commission is paid, the amount of such commission paid to each underwriter shall be stated;

"(18) the amount or estimated amounts, itemized in reasonable detail, of expenses, other than commissions specified in paragraph (17) of this schedule, incurred or borne by or for the account of the issuer in connection with the sale of the security to be offered or properly chargeable thereto, including legal, engineering, certification, authentication, and other charges;

"(19) the net proceeds derived from any security sold by the issuer during the 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement, the price at which such security was offered to the public, and the names of the principal underwriters of such security;

"(20) any amount paid within 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement or intended to be paid to any promoter and the consideration for any such payment;

"(21) the names and addresses of the vendors and the purchase price of any property, or goodwill, acquired or to be acquired, not in the ordinary course of business, which is to be defrayed in whole or in part from the proceeds of the security to be offered, the amount of any commission payable to any person in connection with such acquisition, and the name or names of such person or persons, together with any expense incurred or to be incurred in connection with such acquisition, including the cost of borrowing money to finance such acquisition;

"(22) full particulars of the nature and extent of the interest, if any, of every director, principal executive officer, and of every stockholder holding more than 10 percent of any class of stock or more than 10 percent in the aggregate of the stock of the issuer, in any property acquired, not in the ordinary course of business of the issuer, within 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement or proposed to be acquired at such date;

"(23) the names and addresses of counsel who have passed on the legality of the issue;

"(24) dates of and parties to, and the general effect concisely stated of every material contract made, not in the ordinary course of business, which contract is to be executed in whole or in part at or after the filing of the registration statement or which contract has been made not more than 2 years before such filing. Any management contract or contract providing for special bonuses or profit-sharing arrangements, and every material patent or contract for a material patent right, and every contract by or with a public-utility company or an affiliate thereof, providing for the giving or receiving of technical or financial advice or service (if such contract may involve a charge to any party thereto at a rate in excess of $2,500 per year in cash or securities or anything else of value), shall be deemed a material contract;

"(25) a balance sheet as of a date not more than 90 days prior to the date of the filing of the registration statement showing all of the assets of the issuer, the nature and cost thereof, whenever determinable, in such detail and in such form as the Commission shall prescribe (with intangible items segregated), including any loan in excess of $20,000 to any officer, director, stockholder or person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer. All the liabilities of the issuer in such detail and such form as the Commission shall prescribe, including surplus of the issuer showing how and from what sources such surplus was created, all as of a date not more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement. If such statement be not certified by an independent public or certified accountant, in addition to the balance sheet required to be submitted under this schedule, a similar detailed balance sheet of the assets and liabilities of the issuer, certified by an independent public or certified accountant, of a date not more than 1 year prior to the filing of the registration statement, shall be submitted;

"(26) a profit and loss statement of the issuer showing earnings and income, the nature and source thereof, and the expenses and fixed charges in such detail and such form as the Commission shall prescribe for the latest fiscal year for which such statement is available and for the 2 preceding fiscal years, year by year, or, if such issuer has been in actual business for less than 3 years, then for such time as the issuer has been in actual business, year by year. If the date of the filing of the registration statement is more than 6 months after the close of the last fiscal year, a statement from such closing date to the latest practicable date. Such statement shall show what the practice of the issuer has been during the 3 years or lesser period as to the character of the charges, dividends, or other distributions made against its various surplus accounts, and as to depreciation, depletion, and maintenance charges, in such detail and form as the Commission shall prescribe, and if stock dividends or avails from the sale of rights have been credited to income, they shall be shown separately with a statement of the basis upon which the credit is computed. Such statement shall also differentiate between any recurring and nonrecurring income and between any investment and operating income. Such statement shall be certified by an independent public or certified accountant;

"(27) if the proceeds, or any part of the proceeds, of the security to be issued is to be applied directly or indirectly to the purchase of any business, a profit and loss statement of such business certified by an independent public or certified accountant, meeting the requirements of paragraph (26) of this schedule, for the 3 preceding fiscal years, together with a balance sheet, similarly certified, of such business, meeting the requirements of paragraph (25) of this schedule of a date not more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement or at the date such business was acquired by the issuer if the business was acquired by the issuer more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement;

"(28) a copy of any agreement or agreements (or if identical agreements are used, the forms thereof) made with any underwriter, including all contracts and agreements referred to in paragraph (17) of this schedule;

"(29) a copy of the opinion or opinions of counsel in respect to the legality of the issue, with a translation of such opinion, when necessary, into the English language;

"(30) a copy of all material contracts referred to in paragraph (24) of this schedule, but no disclosure shall be required of any portion of any such contract if the Commission determines that disclosure of such portion would impair the value of the contract and would not be necessary for the protection of investors;

"(31) unless previously filed and registered under the provisions of this title, and brought up-to-date, (a) a copy of its articles of incorporation, with all amendments thereof and of its existing bylaws or instruments corresponding thereto, whatever the name, if the issuer be a corporation; (b) copy of all instruments by which the trust is created or declared, if the issuer is a trust; (c) a copy of its articles of partnership or association and all other papers pertaining to its organization, if the issuer is a partnership, unincorporated association, joint-stock company, or any other form of organization; and

"(32) a copy of the underlying agreements or indentures affecting any stock, bonds, or debentures offered or to be offered.

"In case of certificates of deposit, voting trust certificates, collateral trust certificates, certificates of interest or shares in unincorporated investment trusts, equipment trust certificates, interim or other receipts for certificates, and like securities, the Commission shall establish rules and regulations requiring the submission of information of a like character applicable to such cases, together with such other information as it may deem appropriate and necessary regarding the character, financial or otherwise, of the actual issuer of the securities and/or the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager.

" SCHEDULE B

"(1) Name of borrowing government or subdivision thereof;

"(2) specific purposes in detail and the approximate amounts to be devoted to such purposes, so far as determinable, for which the security to be offered is to supply funds, and if the funds are to be raised in part from other sources, the amounts thereof and the sources thereof, shall be stated;

"(3) the amount of the funded debt and the estimated amount of the floating debt outstanding and to be created by the security to be offered, excluding intergovernmental debt, and a brief description of the date, maturity, character of such debt, rate of interest, character of amortization provisions, and the security, if any, therefor. If substitution of any security is permissible, a statement of the conditions under which such substitution is permitted. If substitution is permissible without notice, a specific statement to that effect;

"(4) whether or not the issuer or its predecessor has, within a period of 20 years prior to the filing of the registration statement, defaulted on the principal or interest of any external security, excluding intergovernmental debt, and, if so, the date, amount, and circumstances of such default, and the terms of the succeeding arrangement, if any;

"(5) the receipts, classified by source, and the expenditures, classified by purpose, in such detail and form as the Commission shall prescribe for the latest fiscal year for which such information is available and the 2 preceding fiscal years, year by year;

"(6) the names and addresses of the underwriters;

"(7) the name and address of its authorized agent, if any, in the United States;

"(8) the estimated net proceeds to be derived from the sale in the United States of the security to be offered;

"(9) the price at which it is proposed that the security shall be offered in the United States to the public or the method by which such price is computed. A variation in price may be proposed prior to the date of the public offering of the security, but the Commission shall immediately be notified of such variation;

"(10) all commissions paid or to be paid, directly or indirectly, by the issuer to the underwriters in respect of the sale of the security to be offered. Commissions shall include all cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value, paid, to be set aside, disposed of, or understandings with or for the benefit of any other persons in which the underwriter is interested, made, in connection with the sale of such security. Where any such commission is paid, the amount of such commission paid to each underwriter shall be stated;

"(11) the amount or estimated amounts, itemized in reasonable detail, of expenses, other than the commissions specified in paragraph (10) of this schedule, incurred or borne by or for the account of the issuer in connection with the sale of the security to be offered or properly chargeable thereto, including legal, engineering, certification, and other charges;

"(12) the names and addresses of counsel who have passed upon the legality of the issue;

"(13) a copy of any agreement or agreements made with any underwriter governing the sale of the security within the United States; and

"(14) an agreement of the issuer to furnish a copy of the opinion or opinions of counsel in respect to the legality of the issue, with a translation, where necessary, into the English language. Such opinion shall set out in full all laws, decrees, ordinances, or other acts of Government under which the issue of such security has been authorized.

"TITLE II

"SEC. 201. For the purpose of protecting, conserving, and advancing the interests of the holders of foreign securities in default, there is hereby created a body corporate with the name 'Corporation of Foreign Security Holders' (herein called the 'Corporation'). The principal office of the Corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but there may be established agencies or branch offices in any city or cities of the United States under rules and regulations prescribed by the board of directors.

"SEC. 202. The control and management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of 6 directors, who shall be appointed and hold office in the following manner: As soon as practicable after the date this act takes effect the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter in this title called 'Commission') shall appoint six directors, and shall designate a chairman and a vice chairman from among their number. After the directors designated as chairman and vice chairman cease to be directors, their successors as chairman and vice chairman shall be elected by the board of directors itself. Of the directors first appointed, two shall continue in office for a term of 2 years, two for a term of 4 years, and two for a term of 6 years, from the date this act takes effect, the term of each to be designated by the Commission at the time of appointment. Their successors shall be appointed by the Commission, each for a term of 6 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of such predecessor. No person shall be eligible to serve as a director who within 5 years preceding has had any interest, direct or indirect, in any corporation, company, partnership, bank, or association which has sold, or offered for sale, any foreign securities. The office of a director shall be vacated if the board of directors shall at a meeting specially convened for that purpose by resolution passed by a majority of at least two thirds of the board of directors, remove such member from office, provided that the member whom it is proposed to remove shall have 7 days' notice sent to him of such meeting and that he may be heard.

"SEC. 203. The Corporation shall have power to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal; to make contracts; to lease such real estate as may be necessary for the transaction of its business; to sue and be sued, to complain and to defend, in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal; to require from trustees, financial agents, or dealers in foreign securities information relative to the original or present holders of foreign securities and such other information as may be required and to issue subpoenas therefor; to take over the functions of any fiscal and paying agents of any foreign securities in default; to borrow money for the purposes of this title, and to pledge as collateral for such loans any securities deposited with the corporation pursuant to this title; by and with the consent and approval of the Commission to select, employ, and fix the compensation of officers, directors, members of committees, employees, attorneys, and agents of the Corporation, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers or employees of the United States; to define their authority and duties, require bonds of them and fix the penalties thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents; and to prescribe, amend, and repeal, by its board of directors, bylaws, rules, and regulations governing the manner in which its general business may be conducted and the powers granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed, together with provisions for such committees and the functions thereof as the board of directors may deem necessary for facilitating its business under this title. The board of directors of the Corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid.

"SEC. 204. The board of directors may—

"(1) Convene meetings of holders of foreign securities.

"(2) Invite the deposit and undertake the custody of foreign securities which have defaulted in the payment either of principal or interest, and issue receipts or certificates in the place of securities so deposited.

"(3) Appoint committees from the directors of the Corporation and/or all other persons to represent holders of any class or classes of foreign securities which have defaulted in the payment either of principal or interest and determine and regulate the functions of such committees. The chairman and vice chairman of the board of directors shall be ex officio chairman and vice chairman of each committee.

"(4) Negotiate and carry out, or assist in negotiating and carrying out, arrangements for the resumption of payments due or in arrears in respect of any foreign securities in default or for rearranging the terms on which such securities may in future be held or for converting and exchanging the same for new securities or for any other object in relation thereto; and under this paragraph any plan or agreement made with respect to such securities shall be binding upon depositors, providing that the consent of holders resident in the United States of 60 percent of the securities deposited with the Corporation shall be obtained.

"(5) Undertake, superintend, or take part in the collection and application of funds derived from foreign securities which come into the possession of or under the control or management of the Corporation.

"(6) Collect, preserve, publish, circulate, and render available in readily accessible form, when deemed essential or necessary, documents, statistics, reports, and information of all kinds in respect of foreign securities, including particularly records of foreign external securities in default and records of the progress made toward the payment of past-due obligations.

"(7) Take such steps as it may deem expedient with the view of securing the adoption of clear and simple forms of foreign securities and just and sound principles in the conditions and terms thereof.

"(8) Generally, act in the name and on behalf of the holders of foreign securities the care or representation of whose interests may be entrusted to the Corporation; conserve and protect the rights and interests of holders of foreign securities issued, sold, or owned in the United States; adopt measures for the protection, vindication, and preservation or reservation of the rights and interests of holders of foreign securities either on any default in or on breach or contemplated breach of the conditions on which such foreign securities may have been issued, or otherwise; obtain for such holders such legal and other assistance and advice as the board of directors may deem expedient; and do all such other things as are incident or conducive to the attainment of the above objects.

"SEC. 205. The board of directors shall cause accounts to be kept of all matters relating to or connected with the transactions and business of the Corporation, and cause a general account and balance sheet of the Corporation to be made out in each year, and cause all accounts to be audited by one or more auditors who shall examine the same and report thereon to the board of directors.

"SEC. 206. The Corporation shall make, print, and make public an annual report of its operations during each year, send a copy thereof, together with a copy of the account and balance sheet and auditor's report, to the Commission and to both Houses of Congress, and provide one copy of such report but not more than one on the application of any person and on receipt of a sum not exceeding $1: Provided, That the board of directors in its discretion may distribute copies gratuitously.

"SEC. 207. The Corporation may in its discretion levy charges, assessed on a pro-rata basis, on the holders of foreign securities deposited with it: Provided, That any charge levied at the time of depositing securities with the Corporation shall not exceed one fifth of 1 percent of the face value of such securities: Provided further, That any additional charges shall bear a close relationship to the cost of operations and negotiations including those enumerated in sections 203 and 204 and shall not exceed 1 percent of the face value of such securities.

"SEC. 208. The Corporation may receive subscriptions from any person, foundation with a public purpose, or agency of the United States Government, and such subscriptions may, in the discretion of the board of directors, be treated as loans repayable when and as the board of directors shall determine.

"SEC. 209. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to loan out of its funds not to exceed $75,000 for the use of the Corporation.

"SEC. 210. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this title, it shall be unlawful for, and nothing in this title shall be taken or construed as permitting or authorizing, the Corporation in this title created, or any committee of said Corporation, or any person or persons acting for or representing or purporting to represent it—

"(a) to claim or assert or pretend to be acting for or to represent the Department of State or the United States Government;

"(b) to make any statements or representations of any kind to any foreign government or its officials or the officials of any political subdivision of any foreign government that said Corporation or any committee thereof or any individual or individuals connected therewith were speaking or acting for the said Department of State or the United States Government; or

"(c) to do any act directly or indirectly which would interfere with or obstruct or hinder or which might be calculated to obstruct, hinder, or interfere with the policy or policies of the said Department of State or the Government of the United States or any pending or contemplated diplomatic negotiations, arrangements, business or exchanges between the Government of the United States or said Department of State and any foreign government or any political subdivision thereof.

"SEC. 211. This title shall not take effect until the President finds that its taking effect is in the public interest and by proclamation so declares.

"SEC. 212. This title may be cited as the 'Corporation of Foreign Bondholders Act, 1933.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it has become the fixed practice of the Senate in matters of this kind, when they have not been printed, that they go over for the day, so that the Members of the Senate may read them. I ask the Senator to have this report printed and bring it up the first thing tomorrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no rule requiring that; but—
Mr. McNARY. I say, that is the uniform practice of the Senate, and I desire to adhere to that practice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will lie on the table and go over until tomorrow, then.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, MISSOURI-KANSAS

Mr. MCGILL. Mr. President, on the last day when the calendar was under consideration, the Senate passed a bill granting the consent of Congress to a compact or agreement between the States of Kansas and Missouri authorizing the acceptance, on behalf of said States, of title to a certain bridge across the Missouri River for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made a loan to the company constructing the bridge. This is to be a toll bridge. That measure was passed by unanimous consent on the part of the Senate, and a similar measure was passed by the House with the exception of one or two slight amendments which do not alter the effect or meaning of the bill.

On the House measure—which is House Joint Resolution 159, Order of Business 89 of the Senate—we have a unanimous report by the Committee on Commerce favorable to the passage of the measure. I ask unanimous consent at this time that the House joint resolution be considered and passed by the Senate, which will merely have the effect of allowing the Senate bill to lapse.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. Is this toll bridge to be owned by the States or by the company?

Mr. MCGILL. It will be owned and managed by the States of Missouri and Kansas, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 159) granting the consent of Congress to a compact or agreement between the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri authorizing the acceptance for and on behalf of the States of Kansas and Missouri of title to a toll bridge across the Missouri River from a point in Platte County, Mo., to a point at or near Kansas City, in Wyandotte County, Kans., and specifying the conditions thereof, which was read, as follows:

Whereas by an act of Congress approved May 22, 1928, a franchise was granted to the Interstate Bridge Co. for the construction of a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., which has been extended by the acts of March 2, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and which is now owned by the Regional Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, as assignee of the Interstate Bridge Co.; and

Whereas authority has been granted the State Highway Commission of Kansas by an act of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, approved March 24, 1933, and published in the official State paper on March 27, 1933, and to the State Highway Commission of Missouri by an identical act, mutatis mutandis, of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, approved April 17, 1933, to include in the highway systems of the respective States of Kansas and Missouri any toll bridge across any river forming a common boundary between the two States; to join in entering into contracts with the owner of any such toll bridge and with the holders of any bonds issued in connection with the construction of such bridge, by the terms of which the State Highway Commissions of Kansas and Missouri shall maintain, operate, and insure such bridge, and fix and collect and apply tolls thereon, and shall construct, maintain, and operate as free State highways, approaches thereto, and shall make and treat as part of the highway system of their respective States such entire bridge and any part of such approaches lying within their respective States; and to accept conveyance of title to and ownership of any such bridge or part thereof situated within their respective States, subject to any encumbrance against any such bridge and pledge of its tolls previously executed; and

Whereas Regional Bridge Co. has obtained an agreement from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the United States to aid in financing the construction of a bridge under the franchise granted by the act of May 22, 1928, and extensions thereof, under authority of the act of Congress known as the "Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932", by purchasing at par the bonds of Regional Bridge Co., secured by mortgage on such bridge, in the amount of $600,000, upon condition that certain requirements be met and agreed to by the States of Kansas and Missouri; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Kansas and the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, to make effective the acts of their respective legislative bodies herein cited and to meet the requirements imposed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, have each adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas Regional Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, is the owner and holder of a franchise granted by the Congress of the United States to construct (according to plans approved by the War Department of the United States), maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River from a point at or near Kansas City in Wyandotte County, Kans., to a point in Platte County, Mo.; and

"Whereas Regional Bridge Co. desires to commence the construction of such bridge as soon as the same is fully financed; and

"Whereas Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the United States has agreed with Regional Bridge Co. to aid in financing the construction of such bridge, under authority of the act of Congress known as the 'Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932', by purchasing at par the bonds of Regional Bridge Co., secured by mortgage on such bridge, in the amount of $600,000; but

"Whereas Reconstruction Finance Corporation has imposed certain requirements, to be met and agreed to by the States of Missouri and Kansas, as conditions precedent to its purchase of such bonds; and

"Whereas inasmuch as such bridge will form an important link in and improvement to the highway systems of the States of Missouri and Kansas, and will be of benefit and advantage to the citizens of both and the public, and inasmuch as Regional Bridge Co., by resolution duly passed by the unanimous vote of its stockholders, has agreed to transfer and convey such bridge, free of costs, to the State Highway Commissions of Missouri and of Kansas, on behalf of such States of Missouri and Kansas jointly, such conveyance to be made as soon as such mortgage shall have been properly recorded in both Missouri and Kansas, subject to the right of and duty upon Regional Bridge Co. fully to complete the construction of such bridge, it is to the interest and benefit of the States of Missouri and Kansas, and the citizens of both, that the States of Missouri and Kansas meet and agree to the requirements of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as conditions precedent to the purchase of such bonds: Now therefore

"In consideration of the benefits and advantage accruing to the States of Missouri and Kansas and the citizens of both, and in consideration of the adoption of this resolution by both the States of Missouri and Kansas, the States of Missouri and Kansas hereby enter into the following compact and agreement:

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas (the House of Representatives agreeing thereto):

"SECTION 1. Regional Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge across the Missouri River from a point at or near Kansas City, in Wyandotte County, Kans., to a point in Platte County, Mo., according to plans approved by the War Department of the United States; and the said States hereby authorize Regional Bridge Co. to enter upon and use for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating such bridge all necessary lands under water belonging to said States, and the fee to any lands so used shall upon such use be vested in such Regional Bridge Co.

"SEC. 2. The State Highway Commission of Missouri and the State Highway Commission of Kansas shall be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to accept, when tendered by Regional Bridge Co., conveyance of such bridge and franchise therefor to such state highway commission jointly, on behalf of the States of Missouri and Kansas. Such conveyance shall not be in assumption of such mortgage, but shall expressly be subject to such mortgage, and to the right and duty upon Regional Bridge Co. fully to complete the construction of such bridge.

"SEC. 3. The State Highway Commission of Missouri and the State Highway Commission of Kansas shall be, and they, and each of them, hereby are, authorized to maintain, operate, and insure such bridge and to fix and collect tolls thereon and apply such tolls, and to enter into any and all contracts with said Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any other party or parties considered by said highway commissions, or either of them, to be necessary or expedient for or in connection with the proper maintenance, operation, and insurance of such bridge and such fixing, collection, and application of tolls thereon, and to incur joint and several obligations under such contracts; and to construct and maintain, and to enter into any contracts severally with said Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any other party or parties, considered by said highway commissions, or either of them, to be necessary or expedient, for or in connection with the construction and maintenance of approaches to such bridge and roadways leading thereto lying within their respective States. And said highway commissions, and each of them, are further authorized to make and treat as a part of the State highway system of their respective States the entire such bridge and that portion of the approaches thereto lying within their respective States, and to enter into contracts with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other party or parties in respect thereto.

"SEC. 4. Neither the State of Kansas nor the State of Missouri, nor any department or political subdivision thereof, shall construct or cause to be constructed, or grant any right, privilege, or franchise for the construction of, any bridge, ferry, tunnel, or other competing facility across or under the Missouri River within a distance of 5 miles from said bridge, measured along the meanderings of the thread of the stream of the Missouri River, until the construction costs of said bridge, with interest thereon, shall have been fully paid.

"SEC. 5. To the faithful observance of this compact and agreement the States of Missouri and Kansas, by the adoption of this resolution, each pledges its good faith.

"SEC. 6. This compact and agreement shall be in force and take effect from and after its adoption by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, and approval by the Governor of Missouri, and its adoption by the Legislature of the State of Kansas, and approval by the Governor of Kansas, and publication in the official State paper of the State of Kansas, and upon its receiving the consent and approval of the Congress of the United States." Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the aforesaid compact or agreement and to each and every term and provision thereof, and to all agreements to be made pursuant thereto by and between the said States or any agencies, commissions, or public or municipal bodies thereof: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, impair, or diminish any right, power, or jurisdiction of the United States or of any court, department, board, bureau, officer, or official of the United States, over or in regard to any navigable waters, or any commerce between the States or with foreign countries, or any bridge, railroad highway, pier, wharf, or other facility or improvement, or any other person, matter, or thing, forming the subject matter of the aforesaid compact or agreement or otherwise affected by the terms thereof: And provided further, That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution or any part thereof is hereby expressly reserved.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

SELECTION OF A GOVERNOR OF HAWAII (H.DOC. NO. 42)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Congress:

It is particularly necessary to select for the post of Governor of Hawaii a man of experience and vision, who will be regarded by all citizens of the islands as one who will be absolutely impartial in his decisions on matters as to which there may be a difference of local opinion. In making my choice I should like to be free to pick either from the islands themselves or from the entire United States the best man for this post. I request, therefore, suitable legislation temporarily suspending that part of the law which requires the Governor of Hawaii to be an actual resident of the islands.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 22, 1933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The communication will be printed and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT RECORDS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives relating to House bill 4220, which is on the Vice President's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4220) for the protection of Government records, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and Mr. BORAH conferees on the part of the Senate.

OFFICIAL REPORTERS OF DEBATES

Mr. HAYDEN. By direction of the Committee on Printing I report a Senate resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 84) as follows:

Resolved, That James W. Murphy and Percy E. Budlong are hereby appointed Official Reporters for reporting the proceedings and debates of the Senate until further order of the Senate, subject to all the duties and obligations of the contract made with D. F. Murphy, deceased, late reporter of the Senate, and to the supervision and control of the Committee on Printing on behalf of the Senate in all respects therein provided, and to receive payment for such services according to law: Provided, That the contract heretofore made with the late Theodore F. Shuey and said James W. Murphy be considered as terminated by the death of the former on May 18, 1933, and that said James W. Murphy and said Percy E. Budlong be paid for services rendered in reporting the debates and proceedings of the Senate at the rate allowable by law for such services from May 19, 1933, to the date upon which this resolution is agreed to by the Senate, both dates inclusive: Provided further, That in the event of the death of either said James W. Murphy or said Percy E. Budlong during any recess or adjourned period of the Senate, the survivor of them shall discharge all the duties and obligations and be entitled to all the rights and benefits of said contract made with said D. F. Murphy, deceased, and shall receive payment for such services according to law, until further order of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] I ask if that Senator is informed concerning this resolution and what his desire is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will say that the resolution is satisfactory to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HEBERT. With that assurance, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

INSTRUCTION AT MILITARY ACADEMY OF POSHENG YEN

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 76, Senate Joint Resolution 48, admitting a Chinese student to West Point. The joint resolution is in the usual form and is similar to other measures considered in cases of this kind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 48) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Posheng Yen, a citizen of China, was read, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit Posheng Yen to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that Posheng Yen shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction, and that said Posheng Yen shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or in conduct and so recommended by the academic board: Provided further, That in the case of said Posheng Yen the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the nomination of Al W. Hosinski, of Indiana, to be United States marshal for the Northern District of Indiana, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar.

He, also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Norman D. Godbold, of Hawaii, to be first judge, Circuit Court, First Circuit of Hawaii, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of T. Hoyt Davis, of Georgia, to be United States attorney, middle district of Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be placed on the calendar.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

Mr. BRATTON. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report favorably the nomination of Edward B. Doyle, of Georgia, to be United States marshal, middle district of Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] wished me to say to the Senate that he had no objection to the consideration of this nomination, but he did object to a further proceeding which would involve notification to the President. I assume that is the understanding he had with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to confirming the nomination?

There being no objection, the nomination was confirmed.

UNITED STATES ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. KING. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report favorably the nomination of Pat Malloy, of Oklahoma, to be Assistant Attorney General. May I inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island, who is here, representing, as I understand, the leader on the other side, whether there will be any objection to the confirmation of this nomination?

Mr. HEBERT. I am not informed whether the Senator from Oregon would want that nomination to go over, but I take it, from what he said to me, that he would prefer that course to be adopted.

Mr. KING. Very well. I will ask that the nomination go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be placed on the calendar.

THE CALENDAR—THE ADJUTANT GENERAL

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is in order.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of James Fuller McKinley to be The Adjutant General.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is recalled that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] stated that he wished to discuss this nomination before final action was taken upon it. He appears not to be present this afternoon, and I ask that the nomination may go over for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over. That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until immediately following the conclusion of the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment on tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p.m.) the Senate, as in legislative session, took a recess until the conclusion of the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment on Tuesday, May 23, 1933, the hour of meeting of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment being 10 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 22 (legislative day of May 15), 1933

MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Arthur E. Morgan, of Ohio, to be a member of the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority for the term expiring 9 years after May 18, 1933.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Clement L. West, of Omaha, Nebr., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 46, with headquarters at Omaha, Nebr., to fill an existing vacancy.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 22 (legislative day of May 15), 1933

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

Edward B. Doyle to be United States marshal, middle district of Georgia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 22, 1933

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Rev. Thomas Logan Justice, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Kings Mountain, N.C., offered the following prayer:

Omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent God, we bow before Thee this morning amidst all of the variegated circumstances of life, realizing the inability of human strength to discharge many of the duties and responsibilities which devolve upon us; and we beseech that Thou wilt take us close to Thyself as we enter into the opening session of this Congress and let all that is done here today redound to Thy glory and result in the stabilization of all of the departments of life with which men have to do. Bless our President and grant that throughout all this Nation he may be one of the objects of prayer, and all who are associated with him here and in the Senate and everywhere in official authority in this Republic may uphold him and cooperate with him and bring about a glorious realization of optimism and recovery in the various walks in which we find ourselves. Now we pray Thee to cleanse us from all sin, and may the great God of all the earth lead us and have His way and have His will until the day when every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess to the glory of Him who is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. We ask it in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 20, 1933, was read and approved.

CORRECTION

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, there is evidently an omission in the RECORD of Saturday. Something has gone wrong somewhere with it. I propounded a parliamentary inquiry of the Speaker regarding whether a motion to adjourn was a preferential motion, and then made the request that if it were a preferential motion that it be preferred. There is an entire omission in the RECORD about this.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the RECORD will be corrected in that particular.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. One minute, Mr. Speaker. Let us not move quite as fast as that. More than that, the RECORD should show that the Speaker's ruling was against that motion being a preferential one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not make any ruling at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's motion was made after a roll call had been ordered.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Yes; but not a name had been called. That is the point.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if what the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE] says is correct, that Members had not yet begun to respond to their names on such roll call, his motion to adjourn would have been in order; for a motion to adjourn may be made after the yeas and nays are ordered, provided it is made before the roll call has begun (V. Hinds' Precedents 5363). My remembrance was that the roll call had begun and the Clerk had called several names.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. If there had not been a name called, I had the right to offer that motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; the gentleman is correct, and I might add that he is usually correct; and I deem it an honor that I find myself voting with him many times, except on partisan party questions.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. There had not been a name called.

Mr. BLANTON. There are precedents which hold that where the yeas and nays have been ordered, but no Member has yet responded to his name on roll call, that it is deemed that the roll call has not yet begun, and a motion to adjourn would be in order. Our distinguished Speaker is so uniformly correct in his rulings that if he ruled against the gentleman's contention he must have been of the opinion that the roll call had begun.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. The roll call had been ordered, but no names had been called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks several names were called, but there had been no response.

SECURITIES REGULATION BILL

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 5480) to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5480) to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I

"SHORT TITLE

"SECTION 1. This title may be cited as the 'Securities Act of 1933.'

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2. When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires—

"(1) The term 'security' means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment, contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of interest in property, tangible or intangible or, in general, any instrument commonly known as a 'security', or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing.

"(2) The term 'person' means an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a trust, any unincorporated organization, or a government or political subdivision thereof. As used in this paragraph the term 'trust' shall include only a trust where the interest or interests of the beneficiary or beneficiaries are evidenced by a security.

"(3) The term 'sale', 'sell', 'offer to sell', or 'offer for sale' shall include every contract of sale or disposition of, attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy, a security or interest in a security, for value; except that such terms shall not include preliminary negotiations or agreements between an issuer and any underwriter. Any security given or delivered with, or as a bonus on account of, any purchase of securities or any other thing, shall be conclusively presumed to constitute a part of the subject of such purchase and to have been sold for value. The issue or transfer of a right or privilege, when originally issued or transferred with a security, giving the holder of such security the right to convert such security into another security of the same issuer or of another person, or giving a right to subscribe to another security of the same issuer or of another person, which right cannot be exercised until some future date, shall not be deemed to be a sale of such other security; but the issue or transfer of such other security upon the exercise of such right of conversion or subscription shall be deemed a sale of such other security.

"(4) The term 'issuer' means every person who issues or proposes to issue any security or who guarantees a security either as to principal or income; except that with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors (or persons performing similar functions) or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term 'issuer' means the person or persons performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which such securities are issued; and except that with respect to equipment-trust certificates or like securities, the term 'issuer' means the person by whom the equipment or property is or is to be used.

"(5) The term 'Commission' means the Federal Trade Commission.

"(6) The term 'Territory' means Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, and the insular possessions of the United States.

"(7) The term 'interstate commerce' means trade or commerce in securities or any transportation or communication relating thereto among the several States or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State or other Territory, or between any foreign country and any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or within the District of Columbia.

"(8) The term 'registration statement' means the statement provided for in section 6, and includes any amendment thereto and any report, document, or memorandum accompanying such statement or incorporated therein by reference.

"(9) The term 'write' or 'written' shall include printed, lithographed, or any means of graphic communication.

"(10) The term 'prospectus' means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication, written or by radio, which offers any security for sale; except that (a) a communication shall not be deemed a prospectus if it is proved that prior to such communication a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 was received, by the person to whom the communication was made, from the person making such communication or his principal, and (b) a notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication in respect of a security shall not be deemed to be a prospectus if it states from whom a written prospectus meeting the requirements of section 10 may be obtained and, in addition, does no more than identify the security, state the price thereof, and state by whom orders will be executed.

"(11) The term 'underwriter' means any person who has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or sells for an issuer in connection with, the distribution of any security, or participates or has a direct or indirect participation in any such undertaking, or participates or has a participation in the direct or indirect underwriting of any such undertaking; but such term shall not include a person whose interest is limited to a commission from an underwriter or dealer not in excess of the usual and customary distributors' or sellers' commission. As used in this paragraph the term 'issuer' shall include, in addition to an issuer, any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer.

"(12) The term 'dealer' means any person who engages either for all or part of his time, directly or indirectly, as agent, broker, or principal, in the business of offering, buying, selling, or otherwise dealing or trading in securities issued by another person.

"EXEMPTED SECURITIES"

"Sec. 3. (a) Except as hereinafter expressly provided, the provisions of this title shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities:

"(1) Any security which, prior to or within 60 days after the enactment of this title, has been sold or disposed of by the issuer or bona fide offered to the public, but this exemption shall not apply to any new offering of any such security by an issuer or underwriter subsequent to such 60 days;

"(2) Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State of the United States, or by any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or by any public instrumentality of one or more States or Territories exercising an essential governmental function, or by any corporation created and controlled or supervised by and acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States, or by any national bank, or by any banking institution organized under the laws of any State or Territory, the business of which is substantially confined to banking and is supervised by the State or territorial banking commission or similar official, or any security issued by or representing an interest in or a direct obligation of a Federal Reserve bank;

"(3) Any note, draft, bill of exchange, or banker's acceptance which arises out of a current transaction or the proceeds of which have been or are to be used for current transactions, and which has a maturity at the time of issuance of not exceeding 9 months, exclusive of days of grace, or any renewal thereof the maturity of which is likewise limited;

"(4) Any security issued by a corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, educational, benevolent, fraternal, charitable, or reformatory purposes and not for pecuniary profit, and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any person, private stockholder, or individual;

"(5) Any security issued by a building and loan association, homestead association, savings and loan association, or similar institution, substantially all the business of which is confined to the making of loans to members (but the foregoing exemption shall not apply with respect to any such security where the issuer takes from the total amount paid or deposited by the purchaser, by way of any fee, cash value, or other device whatsoever, either upon termination of the investment at maturity or before maturity, an aggregate amount in excess of 3 percent of the face value of such security), or any security issued by a farmers' cooperative association as defined in paragraphs (12), (13), and (14) of section 103 of the Revenue Act of 1932;

"(6) Any security issued by a common carrier which is subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended;

"(7) Certificates issued by a receiver or by a trustee in bankruptcy, with the approval of the court;

"(8) Any insurance or endowment policy or annuity contract or optional annuity contract, issued by a corporation subject to the supervision of the insurance commissioner, bank commissioner, or any agency or officer performing like functions, of any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia.

"(b) The Commission may from time to time by its rules and regulations, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed therein, add any class of securities to the securities exempted as provided in this section, if it finds that the enforcement of this title with respect to such securities is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors by reason of the small amount in-involved or the limited character of the public offering; but no issue of securities shall be exempted under this subsection where the aggregate amount at which such issue is offered to the public exceeds $100,000.

"EXEMPTED TRANSACTIONS

"SEC. 4. The provisions of section 5 shall not apply to any of the following transactions:

"(1) Transactions by any person other than an issuer, underwriter, or dealer; transactions by an issuer not with or through an underwriter and not involving any public offering; or transactions by a dealer (including an underwriter no longer acting as an underwriter in respect of the security involved in such transaction), except transactions within 1 year after the last date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public by the issuer or by or through an underwriter (excluding in the computation of such year any time during which a stop order issued under section 8 is in effect as to the security), and except transactions as to securities constituting the whole or a part of an unsold allotment to or subscription by such dealer as a participant in the distribution of such securities by the issuer or by or through an underwriter.

"(2) Brokers' transactions, executed upon customers' orders on any exchange or in the open or counter market, but not the solicitation of such orders.

"(3) The issuance of a security of a person exchanged by it with its existing security holders exclusively, where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly in connection with such exchange; or the issuance of securities to the existing security holders or other existing creditors of a corporation in the process of a bona fide reorganization of such corporation under the supervision of any court, either in exchange for the securities of such security holders or claims of such creditors or partly for cash and partly in exchange for the securities or claims of such security holders or creditors.

"PROHIBITIONS RELATING TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND THE MAILS

"SEC. 5. (a) Unless a registration statement is in effect as to a security, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to sell or offer to buy such security through the use or medium of any prospectus or otherwise; or

"(2) to carry or cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce, by any means or instruments of transportation, any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to carry or transmit any prospectus relating to any security registered under this title, unless such prospectus meets the requirements of section 10; or

"(2) to carry or to cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale, unless accompanied or preceded by a prospectus that meets the requirements of section 10.

"(c) The provisions of this section relating to the use of the mails shall not apply to the sale of any security where the issue of which it is a part is sold only to persons resident within a single State or Territory, where the issuer of such securities is a person resident and doing business within, or, if a corporation, incorporated by and doing business within, such State or Territory.

"REGISTRATION OF SECURITIES AND SIGNING OF REGISTRATION STATEMENT

"SEC. 6. (a) Any security may be registered with the Commission under the terms and conditions hereinafter provided, by filing a registration statement in triplicate, at least one of which shall be signed by each issuer, its principal executive officer or officers, its principal financial officer, its comptroller or principal accounting officer, and the majority of its board of directors or persons performing similar functions (or, if there is no board of directors or persons performing similar functions, by the majority of the persons or board having the power of management of the issuer), and in case the issuer is a foreign or Territorial person by its duly authorized representative in the United States; except that when such registration statement relates to a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, it need be signed only by the underwriter of such security. Signatures of all such persons when written on the said registration statements shall be presumed to have been so written by authority of the person whose signature is so affixed and the burden of proof, in the event such authority shall be denied, shall be upon the party denying the same. The affixing of any signature without the authority of the purported signer shall constitute a violation of this title. A registration statement shall be deemed effective only as to the securities specified therein as proposed to be offered.

"(b) At the time of filing a registration statement the applicant shall pay to the Commission a fee of one one-hundredth of 1 percent of the maximum aggregate price at which such securities are proposed to be offered, but in no case shall such fee be less than $25.

"(c) The filing with the Commission of a registration statement, or of an amendment to a registration statement, shall be deemed to have taken place upon the receipt thereof, but the filing of a registration statement shall not be deemed to have taken place unless it is accompanied by a United States postal money order or a certified bank check or cash for the amount of the fee required under subsection (b).

"(d) The information contained in or filed with any registration statement shall be made available to the public under such regulations as the Commission may prescribe, and copies thereof, photostatic or otherwise, shall be furnished to every applicant at such reasonable charge as the Commission may prescribe.

"(e) No registration statement may be filed within the first 40 days following the enactment of this act.

"INFORMATION REQUIRED IN REGISTERED STATEMENT

"SEC. 7. The registration statement, when relating to a security other than a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the information and be accompanied by the documents specified in schedule A, and when relating to a security issued by a foreign government, or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the information and be accompanied by the documents specified in schedule B; except that the Commission may by rules or regulations provide that any such information or document need not be included in respect of any class of issuers or securities if it finds that the requirement of such information or document is inapplicable to such class and that disclosure fully adequate for the protection of investors is otherwise required to be included within the registration statement. If any accountant, engineer, or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him is named as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement, or is named as having prepared or certified a report or valuation for use in connection with the registration statement, the written consent of such person shall be filed with the registration statement. If any such person is named as having prepared or certified a report or valuation (other than a public official document or statement) which is used in connection with the registration statement, but is not named as having prepared or certified such report or valuation for use in connection with the registration statement, the written consent of such person shall be filed with the registration statement unless the Commission dispenses with such filing as impracticable or as involving undue hardship on the person filing the registration statement. Any such registration statement shall contain such other information, and be accompanied by such other documents, as the Commission may by rules or regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"TAKING EFFECT OF REGISTRATION STATEMENTS AND AMENDMENTS THERE TO

"SEC. 8. (a) The effective date of a registration statement shall be the twentieth day after the filing thereof, except as hereinafter provided, and except that in case of securities of any foreign public authority, which has continued the full service of its obligations in the United States, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the refunding of obligations payable in the United States, the registration statement shall become effective 7 days after the filing thereof. If any amendment to any such statement is filed prior to the effective date of such statement, the registration statement shall be deemed to have been filed when such amendment was filed; except that an amendment filed with the consent of the Commission, prior to the effective date of the registration statement, or filed pursuant to an order of the Commission, shall be treated as a part of the registration statement.

"(b) If it appears to the Commission that a registration statement is on its face incomplete or inaccurate in any material respect, the Commission may, after notice by personal service or the sending of confirmed telegraphic notice not later than 10 days after the filing of the registration statement, and opportunity for hearing (at a time fixed by the Commission) within 10 days after such notice by personal service or the sending of such telegraphic notice, issue an order prior to the effective date of registration refusing to permit such statement to become effective until it has been amended in accordance with such order. When such statement has been amended in accordance with such order the Commission shall so declare and the registration shall become effective at the time provided in subsection (a) or upon the date of such declaration, whichever date is the later.

"(c) An amendment filed after the effective date of the registration statement, if such amendment, upon its face, appears to the Commission not to be incomplete or inaccurate in any material respect, shall become effective on such date as the Commission may determine, having due regard to the public interest and the protection of investors.

"(d) If it appears to the Commission at any time that the registration statement includes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, the Commission may, after notice by personal service or the sending of confirmed telegraphic notice, and after opportunity for hearing (at a time fixed by the Commission) within 15 days after such notice by personal service or the sending of such telegraphic notice, issue a stop order suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement. When such statement has been amended in accordance with such stop order the Commission shall so declare and thereupon the stop order shall cease to be effective.

"(e) The Commission is hereby empowered to make an examination in any case in order to determine whether a stop order should issue under subsection (d). In making such examination the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it shall have access to and may demand the production of any books and papers of, and may administer oaths and affirmations to and examine, the issuer, underwriter, or any other person, in respect of any matter relevant to the examination, and may, in its discretion, require the production of a balance sheet exhibiting the assets and liabilities of the issuer, or its income statement, or both, to be certified to by a public or certified accountant approved by the Commission. If the issuer or underwriter shall fail to cooperate, or shall obstruct or refuse to permit the making of an examination, such conduct shall be proper ground for the issuance of a stop order.

"(f) Any notice required under this section shall be sent to or served on the issuer, or, in case of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, to or on the underwriter, or, in the case of a foreign or Territorial person, to or on its duly authorized representative in the United States named in the registration statement, properly directed in each case of telegraphic notice to the address given in such statement.

"COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

"SEC. 9. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order of the Commission may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or be set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree, affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

"INFORMATION REQUIRED IN PROSPECTUS

"SEC. 10. (a) A prospectus—

"(1) when relating to a security other than a security issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, shall contain the same statements made in the registration statement, but it need not include the documents referred to in paragraphs (28) to (32), inclusive, of schedule A;

"(2) when relating to a security issued for a foreign government or political subdivision thereof shall contain the same statements made in the registration statement, but it need not include the documents referred to in paragraphs (13) and (14) of schedule B.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)—

"(1) when a prospectus is used more than 13 months after the effective date of the registration statement, the information in the statements contained therein shall be as of a date not more than 12 months prior to such use.

"(2) there may be omitted from any prospectus any of the statements required under such subsection (a) which the Commission may by rules or regulations designate as not being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(3) any prospectus shall contain such other information as the Commission may by rules or regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(4) in the exercise of its powers under paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, the Commission shall have authority to classify prospectuses according to the nature and circumstances of their use, and, by rules and regulations and subject to such terms and conditions as it shall specify therein, to prescribe as to each class the form and contents which it may find appropriate to such use and consistent with the public interest and the protection of investors.

"(c) The statements or information required to be included in a prospectus by or under authority of subsection (a) or (b), when written, shall be placed in a conspicuous part of the prospectus in type as large as that used generally in the body of the prospectus.

"(d) In any case where a prospectus consists of a radio-broadcast, copies thereof shall be filed with the Commission under such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe. The Commission may by rules and regulations require the filing with it of forms of prospectuses used in connection with the sale of securities registered under this title.

"CIVIL LIABILITIES ON ACCOUNT OF FALSE REGISTRATION STATEMENT

"SEC. 11. (a) In case any part of the registration statement, when such part became effective, contained an untrue statement of a material fact or omitted to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, any person acquiring such security (unless it is proved that at the time of such acquisition he knew of such untruth or omission) may, either at law or in equity, in any court of competent jurisdiction, sue—

"(1) every person who signed the registration statement;

"(2) every person who was a director of (or person performing similar functions), or partner in, the issuer at the time of the filing of the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted;

"(3) every person who, with his consent, is named in the registration statement as being or about to become a director, person performing similar functions, or partner;

"(4) every accountant, engineer, or appraiser, or any person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him, who has with his consent been named as having prepared or certified any part of the registration statement, or as having prepared or certified any report or valuation which is used in connection with the registration statement, with respect to the statement in such registration statement, report, or valuation which purports to have been prepared or certified by him;

"(5) every underwriter with respect to such security.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) no person, other than the issuer, shall be liable as provided therein who shall sustain the burden of proof—

"(1) that before the effective date of the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted (A) he had resigned from or had taken such steps as are permitted by law to resign from, or ceased or refused to act in, every office, capacity, or relationship in which he was described in the registration statement as acting or agreeing to act, and (B) he had advised the Commission and the issuer in writing that he had taken such action and that he would not be responsible for such part of the registration statement; or

"(2) that if such part of the registration statement became effective without his knowledge, upon becoming aware of such fact he forthwith acted and advised the Commission, in accordance with paragraph (1), and, in addition, gave reasonable public notice that such part of the registration statement had become effective without his knowledge; or investigation, reasonable ground to believe and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, or (ii) such part of the registration statement did not fairly represent his statement as an expert or was not a fair copy of or extract from his report or valuation as an expert; and (C) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made on the authority of an expert (other than himself) or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert (other than himself), he had reasonable ground to believe and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, and that such part of the registration statement fairly represented the statement of the expert or was a fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation of the expert; and (D) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, he had reasonable ground to believe and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true, and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, and that such part of the registration statement fairly represented the statement made by the official person or was a fair copy of or extract from the public official document.

"(3) that (A) as regards any part of the registration statement not purporting to be made on the authority of an expert, and not purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert, and not purporting to be made on the authority of a public official document or statement, he had, after reasonable investigation, reasonable ground to believe and did believe, at the time such part of the registration statement became effective, that the statements therein were true and that there was no omission to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading; and (B) as regards any part of the registration statement purporting to be made upon his authority as an expert or purporting to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of himself as an expert, (i) he had, after reasonable

"(c) In determining, for the purpose of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section, what constitutes reasonable investigation and reasonable ground for belief, the standard of reasonableness shall be that required of a person occupying a fiduciary relationship.

"(d) If any person becomes an underwriter with respect to the security after the part of the registration statement with respect to which his liability is asserted has become effective, then for the purposes of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section such part of the registration statement shall be considered as having become effective with respect to such person as of the time when he became an underwriter.

"(e) The suit authorized under subsection (a) may be either (1) to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or (2) for damages if the person suing no longer owns the security.

"(f) All or any one or more of the persons specified in subsection (a) shall be jointly and severally liable, and every person who becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution as in cases of contract from any person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become liable was, and the other was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

"(g) In no case shall the amount recoverable under this section exceed the price at which the security was offered to the public.

"CIVIL LIABILITIES ARISING IN CONNECTION WITH PROSPECTUSES AND COMMUNICATIONS

"SEC. 12. Any person who—

"(1) sells a security in violation of section 5, or

"(2) sells a security (whether or not exempted by the provisions of section 3, other than paragraph (2) of subsection (a) thereof), by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails, by means of a prospectus or oral communication, which includes an untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading (the purchaser not knowing of such untruth or omission), and who shall not sustain the burden of proof that he did not know, and in the exercise of reasonable care could not have known, of such untruth or omissions,

"shall be liable to the person purchasing such security from him, who may sue either at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, to recover the consideration paid for such security with interest thereon, less the amount of any income received thereon, upon the tender of such security, or for damages if he no longer owns the security.

"LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

"SEC. 13. No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under section 11 or section 12 (2) unless brought within 2 years after the discovery of the untrue statement or the omission, or after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence, or, if the action is to enforce a liability created under section 12 (1), unless brought within 2 years after the violation upon which it is based. In no event shall any such action be brought to enforce a liability created under section 11 or section 12 (1) more than 10 years after the security was bona fide offered to the public.

"CONTRARY STIPULATIONS VOID

"SEC. 14. Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person acquiring any security to waive compliance with any provision of this title or of the rules and regulations of the Commission shall be void.

"LIABILITY OF CONTROLLING PERSONS

"SEC. 15. Every person who, by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise, or who, pursuant to or in connection with an agreement or understanding with one or more other persons by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise, controls any person liable under section 11 or 12, shall also be liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as such controlled person to any person to whom such controlled person is liable.

"ADDITIONAL REMEDIES

"SEC. 16. The rights and remedies provided by this title shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist at law or in equity.

"FRAUDULENT INTERSTATE TRANSACTIONS

"SEC. 17. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person in the sale of any securities by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or by the use of the mails, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud, or

"(2) to obtain money or property by means of any untrue statement of a material fact or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading, or

"(3) to engage in any transaction, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon the purchaser.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, by the use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or by the use of the mails, to publish, give publicity to, or circulate any notice, circular, advertisement, newspaper, article, letter, investment service, or communication which, though not purporting to offer a security for sale, describes such security for a consideration received or to be received, directly or indirectly, from an issuer, underwriter, or dealer, without fully disclosing the receipt, whether past or prospective, of such consideration and the amount thereof.

"(c) The exemptions provided in section 3 shall not apply to the provisions of this section.

"STATE CONTROL OF SECURITIES

"SEC. 18. Nothing in this title shall affect the jurisdiction of the securities commission (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, over any security or any person.

"SPECIAL POWERS OF COMMISSION

"SEC. 19. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, including rules and regulations governing registration statements and prospectuses for various classes of securities and issuers, and defining accounting and trade terms used in this title. Among other things, the Commission shall have authority, for the purposes of this title, to prescribe the form or forms in which required information shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in the balance sheet and earning statement, and the methods to be followed in the preparation of accounts, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and non-recurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or desirable, of consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer; but insofar as they relate to any common carrier subject to the provisions of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to accounts shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under authority of such section 20. The rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe.

"(b) For the purpose of all investigations which, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary and proper for the enforcement of this title, any member of the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it are empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, or other documents which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States or any Territory at any designated place of hearing.

"INJUNCTIONS AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES

"SEC. 20. (a) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission, either upon complaint or otherwise, that the provisions of this title, or of any rule or regulation prescribed under authority thereof, have been or are about to be violated, it may, in its discretion, either require or permit such person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath, or otherwise, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the subject matter which it believes to be in the public interest to investigate, and may investigate such facts.

"(b) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this title, or of any rule or regulation prescribed under authority thereof, it may in its discretion, bring an action in any district court of the United States, United States court of any Territory, or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General who may, in his discretion, institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this title. Any such criminal proceeding may be brought either in the district wherein the transmittal of the prospectus or security complained of begins, or in the district wherein such prospectus or security is received.

"(c) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, shall also have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this title or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

"HEARINGS BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 21. All hearings shall be public and may be held before the Commission or an officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept.

" JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

"SEC. 22. (a) The district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of offenses and violations under this title and under the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission in respect thereto, and, concurrent with State and Territorial courts, of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by this title. Any such suit or action may be brought in the district wherein the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business, or in the district where the sale took place, if the defendant participated therein, and process in such cases may be served in any other district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No case arising under this title and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States. No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this title brought by or against it in the Supreme Court or such other courts.

"(b) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any person, any of the said United States courts, within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides, upon application by the Commission may issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or one of its examiners designated by it, there to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or there to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and other documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpoena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him, may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

" UNLAWFUL REPRESENTATIONS

"SEC. 23. Neither the fact that the registration statement for a security has been filed or is in effect nor the fact that a stop order is not in effect with respect thereto shall be deemed a finding by the Commission that the registration statement is true and accurate on its face or that it does not contain an untrue statement of fact or omit to state a material fact, or be held to mean that the Commission has in any way passed upon the merits of, or given approval to, such security. It shall be unlawful to make, or cause to be made, to any prospective purchaser any representation contrary to the foregoing provisions of this section.

" PENALTIES

"SEC. 24. Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this title, or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission under authority thereof, or any person who willfully, in a registration statement filed under this title, makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

" JURISDICTION OF OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES OVER SECURITIES

"SEC. 25. Nothing in this title shall relieve any person from submitting to the respective supervisory units of the Government of the United States information, reports, or other documents that are now or may hereafter be required by any provision of law.

" SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 26. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

" SCHEDULE A

"(1) The name under which the issuer is doing or intends to do business;

"(2) the name of the State or other sovereign power under which the issuer is organized;

"(3) the location of the issuer's principal business office, and if the issuer is a foreign or Territorial person, the name and address of its agent in the United States authorized to receive notice;

"(4) the names and addresses of the directors or persons performing similar functions, and the chief executive, financial, and accounting officers, chosen or to be chosen if the issuer be a corporation, association, trust, or other entity; of all partners, if the issuer be a partnership; and of the issuer, if the issuer be an individual; and of the promoters in the case of a business to be formed, or formed within 2 years prior to the filing of the registration statement;

"(5) the names and addresses of the underwriters;

"(6) the names and addresses of all persons, if any, owning of record or beneficially, if known, more than 10 percent of any class of stock of the issuer, or more than 10 percent in the aggregate of the outstanding stock of the issuer as of a date within 20 days prior to the filing of the registration statement;

"(7) the amount of securities of the issuer held by any person specified in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of this schedule, as of a date within 20 days prior to the filing of the registration statement, and, if possible, as of 1 year prior thereto, and the amount of the securities, for which the registration statement is filed, to which such persons have indicated their intention to subscribe;

"(8) the general character of the business actually transacted or to be transacted by the issuer;

"(9) a statement of the capitalization of the issuer, including the authorized and outstanding amounts of its capital stock and the proportion thereof paid up, the number and classes of shares in which such capital stock is divided, par value thereof, or if it has no par value, the stated or assigned value thereof, a description of the respective voting rights, preferences, conversion and exchange rights, rights to dividends, profits, or capital of each class, with respect to each other class, including the retirement and liquidation rights or values thereof;

"(10) a statement of the securities, if any, covered by options outstanding or to be created in connection with the security to be offered, together with the names and addresses of all persons, if any, to be allotted more than 10 percent in the aggregate of such options;

"(11) the amount of capital stock of each class issued or included in the shares of stock to be offered;

"(12) the amount of the funded debt outstanding and to be created by the security to be offered, with a brief description of the date, maturity, and character of such debt, rate of interest, character of amortization provisions, and the security, if any, therefor. If substitution of any security is permissible, a summarized statement of the conditions under which such substitution is permitted. If substitution is permissible without notice, a specific statement to that effect; and if the funds are to be raised in part from other sources, the amounts thereof and the sources thereof, shall be stated;

"(13) the specific purposes in detail and the approximate amounts to be devoted to such purposes, so far as determinable, for which the security to be offered is to supply funds,

"(14) the remuneration, paid or estimated to be paid, by the issuer or its predecessor, directly or indirectly, during the past year and ensuing year to (a) the directors or persons performing similar functions, and (b) its officers and other persons, naming them wherever such remuneration exceeded $25,000 during any such year;

"(15) the estimated net proceeds to be derived from the security to be offered;

"(16) the price at which it is proposed that the security shall be offered to the public or the method by which such price is computed and any variation therefrom at which any portion of such security is proposed to be offered to any persons or classes of persons, other than the underwriters, naming them or specifying the class. A variation in price may be proposed prior to the date of the public offering of the security, but the Commission shall immediately be notified of such variation;

"(17) all commissions or discounts paid or to be paid, directly or indirectly, by the issuer to the underwriters in respect of the sale of the security to be offered. Commissions shall include all cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value, paid, to be set aside, disposed of, or understandings with or for the benefit of any other persons in which any underwriter is interested, made, in connection with the sale of such security. A commission paid or to be paid in connection with the sale of such security by a person in which the issuer has an interest or which is controlled or directed by, or under common control with, the issuer shall be deemed to have been paid by the issuer. Where any such commission is paid, the amount of such commission paid to each underwriter shall be stated;

"(18) the amount or estimated amounts, itemized in reasonable detail, of expenses, other than commissions specified in paragraph (17) of this schedule, incurred or borne by or for the account of the issuer in connection with the sale of the security to be offered or properly chargeable thereto, including legal, engineering, certification, authentication, and other charges;

"(19) the net proceeds derived from any security sold by the issuer during the 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement, the price at which such security was offered to the public, and the names of the principal underwriters of such security;

"(20) any amount paid within 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement or intended to be paid to any promoter and the consideration for any such payment;

"(21) the names and addresses of the vendors and the purchase price of any property, or good will, acquired or to be acquired, not in the ordinary course of business, which is to be defrayed in whole or in part from the proceeds of the security to be offered, the amount of any commission payable to any person in connection with such acquisition, and the name or names of such person or persons, together with any expense incurred or to be incurred in connection with such acquisition, including the cost of borrowing money to finance such acquisition;

"(22) full particulars of the nature and extent of the interest, if any, of every director, principal executive officer, and of every stockholder holding more than 10 percent of any class of stock or more than 10 percent in the aggregate of the stock of the issuer, in any property acquired, not in the ordinary course of business of the issuer, within 2 years preceding the filing of the registration statement or proposed to be acquired at such date;

"(23) the names and addresses of counsel who have passed on the legality of the issue;

"(24) dates of and parties to, and the general effect concisely stated of every material contract made, not in the ordinary course of business, which contract is to be executed in whole or in part at or after the filing of the registration statement or which contract has been made not more than 2 years before such filing. Any management contract or contract providing for special bonuses or profit-sharing arrangements, and every material patent or contract for a material patent right, and every contract by or with a public utility company or an affiliate thereof, providing for the giving or receiving of technical or financial advice or service (if such contract may involve a charge to any party thereto at a rate in excess of $2,500 per year in cash or securities or anything else of value), shall be deemed a material contract;

"(25) a balance sheet as of a date not more than 90 days prior to the date of the filing of the registration statement showing all of the assets of the issuer, the nature and cost thereof, whenever determinable, in such detail and in such form as the Commission shall prescribe (with intangible items segregated), including any loan in excess of $20,000 to any officer, director, stockholder or person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer. All the liabilities of the issuer in such detail and such form as the Commission shall prescribe, including surplus of the issuer showing how and from what sources such surplus was created, all as of a date not more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement. If such statement be not certified by an independent public or certified accountant, in addition to the balance sheet required to be submitted under this schedule, a similar detailed balance sheet of the assets and liabilities of the issuer, certified by an independent public or certified accountant, of a date not more than 1 year prior to the filing of the registration statement, shall be submitted;

"(26) a profit-and-loss statement of the issuer showing earnings and income, the nature and source thereof, and the expenses and fixed charges in such detail and such form as the Commission shall prescribe for the latest fiscal year for which such statement is available and for the 2 preceding fiscal years, year by year, or, if such issuer has been in actual business for less than 3 years, then for such time as the issuer has been in actual business, year by year. If the date of the filing of the registration statement is more than 6 months after the close of the last fiscal year, a statement from such closing date to the latest practicable date. Such statement shall show what the practice of the issuer has been during the 3 years or lesser period as to the character of the charges, dividends or other distributions made against its various surplus accounts, and as to depreciation, depletion, and maintenance charges, in such detail and form as the Commission shall prescribe, and if stock dividends or avails from the sale of rights have been credited to income, they shall be shown separately with a statement of the basis upon which the credit is computed. Such statement shall also differentiate between any recurring and nonrecurring income and between any investment and operating income. Such statement shall be certified by an independent public or certified accountant;

"(27) if the proceeds, or any part of the proceeds, of the security to be issued is to be applied directly or indirectly to the purchase of any business, a profit-and-loss statement of such business, certified by an independent public or certified accountant, meeting the requirements of paragraph (26) of this schedule, for the 3 preceding fiscal years, together with a balance sheet, similarly certified, of such business, meeting the requirements of paragraph (25) of this schedule of a date not more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement or at the date such business was acquired by the issuer if the business was acquired by the issuer more than 90 days prior to the filing of the registration statement;

"(28) a copy of any agreement or agreements (or, if identical agreements are used, the forms thereof) made with any underwriter, including all contracts and agreements referred to in paragraph (17) of this schedule;

"(29) a copy of the opinion or opinions of counsel in respect to the legality of the issue, with a translation of such opinion, when necessary, into the English language;

"(30) a copy of all material contracts referred to in paragraph (24) of this schedule, but no disclosure shall be required of any portion of any such contract if the Commission determines that disclosure of such portion would impair the value of the contract and would not be necessary for the protection of investors;

"(31) unless previously filed and registered under the provisions of this title, and brought up to date, (a) a copy of its articles of incorporation, with all amendments thereof and of its existing bylaws or instruments corresponding thereto, whatever the name, if the issuer be a corporation; (b) copy of all instruments by which the trust is created or declared, if the issuer is a trust; (c) a copy of its articles of partnership or association and all other papers pertaining to its organization, if the issuer is a partnership, unincorporated association, joint-stock company, or any other form of organization; and

"(32) a copy of the underlying agreements or indentures affecting any stock, bonds, or debentures offered or to be offered.

"In case of certificates of deposit, voting trust certificates, collateral trust certificates, certificates of interest or shares in unincorporated investment trusts, equipment trust certificates, interim or other receipts for certificates, and like securities, the Commission shall establish rules and regulations requiring the submission of information of a like character applicable to such cases, together with such other information as it may deem appropriate and necessary regarding the character, financial or otherwise, of the actual issuer of the securities and/or the person performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager.

"SCHEDULE B

"(1) Name of borrowing government or subdivision thereof;

"(2) specific purposes in detail and the approximate amounts to be devoted to such purposes, so far as determinable, for which the security to be offered is to supply funds, and if the funds are to be raised in part from other sources, the amounts thereof and the sources thereof, shall be stated;

"(3) the amount of the funded debt and the estimated amount of the floating debt outstanding and to be created by the security to be offered, excluding intergovernmental debt, and a brief description of the date, maturity, character of such debt, rate of interest, character of amortization provisions, and the security, if any, therefor. If substitution of any security is permissible, a statement of the conditions under which such substitution is permitted. If substitution is permissible without notice, a specific statement to that effect;

"(4) whether or not the issuer or its predecessor has, within a period of 20 years prior to the filing of the registration statement, defaulted on the principal or interest of any external security, excluding intergovernmental debt, and, if so, the date, amount, and circumstances of such default, and the terms of the succeeding arrangement, if any;

"(5) the receipts, classified by source, and the expenditures, classified by purpose, in such detail and form as the Commission shall prescribe for the latest fiscal year for which such information is available and the 2 preceding fiscal years, year by year;

"(6) the names and addresses of the underwriters;

"(7) the name and address of its authorized agent, if any, in the United States;

"(8) the estimated net proceeds to be derived from the sale in the United States of the security to be offered;

"(9) the price at which it is proposed that the security shall be offered in the United States to the public or the method by which such price is computed. A variation in price may be proposed prior to the date of the public offering of the security, but the Commission shall immediately be notified of such variation;

"(10) all commissions paid or to be paid, directly or indirectly, by the issuer to the underwriters in respect of the sale of the security to be offered. Commissions shall include all cash, securities, contracts, or anything else of value, paid, to be set aside, disposed of, or understandings with or for the benefit of any other persons in which the underwriter is interested, made, in connection with the sale of such security. Where any such commission is paid, the amount of such commission paid to each underwriter shall be stated;

"(11) the amount or estimated amounts, itemized in reasonable detail, of expenses, other than the commissions specified in paragraph (10) of this schedule, incurred or borne by or for the account of the issuer in connection with the sale of the security to be offered or properly chargeable thereto, including legal, engineering, certification, and other charges;

"(12) the names and addresses of counsel who have passed upon the legality of the issue;

"(13) a copy of any agreement or agreements made with any underwriter governing the sale of the security within the United States; and

"(14) an agreement of the issuer to furnish a copy of the opinion or opinions of counsel in respect to the legality of the issue, with a translation, where necessary, into the English language. Such opinion shall set out in full all laws, decrees, ordinances, or other acts of government under which the issue of such security has been authorized.

"TITLE II

"SECTION 201. For the purpose of protecting, conserving, and advancing the interests of the holders of foreign securities in default, there is hereby created a body corporate with the name 'Corporation of Foreign Security Holders' (herein called the 'Corporation'). The principal office of the Corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but there may be established agencies or branch offices in any city or cities of the United States under rules and regulations prescribed by the board of directors.

"SEC. 202. The control and management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of 6 directors, who shall be appointed and hold office in the following manner: As soon as practicable after the date this act takes effect the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter in this title called 'Commission') shall appoint six directors, and shall designate a chairman and a vice chairman from among their number. After the directors designated as chairman and vice chairman cease to be directors, their successors as chairman and vice chairman shall be elected by the board of directors itself. Of the directors first appointed, 2 shall continue in office for a term of 2 years, 2 for a term of 4 years, and 2 for a term of 6 years, from the date this act takes effect, the term of each to be designated by the Commission at the time of appointment. Their successors shall be appointed by the Commission, each for a term of 6 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of such predecessor. No person shall be eligible to serve as a director who within the 5 years preceding has had any interest, direct or indirect, in any corporation, company, partnership, bank, or association which has sold, or offered for sale, any foreign securities. The office of a director shall be vacated if the board of directors shall at a meeting specially convened for that purpose by resolution passed by a majority of at least two thirds of the board of directors, remove such member from office, provided that the member whom it is proposed to remove shall have 7 days' notice sent to him of such meeting and that he may be heard.

"SEC. 203. The Corporation shall have power to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal; to make contracts; to lease such real estate as may be necessary for the transaction of its business; to sue and be sued, to complain and to defend, in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal; to require from trustees, financial agents, or dealers in foreign securities information relative to the original or present holders of foreign securities and such other information as may be required and to issue subpoenas therefor; to take over the functions of any fiscal and paying agents of any foreign securities in default; to borrow money for the purposes of this title, and to pledge as collateral for such loans any securities deposited with the Corporation pursuant to this title; by and with the consent and approval of the Commission to select, employ, and fix the compensation of officers, directors, members of committees, employees, attorneys, and agents of the Corporation, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers or employees of the United States; to define their authority and duties, require bonds of them and fix the penalties thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents; and to prescribe, amend, and repeal, by its board of directors, bylaws, rules, and regulations governing the manner in which its general business may be conducted and the powers granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed, together with provisions for such committees and the functions thereof as the board of directors may deem necessary for facilitating its business under this title. The board of directors of the Corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid.

"Sec. 204. The board of directors may—

"(1) Convene meetings of holders of foreign securities.

"(2) Invite the deposit and undertake the custody of foreign securities which have defaulted in the payment either of principal or interest, and issue receipts or certificates in the place of securities so deposited.

"(3) Appoint committees from the directors of the Corporation and/or all other persons to represent holders of any class or classes of foreign securities which have defaulted in the payment either of principal or interest and determine and regulate the functions of such committees. The chairman and vice chairman of the board of directors shall be ex-officio chairman and vice chairman of each committee.

"(4) Negotiate and carry out, or assist in negotiating and carrying out, arrangements for the resumption of payments due or in arrears in respect of any foreign securities in default or for rearranging the terms on which such securities may in future be held or for converting and exchanging the same for new securities or for any other object in relation thereto; and under this paragraph any plan or agreement made with respect to such securities shall be binding upon depositors, providing that the consent of holders resident in the United States of 60 per cent of the securities deposited with the Corporation shall be obtained.

"(5) Undertake, superintend, or take part in the collection and application of funds derived from foreign securities which come into the possession of or under the control or management of the Corporation.

"(6) Collect, preserve, publish, circulate, and render available in readily accessible form, when deemed essential or necessary, documents, statistics, reports, and information of all kinds in respect of foreign securities, including particularly records of foreign external securities in default and records of the progress made toward the payment of past-due obligations.

"(7) Take such steps as it may deem expedient with the view of securing the adoption of clear and simple forms of foreign securities and just and sound principles in the conditions and terms thereof.

"(8) Generally, act in the name and on behalf of the holders of foreign securities the care or representation of whose interests may be entrusted to the Corporation; conserve and protect the rights and interests of holders of foreign securities issued, sold, or owned in the United States; adopt measures for the protection, vindication, and preservation or reservation of the rights and interests of holders of foreign securities either on any default in or on breach or contemplated breach of the conditions on which such foreign securities may have been issued, or otherwise; obtain for such holders such legal and other assistance and advice as the board of directors may deem expedient; and do all such other things as are incident or conducive to the attainment of the above objects.

"Sec. 205. The board of directors shall cause accounts to be kept of all matters relating to or connected with the transactions and business of the Corporation, and cause a general account and balance sheet of the Corporation to be made out in each year, and cause all accounts to be audited by one or more auditors who shall examine the same and report thereon to the board of directors.

"Sec. 206. The Corporation shall make, print, and make public an annual report of its operations during each year, send a copy thereof, together with a copy of the account and balance sheet and auditor's report, to the Commission and to both Houses of Congress, and provide one copy of such report but not more than one on the application of any person and on receipt of a sum not exceeding $1: Provided, That the board of directors in its discretion may distribute copies gratuitously.

"Sec. 207. The Corporation may in its discretion levy charges, assessed on a pro-rata basis, on the holders of foreign securities deposited with it: Provided, That any charge levied at the time of depositing securities with the Corporation shall not exceed one fifth of 1 percent of the face value of such securities: Provided further, That any additional charges shall bear a close relationship to the cost of operations and negotiations including those enumerated in sections 203 and 204 and shall not exceed 1 percent of the face value of such securities.

"Sec. 208. The Corporation may receive subscriptions from any person, foundation with a public purpose, or agency of the United States Government, and such subscriptions may, in the discretion of the board of directors, be treated as loans repayable when and as the board of directors shall determine.

"Sec. 209. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to loan out of its funds not to exceed $75,000 for the use of the Corporation.

"Sec. 210. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this title, it shall be unlawful for, and nothing in this title shall be taken or construed as permitting or authorizing, the Corporation in this title created, or any committee of said Corporation, or any person or persons acting for or representing or purporting to represent it—

"(a) to claim or assert or pretend to be acting for or to represent the Department of State or the United States Government;

"(b) to make any statements or representations of any kind to any foreign government or its officials or the officials of any political subdivision of any foreign government that said Corporation or any committee thereof or any individual or individuals connected therewith were speaking or acting for the said Department of State or the United States Government; or

"(c) to do any act directly or indirectly which would interfere with or obstruct or hinder or which might be calculated to obstruct, hinder, or interfere with the policy or policies of the said Department of State or the Government of the United States or any pending or contemplated diplomatic negotiations, arrangements, business, or exchanges between the Government of the United States or said Department of State and any foreign government or any political subdivision thereof.

"Sec. 211. This title shall not take effect until the President finds that its taking effect is in the public interest and by proclamation so declares.

"Sec. 212. This title may be cited as the 'Corporation of Foreign Bondholders Act, 1933'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H.R.

5480) to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill and the substitute agreed upon by the conferees are noted in the following discussion, except for incidental changes made necessary to harmonize various provisions affected by the agreements reached, and minor and clarifying changes to make clear and effective the administrative procedure provided for and to remove uncertainties.

The House bill did not apply to traffic in securities wholly within the District of Columbia, but the Senate amendment did. This feature was omitted from the House bill upon the basis of a misunderstanding, and is incorporated in the substitute.

The House bill (sec. 2 (11)) and the Senate amendment contained differences as to the definition of the term "underwriter" as used in the act. The substitute amends the definition of underwriter contained in the House bill so as to make clear that a person merely furnishing an underwriter money to enable him to enter into an underwriting agreement is not an underwriter. Persons, however, who participate in any underwriting transaction or who have a direct or indirect participation in such a transaction are deemed to be underwriters. The test is one of participation in the underwriting undertaking rather than that of a mere interest in it.

The House bill (sec. 3 (a) (5)) exempted the securities of building and loan associations and other similar institutions when their business was substantially confined to their members. The Senate amendment limited this exemption by further requiring that these associations must not charge withdrawal or other fees in excess of 2 percent of the face value of the security. This provision in the Senate amendment was accepted with the change of extending the exemption only to institutions that did not charge in excess of 3 percent of the face value of the security by way of a withdrawal fee or otherwise.

The Senate amendment also exempted the securities of farmers' cooperatives. This exemption is incorporated in the substitute.

The Senate amendment provided for an exemption in the case of annuity contracts. The House bill contained no such exemption. The substitute, however, only exempts such contracts when issued by a corporation subject to the supervision of the appropriate State or Territorial governmental agency.

The Senate agreed to the House exemption (sec. 4 (3)) of the issuance of securities to the existing security holders or other existing creditors of a corporation in the process of a bona fide reorganization of such corporation under the supervision of any court. It is clear that under section 3 (a) (1) protective committees even though not under the supervision of a court will not be covered by the act if they have in good faith commenced to solicit deposits of claims or securities within 60 days after the enactment of the act although deposits continue to be solicited after such 60 days.

The House provision (sec. 4 (3)) exempting stock dividends and the sale of stock to stockholders is omitted from the substitute, since stock dividends are exempt without express provision, as they do not constitute a sale, not being given for value. Sales of stock to stockholders become subject to the act unless the stockholders are so small in number that the sale to them does not constitute a public offering. The Senate agreed that the mere exchange with its security holders of one form of security for another by an issuer where no commission or other remuneration is paid, shall be exempt. This exemption is considered necessary to permit certain voluntary readjustment of obligations. Inasmuch as any exchange that involves the payment of a commission of any sort is not exempt, there is no danger of the provision being used for purposes of evasion.

The House provision (sec. 4 (4)) exempting subscriptions for shares prior to incorporation where no expense is incurred or commission paid, is omitted from the substitute. This exemption is unnecessary in view of section 4 (1), which exempts transactions by any person other than an issuer, underwriter, or dealer.

The House bill (sec. 6 (b)) provided that the minimum fee for registration should be $50. The Senate amendment made the minimum fee $25. The provisions of the Senate amendment on this point are contained in the substitute.

The House bill (sec. 8) provided that a registration statement had to be on file with the Commission for 30 days before it became effective. Under the Senate amendment the registration statement became effective upon filing, but the grounds for revocation after filing were considerably broader than those for a stop order under the House bill. In the substitute the registration statement becomes effective only 20 days after filing. This time is sufficient for public scrutiny, while the Commission is expected during this period to make only a preliminary check-up. The stop-order provisions are retained as in the original House measure. Where the security is that of a foreign public authority which has continued the full service of its obligations in the United States and the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the refunding of obligations payable in the United States, the registration statement becomes effective 7 days after the filing of such statement.

The House bill (sec. 9) provided that any review from an order of the Commission should be taken only in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. The Senate amendment permitted these appeals from the Commission's orders to be taken to the appropriate circuit courts of appeal. The substitute embodies this provision. It also, in accordance with phraseology contained in the Senate amendment, makes clear that review over the orders of the Federal Trade Commission shall extend only to questions of law.

A point of difference between the House bill and the Senate amendment concerned the civil liability of persons responsible for the flotation of an issue. The Senate amendment imposed upon the issuer, its directors, its chief executive and financial officers, a liability which might appropriately be denominated as an insurer's liability. They were held liable without regard to whatever care they may have used for the accuracy of the statements made in the registration statement. The House bill, on the other hand, measured liability for these statements in terms of reasonable care, placing upon the defendants the duty, in case they were sued, of proving that they had used reasonable care to assure the accuracy of these statements. The standard by which reasonable care was exemplified was expressed in terms of a fiduciary relationship. A fiduciary under the law is bound to exercise diligence of a type commensurate with the confidence, both as to integrity and competence, that is placed in him. This does not, of course, necessitate that he shall individually perform every duty imposed upon him. Delegation to others of the performance of acts which it is unreasonable to require that the fiduciary shall personally perform is permissible. Especially is this true where the character of the acts involves professional skill or facilities not possessed by the fiduciary himself. In such cases reliance by the fiduciary, if his reliance is reasonable in the light of all the circumstances, is a full discharge of his responsibilities. In choosing between these two standards of liability the Senate accepted the standards imposed by the House bill.

Though the standards of the Senate amendment were more severe than those embodied in the House bill, the classes of persons upon whom liability was imposed were less. The House bill imposed liability upon the underwriters and also upon the experts, such as accountants, appraisers, and engineers, who gave the authority of their names to statements made in the registration statement. The Senate accepted the provisions of the House bill with reference to this matter, but with the modification that, to protect an unauthorized use of the expert's name, written consent to the use of his name, as having prepared or certified part of the registration statement or as having prepared a report to which statements in the registration statement were attributed, should be filed at the time of the filing of the registration statement. The necessary changes to effectuate this end have been made in the substitute.

The Senate amendment imposed liability upon persons making false and deceptive statements in connection with the distribution or sale of a security. The House bill made the liability depend upon the making of untrue statements or omissions to state material facts. This phrase has been clarified in the substitute to make the omission relate to the statements made in order that these statements shall not be misleading, rather than making mere omission—unless the act expressly requires such a fact to be stated—a ground for liability where no circumstances exist to make the omission in itself misleading.

The House bill (sec. 12) imposes civil liability for using the mails or the facilities of interstate commerce to sell securities (including securities exempt, under section 3, from other provisions of the bill) by means of representations which are untrue or are misleading by reason of omissions of material facts. The substantially similar provisions of the Senate amendment did not apply to any of the securities exempted under the Senate amendment. The substitute exempts from the operation of this section sales of securities covered by section 3 (a) (2), which relates, broadly speaking, to securities issued or guaranteed by the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or by a public instrumentality, or by a Federal Reserve bank or national bank, or by a supervised State bank.

The Senate amendment contained provisions referred to as "dummy provisions" which were calculated to place liability upon a person who acted through another, irrespective of whether a direct agency relationship existed but dependent upon the actual control exercised by the one party over the other. The House bill did not contain these provisions. The various provisions of the Senate amendment on this subject have been welded into one and incorporated as a new section in the substitute.

The House bill (sec. 18) contained a provision prohibiting the selling of securities in interstate commerce in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia where such sale would have been a violation of the laws thereof relating to the sale of securities if it had taken place wholly therein. This provision is not in the Senate amendment and is eliminated from the substitute.

The House bill (sec. 21) limited the venue of actions brought in the district courts to enforce civil liabilities under the act to the district in which the defendant was an inhabitant or had its principal place of business or in the district where the sale took place. The Senate amendment extended this provision to permit suit in the district where the defendant might be found or where he transacts business. The substitute incorporates the provision of the Senate bill in this respect.

The schedules of the House bill required the disclosure of certain material contracts made not in the ordinary course of business. The Senate amendment contained no such provision. The substitute clarifies the meaning of "material contract" as used in the House bill, and also provides against any disclosure of the content of any portion of a material contract when the Commission finds that such disclosure would both impair the value of the contract and would not be necessary for the protection of investors. Ample protection is thereby afforded against the disclosure of secret formulae, trade secrets, or competitive advantages achieved by agreement.

Numerous differences between the House bill and the Senate amendment resolve themselves about the powers of the Federal Trade Commission. In some instances the provisions of the Senate amendment on these matters are contained in the substitute, in others the provisions of the Senate amendment have been adapted to the basic machinery underlying the House bill. Throughout, the aim has been to invest the Federal Trade Commission with full and adequate powers to perform the duties vested upon it under the act. Care has also been taken to avoid any conflict between the exercise of such powers by the Federal Trade Commission and the exercise of similar powers by any other Federal agency.

Title II of the Senate amendment provides for the creation of a "corporation of foreign security holders" for the protecting, serving, and advancing of the interests of the holders of foreign securities in default. The control and management of the Corporation is vested in a board of 12 directors appointed by the Commission. The normal term of a director is 6 years, but the terms of the first directors are so arranged that a third of the board will retire every 2 years. No person is eligible to serve as a director who within the 5 years preceding has had any interest in any corporation which has sold any foreign securities.

The Corporation is given power, among other things, to make contracts; to lease such real estate as may be necessary for the transaction of its business; to sue and be sued in any court of competent jurisdiction; to require from trustees, financial agents, or dealers in foreign securities information relative to the original or present holders of foreign securities, and to issue subpoenas therefor; to take over the functions of any fiscal and paying agents of any foreign securities in default; to borrow money and to pledge as collateral any securities deposited with the Corporation; with the consent of the commission to employ and fix the compensation of officers, directors, members of committees, employees, attorneys, and agents of the Corporation, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States.

The board of directors are authorized (1) to convene meetings of holders of foreign securities; (2) to invite the deposit of defaulted foreign securities; (3) to appoint committees consisting of the directors of the Corporation and/or of other persons to represent the holders of defaulted foreign securities; (4) to negotiate and carry out arrangements for the resumption of payments on defaulted foreign securities, and any plan or agreement made with respect to such securities shall be binding upon depositors provided the consent of 60 percent of the holders of such securities deposited with the Corporation is obtained; (5) to undertake or superintend the collection and application of funds derived from foreign securities deposited with the Corporation; (6) to collect and publish statistics and other information regarding foreign securities; (7) to take steps to facilitate the adoption of clear and simple forms of foreign securities and just and sound principles in the conditions and terms thereof; and (8) generally to act in the name and on behalf of the holders of foreign securities the care or representation of whose interest is entrusted to the Corporation.

The board of directors is to keep accounts of all transactions and business of the Corporation and to publish an audited general account and balance sheet annually.

The Corporation is to make an annual report of its operations, which shall be available to any person at a nominal cost.

The Corporation may levy charges on a pro-rata basis on the holders of foreign securities deposited with it, provided that any such levy at the time of the deposit shall not exceed one fifth of 1 percent of the face value of such security, and provided that any additional charge shall bear a close relationship to the costs and should not exceed 1 percent of the face value of such security.

The Corporation may receive subscriptions from any person or foundation or agency of the United States Government.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to loan out of its funds not to exceed $75,000 for the use of the Corporation.

Under the bill as agreed to in conference title II of the Senate amendment is included, with the following amendments:

1. The board of directors is reduced from 12 to 6.
2. Title II is not to take effect until the President finds that its taking effect is in the public interest and by proclamation so declares.
3. A new section is added providing that it should be unlawful for the Corporation or any committee of the corporation or any person acting for the Corporation (a) to claim or assert to be acting for the Department of State of the United States Government; (b) to make any statements or representations of any kind to any foreign government or of any political subdivision thereof that the Corporation or any committee or any person connected therewith was speaking or acting for the Department of State or the United States Government; or (c) to do any act, directly or indirectly, which would interfere with the policy or policies of the Department of State or of the Government of the United States.

CARL E. MAPES,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, there are two typographical errors. In title II, section 202, where "12" is used, it should be "6", and in the same section, near the end of the section, the words "three fourths" should be "two thirds."

I ask unanimous consent that the corrections may be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF BANKING

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5661) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 5661, with Mr. CANNON of Missouri in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I wish to pay my tribute to the Honorable HENRY B. STEAGALL as a most valuable friend of the State banks. In defiance of the opposition of powerful influences the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] has been making a gallant struggle to save the State banks.

Now we have before the Congress two banking bills, the Glass bill in the Senate and the Steagall bill in the House. They both provide for an insurance or guaranty of bank deposits. The Glass bill is intolerable and impossible as far as the State banks are concerned. The Steagall bill in the House is far preferable to the Glass bill in the Senate. The Glass bill provides for the insurance of deposits in banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System. No other bank can participate in the fund under this bill. The only way a State bank can participate in the fund under the Glass bill would be for it to come into the Federal Reserve. Thousands of them cannot do that now. They cannot meet the qualifications, yet in many instances they are equally as solvent as thousands of national banks which are now in the Federal Reserve, but which could not get in it if they were out of it now and were required to meet the entrance qualifications.

If the Glass bill were enacted into law and the deposits of banks which are members of the Federal Reserve were insured, it would mean the instant insolvency of the overwhelming majority of the State banks which could not participate in the fund. People would immediately withdraw their deposits from the State banks and carry them across the street to the insured national banks. That would mean immediate liquidation of the State banks, which in turn would cause intolerable loss to the depositors in State banks. It would mean forced liquidation of billions of dollars now due to the State banks, which in turn would mean the immediate bankruptcy of millions of debtors to the State banks. It would cause chaos and pandemonium in American banking and credit such as we have not yet seen. Such a cruel contraction of credit would not only drive millions of debtors into bankruptcy but would close down their business institutions and would thereby increase the army of the unemployed by legions.

The Steagall bill and the bill which we are now considering in the House does not amply take care of the State banks. Considering the formidable and powerful opposition with which Mr. STEAGALL has been confronted, he deserves the commendation rather than the criticism of the State banks and the friends of the State banks. So what I have to say is in no sense a criticism of the gentleman from Alabama.

Subsection (a), section 302, pages 53 and 54, of the Steagall bill provides that any State bank or trust company not a member of the Federal Reserve can come into this fund upon a certificate of solvency from the proper State authorities and "after examination by and approval of the corporation." Those words "after examination by and approval of the corporation" only temporarily postpone the execution date of the State banking system. This section further provides that the corporation in charge of this insurance fund is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the further examination of State banks. It also provides that at any time the board of directors of this corporation is of the opinion that a State bank should no longer be permitted to remain in this fund, it has the power to order it out of the fund.

These three provisions place the State banks at the mercy of a Federal agency. This means the inevitable end of the State banking system. With subsection (a), section 302, left in this bill intact, the entire bill must be defeated, unless we are willing to pay the price of ultimately doing away with the State banks. The only way the Steagall bill can be placed in condition so that it deserves enactment is for section 302, subsection (a), to be amended so that a State bank or trust company not a member of the Federal Reserve System can come into this fund on a certificate of solvency from the State banking authorities and remain in the fund upon providing a semiannual certificate of solvency from the proper State banking authorities, and further providing that they can remain in such fund under the same terms and conditions as to assessments and purchases of stock as is required of member banks of the Federal Reserve. Without such a provision, the bill should be defeated. At the proper time I shall offer such an amendment. I trust the House will accept it. On a similar bill which was before the House in the first session of the Seventy-second Congress the bill introduced was like this bill, in that it failed to take care of the State banks. The House amended it by inserting a provision that State banks should enter into the fund upon certification of solvency from the State banking authorities and remain in the fund upon furnishing a semiannual certificate of solvency from the State banking authorities, and that such banks should pay the same dues, assessments, and fees that were collected from banks which were members of the Federal Reserve System. I may say that in the Seventy-second Congress, when a similar bill was before the House, which also provided that State banks should be subject to examination by this Federal board, the House amended the bill by providing that State banks could come into the fund by a certificate of solvency from the State authorities, and stay in it by certificate of solvency from State authorities.

It makes no difference what the Federal agency may be, whether it is the Federal Reserve Board, the national banking department, or this board set up to operate this guaranty fund, any time the State banks are subjected to the domination and regulation of such a Federal board, they may just as well be national banking institutions with national charters. Whenever the State banks are obliged to be under the domination of a Federal board, then we have but one uniform banking system in the United States, and that is the national banking system.

There are those who believe it would be a good thing for our country if our banks were in one system, the national banking system. Personally I think they realize not what they are doing. When they advocate this program they are advocating something which leads directly to the end of individual credit. They are advocating something which leads to the day when credit will no longer exist for individuals, small corporations, and small business institutions. There is no such thing as a uniform banking regulation which will serve the needs of international, Nation-wide, and metropolitan banking on the one hand and local banking on the other. There is no such thing as uniform banking regulations which will serve the credit needs of large and Nation-wide corporations on the one hand and small local and individual business on the other. It is no more possible to operate international banking, Nation-wide banking, and metropolitan banking on the one hand and local banking on the other, and great credit on the one hand and small credit on the other, under the same regulations than it is to operate a metropolitan department store and a country grocery store under the same principles of business.

This has been well illustrated during the last 10 years. The national banking department laid down rules and regulations that in order for paper to be eligible for acceptance in a national-bank examination it had to be liquidated every 90 days or 6 months. That rule of examination was all right for speculative credit. It was wrong for legitimate agricultural credit, small mining, and industrial credit, and local business credit. The national banking system put this rule into effect. In doing so it took credit away from agriculture and small business, commercial and industrial. At the same time, it correspondingly expanded speculative credit. This country is run on credit. Our civilization has been built up on credit. When under these rules of examination credit was taken away from legitimate business, such as agriculture, small and independent business institutions, such classes of debtors and business were deflated and led to the natural and inevitable end of bankruptcy. When under these rules of examination excessive credit was given to the corporations which were large enough for their stocks and bonds to be listed on some board of trade, such institutions and gambling were inflated. The inflation of these institutions led to the inevitable ends of the stock-market crash of 1929 and the present bankruptcy of big business.

There is no way to run this country with credit facilities for big business and inadequate credit facilities for small business. As long as small business institutions are bankrupt the big ones must remain bankrupt. The big ones have no source of income except that which is derived from the individuals and small business units.

Any time the banking system of this country is under the domination of one national head, be it the Federal Reserve, the national banking department, or this deposit-guaranty board, it means that there will be one uniform set of banking regulations. Those regulations will always be prescribed for the benefit of international, Nation-wide, and metropolitan banking and for the credit needs of Nation-wide institutions, and to the corresponding detriment of local banking and small individual and corporation credit. This is inevitable and inescapable. The reason is that the great banks and great institutions needing credit will always be able to get to Washington to present their side of the question and make rules and regulations according to their needs. Not only their selfishness but their complete ignorance and lack of understanding of the needs of local banking and small credit will control their activities in picking the members of any Federal board and prescribing such rules and regulations. This has been well illustrated in the case of the Federal Reserve Board. It is not raising class hatred—it is simply a statement of the simple and eternal truth—when one says that the Federal Reserve System and the national banking system have been operated in accordance with the needs and selfish demands of big banks and big credit and to the detriment of local banking and small credit.

We must have two separate and distinct banking systems in this country, one for the needs of big banking and big credit and another for the needs of local banking and small credit. I am not adverse to; in fact, I favor big banking and big credit having a banking system which will meet their needs. I only ask that big banking and big credit extend the same rights and privileges to local banking and small credit that I am willing to grant to big banking and big credit. Let them have the national banking system. I only ask that they leave to local business and small and individual credit the State banking system. The Glass bill will immediately and the Steagall bill eventually and in the near future destroy the State banking system and thereby destroy local credit and small and individual credit.

The existence of the State banking system as a free, independent, and competitive system means much to the national banks located in towns and cities of less than 100,000 people. The existence of the State banking system as a competitive system has done much to restrain the influence of the metropolitan national banks and the bureaucratic national banking department from being still more ruthless in prescribing and laying down rules and regulations which would be most destructive of the welfare of national banks operating in the smaller cities and towns. The opportunity for national banks to surrender their national charters and turn to the State banking system has been a sheet armor of protection for national banks located in smaller cities and towns against still more intolerable national banking regulations for such banks.

He who votes for this bill may think he is serving an ideal end and answering the public demand for a guaranty of bank deposits, which, of course, is a much-desired end, and if it can be accomplished without causing more social and economic chaos than it prevents. The facts are, irrespective of what one may think, he who votes for this bill is voting to destroy the State banking system.

At first blush, when an individual or the public compares the State banking system with the national banking system, there is pictured in the mind of the individual or the public the comparison of one small country State bank and a great metropolitan bank. Such a deceptive comparison! Such a ravishment of the actual facts! Here is how far this comparison misses the truth: There are 6,150 national banks in this country with $17,000,000,000 of deposits. There are 10,455 State banks with $7,000,000,000 of deposits. There are 1,235 loan and trust companies with $9,000,000,000 of deposits. There are 1,096 savings banks with $11,000,000,000 of deposits.

This bill in its present form gives congressional and governmental special privilege to 6,150 banks with $17,000,000,000 of deposits and at the same time congressional and governmental discrimination against 12,786 State banks, trust companies, and savings banks with total deposits of $27,000,000,000. If this bill in its present form is enacted into law, 6,150 banks are stabilized; 12,786 banks are cast into unwarranted chaos. Seventeen billion dollars of deposits are protected and stabilized; $27,000,000,000 of deposits are non-protected and jeopardized.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGUGIN. Not now, but later. Our banking troubles are enough. Our era of wild inflation, reckless speculation, and discriminatory banking regulations of the 10 years following the war has brought us near enough to the brink of social and economic breakdown. Our era of asinine governmental regulation emanating from the national banking department at Washington and of dishonest and incompetent banking has brought enough chaos to our economic structure. Let not the Congress enact this legislation, which will unsettle and throw into a chaotic state 12,786 banks, in the hope that we can save 6,150 banks. Let not this Congress by legislation jeopardize $27,000,000,000 of bank deposits in the hope that it may secure $17,000,000,000 of deposits.

My statistics pertaining to banks and deposits are the latest available statistics I have been able to obtain. These statistics, together with their source, are as of June 30, 1932. I have taken my statistics from the World Almanac of 1933, and shall ask a couple of pages to distribute some of these statistics among the Members.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. I suggest that the gentleman take, instead, the figures from the recent reports from the Comptroller of the Treasury, which are likely to be more accurate.

Mr. MCGUGIN. My statistics are set forth in the table that follows:

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, we are again considering the much-talked-of-bank guaranty bill. A great many questions are being asked concerning the bill, and some of these questions it is impossible for us to answer. In order to guarantee anything the thing you undertake to guarantee should be worthy of the guaranty. I remember when I was a small boy that a very thrifty and enterprising young fellow came back from college, and in order to raise funds for the next year decided that he would sell some gold watches and guarantee them. The price he was to receive was $5 each. He sold practically all of the watches he had on hand and about the last one he had he was trying to sell to an old farmer. The farmer was a little slow in making the purchase. He said to this young man, "You say this watch is solid gold, and you are selling it to me for $5?" The young man replied, "Yes; it is solid gold, and I absolutely guarantee it to be such." "But", said the farmer, "what if I buy it and then it turns out to be brass?" The young man had gotten a little impatient by this time and replied, "In that case the guaranty ain't worth a darn; if it does not turn, the guaranty is all right."

We ought to guarantee a bank set-up that is worthy of guaranty. I am going to support this proposition because later, after we pass the guaranty law, it will be up to the Government to see to it that we have a banking set-up that is worthy of the guaranty that we place upon it, regardless of what it costs. It is absolutely necessary, if people are going to do business with the banks of this country, that they have some faith in being able to take their credits out of those banks after they have once placed them there.

Most of the bank credits that we find represent borrowings of the different peoples of the country in dealing with these several banks.

If I go down to a bank and borrow $4,000 on my farm, I usually leave the $4,000 in the bank until I have checked it out. That shows as a deposit in the bank, and it shows as a debt that I have obligated myself to pay. If the bank fails and leaves me with that mortgage on my farm, and I cannot get my deposit out of the bank, then I am left in the same situation that many hundreds of thousands of people find themselves in in this country today.

We have in this country the most wonderful banking system in the world from the standpoint of liquidity or easy credit. That is, the banks and the borrower can make forms, and so forth, by loans absolutely liquid, when it comes to extending credit, if you and the banker agree that he will accept your security for the loan. But our banking system is the poorest one in the world from the standpoint of safety to the depositors. Some 10,000 banks failed within the last 2 or 3 years. We were reduced from 30,000 banks in the country to less than 20,000. Then along came the bank moratorium, when all banks were closed, and only a part of them were permitted to open. The last figures I am able to get show that there are 12,787 banks open, and 5,200 of those that were closed have not been permitted to open or are open partially. That condition affects very largely the depositors of the banks in this country. It affects those who credited the banks.

People talk about banks not failing in Canada, and they talk about them not failing in France. Let us see about the situation. In this country we rely on gold to redeem all currency. It will not do it, because there is not as much gold by far as there is currency. Then we rely on currency to redeem the bank credits in all the banks and it cannot do that because the currency is not more than one tenth of the bank credit, and not more than one half of that currency can be obtained by the banks. So those two propositions are a failure and prove to be such in stress times. We rely on banks to redeem the contracts made by people and to carry forward and execute those contracts with the medium of exchange that we commonly use known as our check money. The banks can do that at certain times, but at other times they cannot do it, and we have a recent example of it today. When the banks were closed they would not accept checks. You cannot get your deposits out of them now if you cannot execute your contracts, because you have no medium of exchange with which to do it, the bank credit having broken down. I am pointing out some of the weaknesses in our bank set-up. Our bank deposits cannot be guaranteed and made safe by the little amount of funds that you are providing in this bill.

Six or seven billion dollars of the people's deposits or credit, or whatever you term it, are now practically out of existence in closed banks, and $1,000,000,000, at most, provided in this bill would not meet that situation, or one anywhere near it in bank losses.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] said that this is a move to destroy State banks. This is not the first move. The Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. J. W. Pole, who resigned some time ago, had that thing in mind with the branch-banking system he advocated, but the House and Senate and the country would not accept his proposition. But the banking element in this country is not asleep. It is astute. It is subtle. It is in possession of the best intelligence for carrying these things forward, and if you cut it off at one point it will begin to work at another. The biggest move that was ever put into force in this country to destroy State banks and to destroy all banks that the banking element did not want was the bank moratorium which closed them and which will not let them open. I do not say that for any critical purpose, but that is exactly what has happened. Many of the banks that were closed and are not being permitted to open were running along all right and never would have closed.

Now, what is the situation? All of the banks of this country, big and little, would have closed and remained closed but for the moratorium, and the law passed by Congress which permits banks to go under the Comptroller of the Currency and drive the depositors away from their deposits. That is an indication that the foundation on which the banking system is set up is so insecure that any guarantee of the banking system as it is now founded cannot endure. There is not enough margin of safety between the man who trusts the bank with his deposits and the ability of the bank to return that trust to him.

In other words, if I have $1 and five of you gentlemen have $1 each, I would say to you, "Let me have your dollar. If you will, I will return it to you at any time you ask for it." You say, "That is fine." Some one of you say, "Well, perhaps you will not be able to do that." "Oh, yes; I will let my dollar stand surety to each of you and I will give it back any time, but don't all of you come the same day and ask for your dollar; in fact, don't any two of you come for your dollar the same day. Otherwise I might not be able to return it." That is a better basis of security—$1 for $5—than that set up by almost any bank in this country. That is five dollars liability to one of security. They have not got enough capital stock and surplus to secure the people who trust them with their funds, no matter how honestly or well the banks may be managed. That is the weakness of any bank guaranty law which we might enact. The bank loans money to the individual and becomes an investor in the property in the community where it operates by making loans to people in that community, and like the boy who sold the watch for $5 and "guaranteed" it to be solid gold, it is no sufficient answer for us to say that we passed a "bank-guaranty law." We did that in Mississippi. It cost the people $5,000,000 in bonds issued and sold after the bank guaranty law collapsed to pay the certificates of indebtedness that had been issued to people in closed banks who lost their money in those banks. The State had to take over the loss and pay it out of the taxpayers' funds instead of paying it out of the guaranty fund. The guaranty fund was entirely exhausted with $5,000,000 deficit to be paid, and this had to be met by a special law laying the burden on the people generally through taxes to meet the bank-guaranty debt. Yet I am going to vote for this bill because I think the Government will be forced to set up a banking system that people can depend on after it gets behind the guaranty. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY] has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, guaranty of bank deposits is my baby in Michigan. I was credited by the famous radio reporter, Billy Repaid, as being the first man in either major party to publicly declare for a guaranty bank deposit law. My ideas were condemned by bankers, and even depositors could not see the practical need for such legislation at that time. We in Michigan know the situation in banking about as well as any other portion of the United States of America today. Our banks are laid low. Our people are driven to despair. However, I am not so sure that I could go sled length for a bill that might mean the guaranty of deposits and the existence of one third of the banks, while it meant the destruction and sounded the death knell of the other two thirds. However, I am definitely and positively committed to the principle of guaranty of bank deposits.

I am actuated to a great extent in my attitude on this bill by the confidence I have in the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the House, Mr. STEAGALL. I have been in correspondence with him for 2 years before I came to the House. Moreover, I have conferred with my colleague from Michigan, Mr. PRENTISS BROWN, who is a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and he informs me that he has analyzed this situation very thoroughly and that the bill will pass muster. On the strength of these recommendations I am going to do what I can for the bill, and I shall insist that a specific declaration be included in the terms of this bill by which the State banks will be placed on par with the Federal Reserve banks, will receive protection, and by which the depositors' money will be made safe in all banks that comply with the necessary minimum regulations.

We have heard a great deal in the past about the opposition of bankers. That is entirely out. A gentleman on the floor the other day declared that some of the bankers are opposed to this bill. The recent tragedy in the banking world has made Christians out of all bankers, particularly so in Michigan. I had an experience recently when I was notified that a convention at Grand Rapids, composed of 377 bankers, met and insisted that their Representatives in Congress sustain and support with all of their power a guaranty of bank deposits law. Every Congressman from my State received a 200-word telegram to that effect.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I have only 5 minutes. I am sorry.

I, of course, was curious to know whether this idea originated with a few provincial small-town bankers, or whether the metropolitan banker became a convert to progressive bank legislation. I inquired whether I could have a list of those present. I found that among them were accredited representatives of two of the largest banks in the State. The First National Bank, of Detroit, was represented by Walter F. Truettner, Donald M. Sweeney, and Thomas Long. The Guardian National Bank of Commerce was represented by Hal Smith. Both of these banks, having had depositors nearly 800,000 in number, and deposits of nearly $1,000,000,000, are out of existence today. This goes to prove that even the metropolitan banker is converted to the idea of the guaranty of bank deposits. It is only a question of a short time ago when all bankers who classed themselves as conservative and safe opposed the guaranty of bank deposits.

I received a letter this morning from the Michigan Bankers' Association and signed by Mr. Kenneth M. Burns, executive manager. I think the request he makes is very timely. I should like to include this letter in my remarks:

MICHIGAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION,
Detroit, May 19, 1933.

Hon. JOHN D. DINGELL,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. DINGELL: The reports that an agreement has been reached to defer the effects of the insurance-of-deposits feature of the new banking bill until 1934 are producing alarm in many quarters.

It is our belief that the public demand which has resulted in an acceptance by Congress of the insurance-of-deposits idea will not be satisfied unless its provisions are immediately effective, and it is therefore hoped that you will use your utmost efforts to prevent any delay in the date of its operation and that you will also see that it includes protection for the depositors in all sound banks as well as in national banks and members of the Federal Reserve System.

Very respectfully yours,

KENNETH M. BURNS, Executive Manager.

In order to give you some idea of what it covers, let me say that the Michigan Bankers Association is very anxious about the provisions in this bill. It requests that the guaranty features be put into effect at the earliest possible date instead of waiting until 1934.

For this reason I shall strive to amend the bill to provide for the guaranty of all deposits up to $2,500 immediately. I think the larger deposits can well take care of themselves, there being very few large depositors that remain today.

I believe that the myopic banker as an adviser should receive about as much consideration at the hands of the House as a braying jackass on the prairies of Missouri. They proved by their inability to maintain their own business that they have absolutely no right to advise the House as to what course we should follow.

I believe in preparing the medicine and forcing it down the throats of the few oppositionists who remain. Reactionary bankers opposed all progressive regulatory or safety laws in connection with their business.

As a matter of fact, recent developments in the field of American banking convinced the people that America had no bankers and much less a banking system. We discovered that what we believed to be a bank system was in fact a respectable racket and so many connected with it only cheap, petty loan sharks and Shylocks.

There are a few notable examples of fine banks and bankers left. We have them in Detroit, but they have suffered because of the loose practice and lack of knowledge on the part of those who failed. This element which survived the storm is entitled to every consideration the law will permit. They favor guaranties of bank deposits and are willing to cooperate and to shoulder a fair portion of the burden.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, under this bill from and after January 1, 1934, no officer or director of any member bank shall be an officer, director, or manager of any corporation, partnership, or unincorporated association engaged primarily in a business of purchasing, selling, underwriting, or negotiating securities.

One of the chief purposes of the bill under consideration is the prevention of the undue diversion of bank funds into speculative operations. Many provisions of this bill have been framed with this end in view. The member bank shall inform the Federal Reserve bank of the general character and amount of its loans with a view to discovering whether or not there is an undue use of bank credit for the speculative carrying on and trading in securities, real estate, or commodities. Again the Federal Reserve banks have a privilege of limiting the loans made to member banks if too large a percentage of such loans is secured by collateral in the form of stocks, bonds, debentures, and similar obligations put up by an organized stock exchange, investment house, or dealer in securities. In the provisions compelling the divorce of security affiliates, further steps are taken to prevent this diversion of banking funds into speculative operations.

The unholy alliance between the brokerage office and the bank must be broken. Up to now it has been possible for directors and officers of a brokerage house to be directors of a national or member bank. This has grave dangers. It violates the fundamental principle of the lawyers' code of ethics—that of undivided allegiance. In banking as elsewhere, no man can serve two masters. The bank must invest its money in good securities. In order to do this it must be in a position to judge impartially. If the men who are to determine the type and character of the banks' investments are at the same time promoters and sellers of these securities, the bank will be prevented from acting with untrammelled judgment. Under the present order of things the bank director too often acts in a dual capacity; on the one hand he is supposed to act in a fiduciary capacity as a trustee for the benefit of the depositors of the bank; on the other hand he wants to add to the commissions and underwriting profits of his own company. These two positions are irreconcilable. Human nature remains the same as in the days of old, for—

Where thy money is there shall thy heart be also.

What, my friends, is the chief reason for the lack of confidence that has been expressed in bankers and in banks? Is it not the popular feeling that many bankers too often have some secret, personal, financial gain at heart? Instead of working for the interests of their depositors they are silently working for their own interests. No amount of exhortation will restore confidence in the American banking system. People must have the assurance that directors of a bank have but one interest to serve—the safeguarding of the moneys solemnly intrusted to them by their depositors. Banking must be made a profession the same as the law and medicine. It is unthinkable to any honest lawyer that he represent the two opposing sides in a litigation. The lawyer with a delicate sense of honor will never represent a client if the opposing litigant is being defended by that lawyer's partner. Yet, gentlemen, we have been permitting the very same situation in our banks. We are permitting a bank director to represent both the seller and the purchaser. This position is untenable and indefensible. This bill will put an end to this reprehensible condition.

One of the chief causes of this depression has been the diversion of depositors' moneys into the speculative markets of Wall Street. Instead of keeping the money for the use of the legitimate needs of commerce and agriculture, money has been lent to gamblers to use in buying stocks on margin. This bill prevents this evil from again occurring. Let us once and for all drive the money changers out of the directors' rooms of our American banks. Only in this way will banking become an honored profession; only in this way will bankers become public servants charged with a sacred responsibility to administer the funds intrusted to them for the benefit of their depositors and not for the gain of themselves. Only thus will we accomplish the sentiment voiced by Mr. Justice Cardozo in another connection in the case of Meinhard against Salson while chief judge of the New York Court of Appeals:

Preference of self must be subordinated to loyalty to others.

This provision will drive the speculator from the inner councils of the banks. It will restore the honest banker to the position of dignity and prestige, to which his character and ability entitle him. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, the Steagall banking bill here under consideration is, like Gaul, divided into three parts—three sugar-coated pills—but each one is as bitter and deceptive as the other. The first part has for its object and its purpose the strengthening of the strangle hold of the Federal Reserve System upon the public. It has for its purpose the adding of tentacles to the Federal Reserve System—the visible hand of the invisible empire—that has choked and throttled the prosperity of the people of this Nation. It would add these tentacles by the cunning device of admitting desirable State banks and trust companies into the Federal Reserve System and then mercilessly crushing the undesirable. It has for its purpose the usurpation of the entire banking system of this Nation in the hands and under the control of the Federal Reserve Board, located here in Washington, within a stone's throw of the international bankers and Wall Street.

I can well understand why this bill was considered in executive sessions by the committee, because if my friends and colleagues the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], and others had been permitted to take part in the considerations, this bill would never have appeared on the floor of this House in its present form—it would have died in its making. A bill of this kind could never have been born in the bright sunlight of day. It had to be born in executive session. And now we are asked to vote for it without knowing its contents and without having had time to digest its far-reaching results.

I have always made it a rule never to vote for anything I did not understand. Permit me to say to the Members of this House that the only safe rule is to vote "no" on anything you are not familiar with. It has been well said, "The devil you know is better than the devil you don't know," and I say in all frankness that that is especially true of this bill. Corroded and corrupted as the present Federal Reserve System is, this bill makes it worse. I am confident that not 75 Members of this House would vote for this bill if they had time to study it and know all its terms and far-reaching results. Not 75 Members of this House are ready to surrender to Wall Street—to the international bankers—without a struggle.

When an able lawyer defends a notorious criminal he always attempts to divert the jury's attention from the criminal to the innocent wife and children; he paints a glowing picture of the wife and children, of their suffering, misery, and disgrace, if the criminal is convicted. Likewise the able and distinguished Chairman of the Banking Committee [Mr. STEAGALL] painted to us in passionate language and emotion the ruin, the devastation, and the sufferings of the American people, in an attempt to divert our attention from the monster that was largely, if not wholly, responsible for that situation—the Federal Reserve Banking System, and then in a moment of triumph, he turned to us with a gesture, insinuated that here in this bill is the remedy—the three sugar-coated pills, bitter as gall.

In all frankness we have been hypnotizing ourselves into a make-believe Paradise—like Alice in Wonderland. Let us face the facts and analyze this bill, and we will realize that, if passed, it would crush not only the remaining of our State banks and financial institutions, but will, through the power of manipulating the money of this Nation, give to the money changers in the temples the absolute control and domination of all State legislation. Already the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is attempting to dictate to States what kind of laws they must pass or repeal in order to get financial aid. Already the Federal land banks are dictating to the States what kind of laws they must pass or repeal in order that the farmers may get loans through that system. In my State, North Dakota, the Federal land bank has temporarily withdrawn because the State legislature last winter saw fit to pass a law prohibiting the taking of deficiency judgment in mortgage foreclosures. Pass this law, and you may as well abolish your State legislatures and take all your orders from the international bankers and Wall Street, via the Federal Reserve Board here in Washington.

The distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] stated Saturday that no one wanted to repeal the Federal Reserve Act. Permit me to correct him and say that 75 percent of the people of this Nation are ready and willing to repeal the Federal Reserve Banking System, if you give them a chance.

The people know that it was the Federal Reserve bank that, during the war, increased the money in actual circulation—doubled it—and then in 1920 and 1921 contracted it—virtually cut it square in two. I mean the money that was actually in circulation at that time, not including the money that was then in foreign countries or that has been lost, burned, or destroyed since the Government began to make money. The people know that it was the Federal Reserve octopus that contracted the currency in the Nation as a whole, and at the same time, increased it in the large cities—increased it for the gamblers in stocks, bonds, and the necessities of life. The people know that the Federal Reserve octopus loaned, in an aggregate, to the gamblers of this Nation in 1928 some sixty billion dollars of credit money—bank money—hot air—to gamble with in domestic and foreign stocks and bonds, and that in the first 9 months of 1929 it loaned them some fifty-eight billion, and then when the crisis came in the last 3 months of 1929, cut that credit money—bank money—hot air—down to thirteen billion.

No nation, no industry, can survive such an expansion and contraction of money and credit. Give to me the power to double the money at will, and then give me the power to cut it square in two at will, and I can keep you in bondage. That is exactly what the Federal Reserve banking system has been doing for the American people—it has taken their homes—it has filled the penitentiaries with its victims—it has caused self-destruction and suicides by the thousands. This bill not only continues that system with its cruel, brutal, and devastating policies, but gives it all the more power to destroy us.

The second part of the bill here under consideration has for its objects the strengthening of the tentacles of the octopus via monopoly—it legalizes branch banks and affiliates, and takes them into the bosom of the Federal Reserve System—this is just another link in the strangle hold upon the money and credit of the Nation.

The third and last part professes to guarantee bank deposits. The provisions made are altogether insufficient. It provides that the Government shall buy $150,000,000 worth of stock in a Federal deposit insurance corporation, and that the Federal Reserve banks and member banks shall buy another 350 million in the same corporation.

Now, since there are $42,000,000,000 on deposit in the banks and trust companies of this Nation, and since on January 9, 1933, there was only 684 million of actual money in all the banks and trust companies with which to pay this 42 billion on deposit, can anyone seriously argue that you can pay off $42,000,000,000 with 684 million plus 500 million? There is nothing in this bill that prohibits the Federal Reserve System from again becoming racketeer and bringing about a worse condition than the present depression. By this bill we give complete control of the money and the credit to that System, and with that power they can and will control the Government itself, and can and will again go off on a spree. Power is always deaf, dumb, and blind.

I propose as a remedy that we recommit this bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instruction that they substitute for it H.R. 3834, a bill that I introduced on March 20, 1933, which is now pending before that committee. This bill provides for the creation of the Bank of the United States, and will give the Nation a banking system owned, controlled, and operated by the Government of the United States in its sovereign and governmental capacity. If you do this, then you will have a banking system that will be as sound as the Government of the United States.

According to that bill, the Bank of the United States would be controlled by a board of 48 directors, 1 from each State, appointed by the President from a list of 3 furnished him by the Governors of their respective States. The board of directors would appoint an executive committee and a manager and other officers to operate the bank. The Government of the United States would issue $2,000,000,000 of United States bank notes to the bank for its capital and revolving fund. Such notes would be made full legal tender for all public and private debts, and would be secured by the full faith and credit of all the resources of the United States.

All funds belonging to the Government of the United States or any department thereof, except gold coin, gold bullion, and silver bullion now held in the Treasury and Postal Savings, would be deposited in the Bank of the United States. All gold coin, gold bullion, or gold certificates that the Bank of the United States would come into possession of and owner of would be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in exchange for any lawful money of the United States, all such gold to be used by the Government in its international transactions.

The bank would also receive deposits from any State or Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or from any State or Federal bank. All deposits in the Bank of the United States would be guaranteed by the Government of the United States.

The bill provides that the Bank of the United States may transfer funds to the Government, and that it may make loans to any State or any Territory or any political subdivision thereof, or may make redeposits or loans to any bank within the United States or any Territory thereof, provided such loans are secured by bonds of the United States or by approved bonds of any State, Territory, or political subdivision thereof, provided that the bonded indebtedness of any such State, Territory, or political subdivision thereof is not in excess of 15 percent of the assessed valuation of the taxable property of any such State, Territory, or political subdivision thereof. It provides that the Bank of the United States shall make loans to the Federal Farm Loan Board secured by farm-loan bonds issued for the purpose of making new farm loans or refinancing and scaling down existing farm loans, which farm-loan bonds shall not bear interest in excess of 1½ percent.

The bill also provides that the Bank of the United States, with its capital and revolving fund and other available funds, shall take up the $21,000,000,000 outstanding bonded indebtedness of the United States, and that if it requires additional funds for this purpose and for the other purposes set forth, that then it may acquire such additional Bank of the United States notes from the Government by delivering to the Treasurer bonds or certificates of indebtedness of the United States, or bonds of any State or Territory or any political subdivision thereof, in an amount equal to the additional Bank of the United States notes required.

The bill provides that on any funds transferred to the United States or loaned to any State, or Territory, or political subdivision thereof, or redeposited or loaned to any bank, the Bank of the United States shall receive interest at a rate not to exceed 1 percent per annum.

It provides that the Bank of the United States shall control and regulate the money and credit of the Nation, and it shall at all times provide the public with a national elastic currency, and a sufficient national medium of exchange to do the Nation's business. It provides that the executive committee of the bank shall regulate the value of the money of the United States and shall stabilize the same. It makes it the duty of the executive committee to ascertain and determine the average value and buying power of the dollar over a period beginning with January 1, 1915, and ending with January 1, 1925, by an analysis of the wholesale market prices in the principal markets in the United States of not less than 300 or more than 400 stable commodities, which average value and price shall be declared to be the general normal price level of such commodities and to be the value or buying power of the dollar.

When that bill becomes a law it will save to the Nation millions and millions of dollars and will put the money and credit structure on a sound and firm basis and will meet the requirements of the Constitution of the United States, which says:

The Congress shall have power * * * to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coins.

In drawing the bill for the Bank of the United States, I drew it along the lines of the bill that created the Bank of North Dakota. That bank was created in 1919 and is the only bank in the United States owned, operated, and controlled by a State in its sovereign capacity. It has saved the people of my State millions of dollars and rendered inestimable service to the State and its people. No political faction or politician now dares suggest that it be discontinued or abolished. If we continue to concentrate the money power in the hands of the international bankers through the Federal Reserve bank, then let me warn you that there will be only one escape from that octopus, and that will be that we will have to have 47 other State banks, owned, operated, and controlled by the States in their sovereign capacity, and then with the Bank of the United States added, we will have a perfect control over money and credit.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have given careful consideration to this bill. As I have previously stated on the floor of the House, I think it is a mistake to deal in piecemeal with the Federal Reserve law. During the past 4 or 5 years we have had an opportunity to observe the control of credits and finance under the operation of the Federal Reserve Board, and the officers of the 12 Federal Reserve banks. I have stated on several occasions that the administration of this system is more responsible for the things that have happened to the people of the United States than any other one instrument. In this particular bill now, under the guise of guaranteeing the depositors the money they deposit in the banks of the country, you are strengthening the further control and domination of the finances of this Nation under the Federal Reserve System. Unless I miss my guess, you are concentrating in this System the entire control over finances in this country; you are centralizing the control of money in the speculative market entirely under the control and domination of the Federal Reserve System. You are going to force all banks in the United States to become members of the Federal Reserve System, and unless I make a mistake in my analysis of this situation, no bank whose deposits are not guaranteed will be able to survive in the United States after this bill becomes a law.

During the further consideration of this bill under the 5-minute rule, I may talk about several features of it. I do not at this time desire to take up further time of the Committee, but want to use the balance of my time and speak out of order, if I may.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Has the gentleman read the opinion of Mr. Wyatt, the chief counsel of the Federal Reserve Board, in the March issue of the Federal Reserve Bulletin, in which he raises the question of the power of the Federal Government to abolish all State banks or force them into the Federal Reserve System by the process of taxation?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have.

Mr. MAY. And this bill, perhaps, embodies some of his ideas about that?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think the Members of the House would do well to study the other provisions of this bill than simply the one that would guarantee deposits.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding out of order?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, on several occasions I have called the attention of the House to what I believe to be a violation of the tax laws of the United States by large taxpayers. About 10 days ago I referred one of these particular charges to the Attorney General of the United States. I am informed by the press reports that the Attorney General is proceeding with an investigation of this particular reference, which was the tax evasion of Andrew W. Mellon. I shall now read to the House a letter which I sent last week to the Attorney General of the United States:

MAY 20, 1933.

Hon. HOMER S. CUMMINGS,

Attorney General of the United States,

Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: Supplementing my letter of the 5th, in which I referred to you definite charges of violations of the tax laws by Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, I now desire to submit additional information in connection with this same matter.

I am informed that the Coalesced Co. is owned 100 percent by A. W. Mellon, that he himself owns all of the preferred stock and that the common stock is divided equally as issued to his son, Paul Mellon, and his daughter, Mrs. David Bruce. It has been stated that this company is being used by Mr. Mellon for the purpose of concentrating his wealth and thus, during his lifetime, effecting a distribution to his legal heirs, principally for the purpose of avoiding inheritance taxes. I am further informed that the Coalesced Co. was organized at or about the time impeachment proceedings were pending against him in the House of Representatives just prior to his appointment as Ambassador to Great Britain.

Webster defines the meaning of "coalesce" as "to grow together", "to unite in one body" or "of uniting by natural affinity or attraction."

I now desire to direct your attention to the Riscar Co., which is owned entirely by Richard B. Mellon, a brother of Andrew W. Mellon. This company is apparently organized and being used by Mr. Mellon for the same purposes that the Coalesced Co. is being used, and I am calling this to your attention that this company and the income-tax statements of Mr. Richard B. Mellon be likewise investigated to ascertain whether or not the same practices have been resorted to as in the case of Andrew W. Mellon.

In view of this specific evasion, may I also suggest that the Mellon group own and control many corporations and trusts whose tax returns should be scrutinized with a view to determining whether or not illegal losses have been deducted or falsification of accounts has been resorted to for the purpose of reducing the annual legal tax payments to the United States Government.

I am submitting this additional information to you in the public interest, and while I have had no reply from you to my letter of May 5, I have noted through press reports that you have taken up the investigation of the specific matters referred to in that letter for thorough investigation and report.

Respectfully yours,

L. T. McFADDEN.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND. In the Mellon category of organizations which they own, is the gentleman familiar with the fact that Mr. Mellon owns the Koppers Co., of Pittsburgh, which is a subsidiary of the New England Gas & Coal Co., that gets all the coal shipped to them from Russia?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; I am aware of that fact. My attention was called to that fact by a letter which I recently received; and in view of the question put by the gentleman, perhaps I had better read this. I quote as follows:

My understanding is that Mr. Mellon, who owns the Koppers Co. which produces about 15,000,000 tons a year of southern coal, bought this stock in the Pittsburgh Coal Co. when he was Secretary of the Treasury and not supposed to have been engaged in business. With the control of this company, together with the Koppers Co., it gives him control of both fields. As I understand it, the Koppers Co. sells coal at fancy prices to the utilities in which it holds a stock interest, while the Pittsburgh Coal Co. goes out and sells below cost in order to ruin the independent coal operators. This also works a great hardship on labor.

If something could be put in the law to compel coal companies which sell coal to public utilities to give them as low a price as they or any of their allied interests sold coal for to other consumers in which they were not interested and for that reason did not have the same pull they had with their utilities, I think it would go a long way toward clearing up some of the troubles in the coal industry. At the present time railroads are not supposed to engage in the coal industry, but the utilities or other allied concerns do this.

In view of that statement by this prominent Pittsburgh man, who calls this to my attention, I am wondering what effect the operation of these two particular combinations has in continuing the terrible condition that exists in the western Pennsylvania coal regions.

I have had pending in this House before the Committee on Rules two resolutions introduced last March, House Resolution 20 and House Concurrent Resolution 12, calling for an investigation and audit of the Treasury Department and for an inquiry into the operations of the Federal Reserve System. These resolutions are as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 12

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there is hereby established a special joint congressional committee (hereinafter in this resolution referred to as the "committee") to be composed of 5 Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and 5 Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Upon the termination of the present Congress the committee shall cease to exist.

Sec. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to investigate and make an audit of the operations of the Treasury Department in the collection, investment, and disbursement of public moneys, and of moneys derived in whole or in part from sources other than taxation, and to report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, as soon as practicable, but not later than the termination of the present Congress, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

Sec. 3. For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to select a chairman, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times, whether or not the Congress, or either House thereof, is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to employ such experts and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures (not exceeding $250,000), as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman, and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 101, 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 2, secs. 191, 192, 193, and 194) shall be applicable in respect of any person summoned as a witness, in the same manner as such provisions are applicable in respect of any person summoned as a witness in the case of an inquiry before a committee of the House of Representatives.

House Resolution 20

Resolved, That for the purpose of obtaining information necessary as a basis of legislation the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House is authorized and directed, as a whole or by subcommittee, to investigate the Federal Reserve Board of the Federal Reserve banks, and such member banks of the Federal Reserve System as may be necessary, in their activities with respect to foreign banks and foreign central banks, their open-market operations and acceptance business, and their connection with the American Acceptance Council, and their collaboration with other banks (American and foreign) in the operations of such banks in foreign financing; and for the purpose of this investigation the committee may make such audit of the books of the Federal Reserve Board, Federal Reserve banks, and member banks of the Federal Reserve System as it deems necessary.

Sec. 2. Such committee shall, as soon as practicable, report the results of its investigation to the House, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable. For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places in the United States, or elsewhere, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to employ such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths and affirmations, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures, as it deems necessary.

The administration in charge here in this House has paid no attention whatsoever to the consideration which I have repeatedly asked for in regard to these two measures. I have been continually calling attention to the illegality of the operations of the Federal Reserve System and the Treasury Department, especially the Income Tax Division, for a long time. I want to say again, with just as much emphasis as I can put upon it, that the Membership of this House is making a mistake in not giving consideration to those two measures. You cannot afford to grant more power to the Federal Reserve System until you know what the Federal Reserve System has been doing. May I repeat that which I have said previously, that you are not going to restore the credit of the United States or confidence in government until you look into and audit the Treasury of the United States and the Federal Reserve System.

In the balance of the time I have I want to call attention to another resolution which I am offering today, and I am going to read it to you:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to furnish the House of Representatives a list of the clients for whom the firm of Smith, Shaw & McClay, and/or the firm of Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay, of Pittsburgh, Pa., have appeared before the Treasury Department of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with the settlement, or other adjustments, of income taxes from the year 1920 up to the present time.

Suits are being brought in the United States Court in the District of Columbia, with definite facts presented, and today in Pittsburgh depositions of the officers of the Gulf Oil Co. are being taken in connection with the fraudulent disposal of income of the officers for that company. I presented that matter to the House and the Rules Committee over a year ago and tried to get action, but no action; why? I want to ask what influences are brought to bear upon this House of Representatives and its leaders to see to it that these very worthy investigations are not made? They should be made, and I am putting it squarely up to you Members as to whether or not you are going to assume responsibility by inaction in covering up frauds such as I am now calling attention to. Why do you not act? If the Rules Committee will not act, I have placed the proper petition on the Speaker's desk; sign it and we will discharge the Committee on Rules and pass these resolutions; it is now up to you.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The 1932 report of the Federal Reserve Board contains only 44 pages, with absolutely no information or facts concerning the operation, while the 1931 report contained 315 pages and gave all the conditions of its operation. I think this House should demand a complete and more full report so that we can find out what this Board is doing, which now comes here and wants its power extended. They are deceiving this House of Congress by misleading it with filing this kind of report.

Mr. McFADDEN. I called to the attention of the House the other day the evident tax violation of H. L. Doherty and asked for an investigation of his reports for 1927, 1928, 1929, and 1930. I also asked that an investigation be made into the tax reports of the J. P. Morgan & Co. partners in New York, and stated specific instances where they should be investigated. I am hoping that this House, under the control of the present administration who promised the people of this country that they would clean up the mess, will get active and do these things which they should do and give proper heed to them at once.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I should like to know how we are going to get at the facts in relation to the income tax and the payers of income taxes in this country so long as the Members of this House are denied the possible chance of knowing anything at all about it.

Mr. McFADDEN. Well, that is just the point; but if you will pass these resolutions which I am referring to here and appoint committees, all of this information can be made available to you; and I say to you gentlemen, as I did on the floor of the House the other day, that there is a clique of racketeers that is practicing in this income-tax matter at the present time. It is headed in New York. The accountants who are engaged in this practice, together with clever lawyers, are located in New York and in Washington; and men in the Department are cooperating. It is time this ring is broken up. The man who handled the Charles E. Mitchell tax audit in the Treasury was fired. How many more such fellows are there in the Department? Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed all but 45 seconds of his time.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I shall take but very little of the Committee's time. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], I believe, plans to conclude the debate, and if we are to judge by his speeches in this House made in the past, we may anticipate a very fair and comprehensive discussion of the pending bill.

I have a well-grounded conviction that this bill contains more of constructive proposals designed for permanent legislation than any bill which has come to the attention of the committee or of the House at this session of Congress.

I want to say just a word about the Federal Reserve System, and what I shall say is prompted by the references to it of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN]. Somebody has said that a very poor law or a poor system well administered is far better for the whole people than an excellent law and a wisely conceived system which is poorly administered. The Federal Reserve System is a wisely conceived system. The best thought in the banking world, not only in this country but of the world, will, I believe, confirm us when we say that it is, from the standpoint of sound finance and proper administration of credits, a scientifically constructed system of banking. Any system may be poorly administered, and there is ample evidence to attest mistakes in the administration of this System. Many steps have been taken and many others which should have been taken have not been taken by the Federal Reserve Board. Their errors of commission and omission have aroused my displeasure and disapproval, but the essence of the System is something which we ought to cling to. I see nothing in this bill which seeks to add vicious compulsion in the way of additional authority.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] said we ought to study the bill carefully to find out what power we are giving to the System; that he thought there were many banks in this country which would be unable to comply with its provisions, and that, therefore, would fail.

If there are any banks open or about to be opened which cannot comply with every provision of this bill, then it is in the interest of the whole people, the small wage earner, the middle class, and the man of large resources that those banks be cleaned out now.

Much of the trouble in this bank crisis came by reason of the fact that we had set up too many banks without a proper capital structure. There is no hardship imposed upon any bank by the provisions of this bill. The bill is written in the interest of sound banking; I submit that these statements are justified. My point of view is not poisoned. My natural sympathies have always been with the under dog, because I have been one of them all my life. Thank God, nevertheless, that I have had, or endeavored to acquire, a fair point of view. I have come to understand that in this complex system of ours the man of resources and the man not of money but of brain and of a willingness to use his hands and his head in honest toil are both indispensable to the general well-being. It ought to be the aim of every man here who has taken his oath solemnly before the bar of this House to undertake at all times to serve the interests of both these groups.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] said he wished some assurance that there was in this bill a guarantee, using that word, I think perhaps inadvisedly, because there is no deposit guarantee in this bill, but there is in it a provision for the insurance of deposits; he seemed to feel that he had not read within the pages of this bill anything to justify full confidence that State banks which are not member banks of the Reserve System were to be protected as well as others. I ask him to read, if he is inclined to pursue this thought, section 302 of the bill, beginning at the bottom of page 53 and continuing over into page 54. I myself perhaps will ask the indulgence of the House while I read it.

However, before I leave the general fundamentals of the bill, let me say that I support it and support it gladly and I am giving you some of my reasons for so doing, not in the order of their importance but as they occur to me at the moment. First, because I think it properly gives closer supervision to banking authorities over all the banks of the System. Second, because it puts restrictions upon loans for speculative purposes. Third, because it separates investment banking from commercial banking.

I hope to see the day when there will be a wall built between the savings-bank funds and the commercial banking funds. However, we cannot do everything in a moment, and so there is no attempt to set up such a dividing wall in this bill.

I will support the bill also because I think the insurance method of protecting the money of depositors is one of the wisest of such proposals I have yet seen advanced.

It has been stated that we ought to compel banks who desire to avail themselves of this insurance provision to become members of the System. I confess that after some years of study, if I now had the authority to determine this question, I should hesitate as to the proper step to take. I have had a feeling that if we could be sure that men in authority administering the System would at all times be honest, we ought to have a single banking system. But perhaps for the present, human nature being weak and frail as we have seen it proven in these later days, perhaps we ought to give both systems a further trial. At any rate we left that proposal out of this bill. So I think the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we are attempting to force all banks into one system, that we are going to destroy all banks outside the system, is not a fair statement. We are giving them all an equal chance. There is not a provision in the bill that can be construed as a compulsion upon or as hostile to State banks.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Under the provisions of section 302, to which the gentleman referred, State banks are permitted to become members, but they are subjected to supervisory examination by the Board. I wish, when he comes to discuss it, the gentleman would emphasize the importance of this examination.

Mr. BEEDY. Yes. I am coming to that feature. I think I shall take time to read part of that section, because we ought to have it well in mind.

Remember this, too, in connection with the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the Federal Reserve System itself is not attempting to insure the deposits. We divorce that feature entirely from the Federal Reserve System. We are setting up an insurance-deposit corporation, in which nonmember State banks and State banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System, as well as the national banks which by law are made members, may subscribe to stock and avail themselves of the advantages which flow from the insurance of deposits.

If we are going to accord nonmember State banks such a valuable privilege, we ought to impose some obligations and conditions precedent.

Let me read section 302, which is found at page 53 of the bill:

Any State bank or trust company, not a member bank of the Federal Reserve System, with the approval of the State authority having supervision of such bank or trust company and certification to the corporation—

That is this insurance corporation—

by such authority that such bank or trust company is in solvent condition, after examination by, and approval of, the corporation, shall be entitled to the privileges of this title upon agreeing to comply with this title and upon subscribing to the same amount of stock as would be required if such bank or trust company became a member bank.

Now you will see how important those provisions are, and I submit you will see how fair they are. If this corporation is to insure the deposits (within the limits set forth in this bill) in nonmember State banks, it should have the right to an accurate determination of the financial status of those banks. This could be had by a thorough examination of applying banks.

Therefore a preliminary examination is called for, and surely banks, in addition to this examination, should be compelled to comply with the protective provisions set up in creating this corporation. They should be compelled to subscribe to the same amount of stock in the corporation as a member of the Federal Reserve System. Both classes of banks are required to take an amount of stock equaling one half of 1 percent of their outstanding time and demand deposits. Is there anything in this provision calculated to force banks into the Federal Reserve System? Why, certainly not. We permit them to stay out if they so desire. We impose no unreasonable demands. This is a separate corporate entity which is dealing with the insurance of deposits. Nothing, it seems to me, could be sounder. I think this separation of the insurance-corporation feature should appeal to all of us who are equally interested in the small as well as the large banks.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I wish I might finish my statement and then, perhaps, I can get 3 or 4 minutes to answer questions, unless the gentleman insists.

Mr. RAMSPECK. There is one point I want to be clear on. Does this corporation have a right to first examine the State bank before it is admitted into the plan?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. And they can refuse it admission?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes; if it is unsound. This corporation collects funds from numerous banks totaling one fourth of 1 percent of their deposits. They are trust funds in a way, and no undue strain should be put upon the corporation by forcing it to insure any unsound bank. One of the objections made to this proposal is that strong banks will be compelled to pay the penalties for poor banking and thus to sustain weak banks. If they are not weak when they are admitted to the corporation, there is a strong degree of assurance for success in the operation of the insurance provisions of this bill. The weak are not imposed upon the strong at the very outset, as might be the case were no examination required.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Maine 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEEDY. I wish the gentleman would please excuse me, because in the 5 minutes I should like to call your attention to a feature of the bill whose importance has been impressed upon me by a situation which developed in my own State.

I was almost tempted to say that if there were no other more highly commendable feature in this bill than that to which I am now about to refer I should be inclined to swallow all the rest of it.

You will notice on page 2 of the bill that an affiliate is defined as "any corporation, business, trust, association, or other similar organization." You will find later, under this section which deals with affiliates, that after 2 years the affiliate institution is banned and that within that time close examination and supervision of these affiliates is to be had by the authorities. I think this is wise.

Now, just what does this mean? I call your attention to this because of a situation that arose in my own State. We had a certain bank in the city of Portland, Maine. It was supposed to be one of the soundest banking institutions of the State. I supposed the men in control of this institution stood for the finest and the highest ideals in business and in citizenship. They became ambitious. They began to reach out and buy up banks. They established a chain-bank system. They set up a holding corporation and transferred to this holding corporation their shares in these banks. They thus relieved themselves of the double liability that should attach to stockholders who are handling trust funds. Presently we found this Portland bank closed, and investigation revealed an abhorrent situation. It revealed the fact that a majority of the directors in that bank, the home bank, had set up what might be known as "affiliate corporations" under the definition in this bill. One affiliate corporation was engaged in the fiber business; another affiliate corporation was engaged in a tooth-paste venture.

These same men who were in control of the directorate of this bank were also in the majority control of the directorate of these affiliate corporations, and they were lending to themselves, through the fiction of an interlinked corporate structure, hundreds of thousands of dollars of honest depositors' money. These loans ran up to almost $800,000, which, in a small bank, is a large amount of money, and when the crash came the depositors were astounded to find what had been going on. These abhorrent loaning practices were revealed and naturally they shocked the best sense of the citizens of my community.

Now, from the day this bill becomes a law it will never be possible for any bank to be run and controlled by a majority of men who at the same time are in majority control of industrial corporations. This temptation to lend money to oneself through a corporate interlocking structure ought to be removed, and it will be removed when this bill is written into law.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I will yield if the gentleman will explain to me what he meant by saying that the Federal Reserve Board deceived us by insulting us. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I mean they apparently sent out a bulletin as their 1932 bulletin—

Mr. BEEDY. What the gentleman means is that that report is not extensive enough to satisfy him, but he does not mean to say that an insult necessarily amounts to a deception.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Oh, well, the gentleman can take that whichever way the gentlemen on the other side want to take it.

The gentleman has made the statement that interlocking directorates would be forbidden the minute this bill takes effect and that these big corporations will not be able to control everything, and so forth.

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, no; I did not say that. I did not say "big corporations will not be able to control everything, and so forth."

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I call the gentleman's attention to the language on page 7 of the bill relating to such corporations.

Mr. BEEDY. Just a moment, I do not yield further.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the gentleman will yield to me a moment, I should like to ask him a question. I have great respect for the views of the gentleman on this whole problem. I should like for the gentleman to give us some assurance about the fairness and the friendliness of the board of directors of the corporation, and more assurance that after the State organization approves the financial solvency of a nonmember bank and then it goes to the corporation for approval before the nonmember bank can come under this bill, that such nonmember bank will be treated fairly in its claim for this protection.

Mr. BEEDY. Of course, that question reaches far into the human element, but here is a corporation set up for the express purpose of insuring deposits within the limits of the bill. It can certainly have no other motive or purpose than to treat with a kindly justice every deserving and sound bank which reaches out for help and protection. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I am as much for the guaranty of bank deposits as the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency can be. I honor him for bringing forward this idea session after session, when there was no possible chance of having it considered favorably. When it finally becomes the law—as it is bound to do—no one will go farther than I in bestowing upon him the rightful honor as the real champion of this great measure. It will be his due.

There is what we call the credit stream, through the gigantic power of which, when running free, we carry more than 10 times as much ability to do business through bank credits as all the currency outstanding at any time. But we must hold constantly in mind that as this great stream of the blood of industry circles round and round, deep flowing and mighty, that every time a dollar is taken out at one point another dollar must be put in at some other point. Only by making this certain can we carry on the gigantic economic life of this great Nation.

There have been more than 12,000 bank failures (not including the 5,000 still in jeopardy) during the last 12 years. Millions of people have lost billions of dollars through these failures. Banks that had stood like a rock through all the other panics and depressions went tumbling into the discard in this one. Men whose honor never had or could or ever can be questioned saw the banks which they had spent a lifetime in building up come tumbling down before their helpless eyes in the cataclysm of 1929 to 1933. Under these conditions it is nonsense to talk about restoring confidence. There is only one way that we can bring back into usefulness of national credit the necessarily recurring bank deposits, which restoration of industry requires, and that is to make it absolutely certain that when any and every man, woman, or child who puts a dollar in any bank can absolutely know that he will under no circumstances lose a single penny of it. Unless and until that guaranty is made we can not recover our lost industry in this country. [Applause.]

But to accomplish that it is not necessary to sacrifice any of the people's rights. It is the part of wisdom that this Congress shall look with great care at any surrender of the rights of the people who have suffered so shamefully from the abuses of the great interests who are at present seeking by every means to retain the very control which enabled them to rob the people of so many billions of their hard-earned wealth.

This bill is in most regards a splendid bill. It represents a vast amount of labor on the part of the committee. But for all their thought and care somehow a section has found its way into this bill that would nullify most of its benefits. I refer to section 3, which seeks to turn over to this privately owned bankers' banking system for all time to come every penny of the franchise tax which has existed from the start.

Let us see what section 3 provides:

SEC. 3. The first paragraph of section 7 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 289), is amended, effective July 1, 1933, to read as follows:

"After all necessary expenses of a Federal Reserve bank shall have been paid or provided for, the stockholders shall be entitled to receive an annual dividend of 6 percent on the paid-in capital stock, which dividend shall be cumulative. After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met the net earnings shall be paid into the surplus fund of the Federal Reserve bank."

Read and reread that section; get clearly in your mind its full significance; then check up on what we propose to give to these banks. Consider also what we have already given them. They already have their hands into the United States Treasury clear up to their armpits. Must we completely immerse them in profit in order to secure a small part of the sovereign rights of the people?

The right to issue money has always been the right of the sovereign power, whether it be emperor or king. Upon the formation of this Republic we vested all sovereign rights in the people. In other words, we took over all the rights which before that time were acknowledged as belonging to the king and gave them to the people for their own. We designated the Congress as the representative of the people.

A previous Congress, as representatives of our people, saw fit to give a small group of our citizens the power to issue money. For that privilege it exacted a small tax. That small group has paid itself a generous profit on that privilege in the past, and it now comes to the representatives of a sovereign power and asks that it be given all the profit.

It is necessary to set out the plain, simple facts about the Federal Reserve System, so that no misunderstanding can exist in relation to this all-important matter.

The Federal Reserve System is a bankers' banking system owned by the member banks of the System. It is entirely privately owned. It does not belong to the people of the United States or to the United States Government—not one dollar of it.

The Government is supposed to supervise it in the people's interest. But under recent practices the officials appointed for that purpose have supervised it entirely in the interest of the big banks. Why should they not do this, since their salaries are not paid by the United States Government, but by assessments on the member banks? A man naturally feels an obligation to those who pay his salary. That part of the law ought to be changed. The Federal Reserve System was clearly a compromise, but better by far than the total lack of system which it replaced. It was administered with great effect and benefit from the time of its enactment through the World War.

From the autumn of 1920 to the present time it has to an unthinkable extent been administered in the interest of the great currency and credit controllers and the international bankers and terribly against the interests of the American people.

The people, generally speaking, seem to think that the gold reserve belongs to the Government. It does not. Outside the small amount in the Treasury to provide 40 percent gold reserve for the old greenbacks, the Government has not a dollar of gold. The gold reserve belongs to this private banking system. And the gold is all stored in the 12 Federal Reserve bank vaults, not in the United States Treasury.

Here is a statement from the Treasury Department which shows total gold in America at the present to be $4,310,767,000. Federal Reserve banks hold and own $3,416,210,000. Of this, the United States Treasury vaults have $236,463,000, only 7 percent as much as the Federal Reserve vaults contain.

There is somewhere among the people gold—mostly gold certificates—in the amount of $658,094,000. The Federal Reserve banks are organized with a capital stock just like any other corporation. The capital stock of the whole Federal Reserve System is $321,000,000—subscribed and actually paid in is $150,217,000 by all the member banks put together. That is the entire capital.

Now, what has this $150,000,000 earned or gained since 1913, when the System was begun? The figures show a gross earning of $1,020,000,000. What has been done with that billion dollars gained? The expenditures by the Federal Reserve System during these years, including the construction of Federal Reserve bank buildings, was $472,000,000. The net returns on the $150,217,000 paid in capital was $548,000,000. These net earnings have been divided up as follows:

Dividends on the $150,000,000; paid in capital, $120,000,000; transferred to surplus account, $279,000,000. These two items, interest and surplus, totaling $399,000,000, would equal 13.3 percent annual income on the $150,217,000 actual capital paid in.

What possible excuse can there be for presenting without any consideration a surplus to the Federal Reserve System when the stockholders have only paid in one half the stock the member banks had subscribed?

Paid to the Government as a franchise tax, $149,000,000, equals 4.5 percent.

The $279,000,000 should also have been paid to the Government, or a total of $428,000,000, and if this Congress does its duty the next 20-year period will see much more than that amount paid into the National Treasury.

This amount is nearly sufficient to pay the amount required for 2 years' interest and amortization of the $3,000,000 bond issue which we are about to authorize to put the men to work who were thrown out of employment by the maladministration of the Federal Reserve Act. [Applause.]

Now, let us see what that means to a bank that became a member at the beginning and had a capital and surplus of $150,000.

Here it is: Subscribed under the law 6 percent, equals $9,000. But only half that amount was ever actually paid in, or $4,500 cash.

For this $4,500 cash investment this small bank has received back in interest $4,600, or $100 more than the cash paid in at the beginning, and that surely is sufficient. But it now has an interest in the surplus which amounts to $8,370 cash, to which it has no possible moral right, and only such a legal right as a Congress in the service of the big interests voted to it.

Now, what does this section 3 mean? It means this and nothing less, that if section 3 becomes the law we forever give up all claims to any return to the Government whatever. If section 3 had been in the original law, we would not have received the $149,000,000 which we have received, but the Federal Reserve System would have added that amount to the present $279,000,000 surplus, or $428,000,000 would belong to this purely private banking system.

Therefore if we keep section 3 in this bill, it means the people will never receive another penny from this private banking system for the tremendously valuable franchise which it holds. Any man who votes to retain it in the bill votes to take from the people all the hundreds of millions of money which will come to them if this section is left out of this bill.

We ought to see that this very great profit in cash is the least of the advantages which this privately owned bankers' banking system has been granted because whoever controls currency also controls credits, whoever controls credit controls prices, whoever controls prices controls industry, whoever controls industry controls civilization, and the lives and labor of those who make up civilization.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 52 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. I should like to have the Chairman notify me when 47 minutes have expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the subject under discussion is one of much technical detail and difficulty. It is one impossible to adorn, and all that I may hope to do is to explain to such members of the committee as desire to be informed, what is in the bill. If gentlemen who are not interested in knowing what is in the bill will allow me to have the attention of those who are interested I shall be doubly grateful. I know I shall tax the patience of the House, for finance is a dreary topic and one that cannot be made entertaining.

But if I may help Members to know what is here proposed and to understand the reason why the committee as a whole has made a unanimous report in favor of the passage of the bill, in spite of certain objections, then we may take the matter up more intelligently under the 5-minute rule.

The depression emphasized the fact that our banking system is not satisfactory. A growing distrust has now been turned into universal apprehension. In the middle of the depression the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency took up for consideration what is everywhere known as the "Glass bank bill." It held long hearings.

The membership of that committee, I think I may be pardoned in saying, comprises men peculiarly qualified to study the subject. They recommended a bill that failed to become a law in the last Congress. When that bill was given out, it was exposed to careful scrutiny through the strongest motives of interest on the part of the attorneys of the leading banks of the country, and various objections were raised.

In the course of the months that passed and the study given to the matter by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and further consideration by the sponsor of the bill, I find that fully nine tenths of the matters to which objection was made a year ago have been eliminated.

So far as relates to the reorganization of the bank structure of the country, it is fair to assume that the Glass bill in its present form, under consideration at the present time in another branch, is as nearly satisfactory as such a long and complicated measure ever can be.

So when your committee of the House approached the subject it did not feel it necessary to hold long hearings on the bill and repeat what was already at our command in the form of the printed Senate report. Accordingly the Glass bill was copied for introduction in the House as far as it related to two branches of the subject. Your committee made certain changes, some of importance, which I shall call to your attention as embodied in the bill before you.

The third branch of the subject, that relating to Government insurance of bank deposits, has been quite differently treated by the House committee, and there will necessarily be discussion of it in conference with an attempt to reconcile the two proposals and produce from them one that will meet at any rate the most serious of the objections.

Taking up in turn the three titles of the bill, for we have rearranged it so that it may be more intelligible, let us first examine title I, which contains such provisions as materially change the banking structure of the country. Many of these provisions will frighten a stranger to the subject by their length and intricacy, but on examination you will find that for the most part they are repetitions of existing law with comparatively small insertions.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question before he concludes? I do not want to interrupt him now.

Mr. LUCE. I shall hope to have the time.

The first section concerns itself merely with definitions and need not have your attention. The second section brings us down to what was a prime purpose in the mind of the author of the bill and his associates in another branch. The use of banking funds for speculation became a stench in the nostrils of the people. The second section of the bill brings us right to the control of the use of banking funds for speculation. All through the bill there are scattered provisions of like intent which I think all will accept, for nobody questions the desirability of accomplishing their object.

The third section of the bill concerns itself with the topic to which the previous speaker has called attention, that of the disposition to be made of the surplus funds that have accumulated in the Federal Reserve System. I have reason to believe that this matter will be thoroughly discussed when we reach it under the 5-minute rule, and I shall not now anticipate that discussion.

The fourth section of the bill admits the Morris Plan banks, against which I imagine no protest will be raised. Also, by a minor correction, it puts State banks on the same level with national banks in the matter of certain operations with foreign countries. It also treats, on page 6, a matter to which I would particularly address myself, not directly, perhaps, as bearing on the bill but as bearing on some of the issues that have been raised, for it concerns itself with the mutual savings bank.

The mutual savings bank, which this bill would let enter the Federal Reserve System, is an institution with which, most unfortunately, Members of the House from the central and southern parts of the country are unfamiliar. I have been told, but I shall not vouch for the complete accuracy of the statement, that there is not a mutual savings bank between Cleveland and Sacramento. It is greatly to be regretted that the communities in the central and southern parts of the country have not acquainted themselves with the value of the mutual savings bank. Let me give the figures that show the situation. It is preliminary to my regret at the absence from the bill of one provision which I hope might yet receive your attention. The criticisms of the bill, in fact, for my own part, and I think on the part of several of my associates on the committee, are based chiefly on its omissions and not on its commissions.

Later on I shall try to develop the reasons why I fear this bill will gravely disappoint those who have looked for an adequate and thorough reform of the banking system of the country. But returning to the situation in regard to mutual savings banks, I find by the last report of the Comptroller of the Currency that in New England per capita, for each unit in the population, we have in our mutual savings banks $539. In the Southern States demand savings deposits have an average of only $37 per capita. In the Middle Western States it is $114; in the Western States, to the Rockies, $46; and in the Pacific States, $196. I do not speak in a boastful way when I glory in the fact that in New England our savings deposits average $539 per capita. I say it again to bring home, if I can, to my friends from the South and from the West that when they declare we are withdrawing from them their capital to be used for the benefit of the East they fail to recognize that on the contrary we are drawing from ourselves the money which is going to finance in some part the great West. When you point the finger of scorn at the banks, at the financiers, at the capitalists of New England, let me tell you that you are pointing it at the shoe workers in Lynn, at the men and women who tend the looms in Fall River and New Bedford, at the men and women in my own town who put together the works of the Waltham watches, at the men and women through all our section who toil and have scanty incomes.

It is the income of the poor in New England that fructifies the West, and every time you try to throw into disrepute our eastern communities because they have been thrifty, because they have organized these mutual savings institutions, you are abusing our working people, the wage earners of New England. One of our most prosperous savings banks in Boston is called the Five Cent Savings Bank, because it takes deposits as small as 5 cents, and it has amassed millions of dollars of the workers, of the wage earners, of the school teachers, of the people generally, which dollars, directly or indirectly, have in great part gone to help and benefit the rest of the country.

Before you abuse the financial institutions of the East make your own hands clean. Ask yourselves what you have done in Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, or in any of the other Western States or in those of the South to bring together the philanthropically minded men of the community to organize institutions where the poor can join together their little sums, not only for their own advantage but also to the common good. Many a nickel makes a muckle. There is the road to travel if you would furnish your own capital.

I wanted in this bill to protect the savings of the poor. I am shocked when I go into the national bank of my own town and there see on one side the commercial windows and on the other side the window where they take in the savings. Every night the receipts of the day are put together in one lump, and the savings of the citizens who are in moderate or humble circumstances are thus being risked in commerce, while in our mutual savings bank the most strict protection is thrown about the funds.

The savings bank is strictly limited as to the securities in which it may invest. It may have no dangerous dealings with a national bank. Our law requires that a brick wall without any aperture shall be maintained between the two institutions if in the same building, so that if the cashier of the national bank and the treasurer of the savings bank wish to connive, they must go out on the sidewalk to do it. When I find all through the rest of the country you are allowing the savings of the poor to be exposed to the risks that have brought destruction to so many banks, I believe you are negligent in not introducing into this bill a provision that thrift deposits in commercial banks shall be segregated and shall be invested only in limited range of high-grade securities. Long-time investment and short-time lending ought to be kept wholly independent. It is my regret that, because the greater part of my associates on the committee came from regions where the mutual savings bank is unknown, I could not convince them of the need for this.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to inquire whether a large percentage of the mutual savings banks in the gentleman's State failed?

Mr. LUCE. Within a few months, for the first time in all the history of savings banks in Massachusetts, one failed. That is the only instance in all the history of savings banks in Massachusetts.

Mr. FLETCHER. How many are there now in Massachusetts?

Mr. LUCE. About 200. They are to be found in every city and every good-sized town. Their two billions of deposits have been the mainstay of the masses in this trying period. They in no small part account for the fact that Massachusetts, though an industrial State, has probably seen much less of real suffering than almost any other State in the land.

To go on with the bill, the next sections are unimportant. They refer to details of the Federal Reserve System. I may point out we are requiring the approval of six members of the Federal Reserve Board instead of five for certain loans that are to be made.

Then we come to a new section which legitimatizes and regulates the open-market committee. There has been such a committee in operation for years, and this simply formulates the conditions under which it shall operate. That is on page 11, section 12 (a).

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. What are the functions of the open-market committee?

Mr. LUCE. The open-market committee is that instrument of the Federal Reserve Board which, by buying or selling securities and acceptances, accomplishes one of the purposes of the system, which, through 9 or 10 years after the war, kept the ship of finance on an even keel. It is the system, I may explain, to which those of the House who approved the first plank of the President's money program look for accomplishing the result most desired, that of reviving and stabilizing business by expanding or decreasing the volume of credit.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. This open-market committee has been functioning for a long time. Is it not just one step in the formation of a great central bank?

Mr. LUCE. Oh, I cannot share the gentleman's apprehension on that score.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. It deals in all kinds of securities, national and international. There is no limit, is there?

Mr. LUCE. I hope not.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. This is the opening wedge in the consolidation of the entire banking industry, both of this country and of the world, into the hands of a few men, is it not?

Mr. LUCE. I do not share the gentleman's fear on that score.

Now, on page 14, section 9, is still another section meant to hamper the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. Through the years when Gov. Benjamin Strong was the head of that bank until his untimely death its relations with foreign banks worked with admirable effect in accomplishing the level range of prices, which is so much to be desired again for the welfare of this country. However, the idea on the part of those who see red whenever anything of a foreign nature is recommended is to the effect that there should be no transactions between the New York bank and the Bank of London, or French or German central banks, without the knowledge and approval of the Federal Reserve Board. Fortunately, the provision is not likely to do serious harm.

Then there is another section, meant to hamper speculation. Then one about banks not lending money to their own executive officers. That is on page 16. With it we are beginning to get near the vitals of the bill. Little by little we find something that is really of importance, and here is one. It is at the bottom of page 16:

No member bank shall make any loan or extend credit in any other manner to any of its own executive officers.

That is, the officers of the banks.

Then, on the next page there is a new section which forbids banks to invest their capital in bank premises, it being found that some banks, for publicity and advertising and notoriety, are spending too much of their capital on the buildings they occupy.

Then there is a page or more that only a lawyer can understand, and not having been actively engaged in the practice of the law for a long time, I dare not try to explain it to you. It is something about taking Federal Reserve bank business into the United States district courts. I suppose it is desirable. You will have to take that for granted, so far as I go.

On page 20 there is much new matter aimed at the practices of banks engaging in the investment business. In brief, it seeks to take them out of that business to an important degree.

Section 15 will prevent further organizing of national banks with less than $50,000 capital in places of from 3,000 to 6,000 inhabitants. Hitherto such banks may have been started with as little as $25,000 of capital. Many, many of the 9,000 failures of banks in the course of the last decade have been the result of too small capitalization. We seek to stop that.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman feel this will do justice to the large number of small independent banks that are solvent and secure but which will be estopped from entering the System and participating in the benefits?

Mr. LUCE. I think all the authorities on banking are of the belief that no small part of our trouble in the last few years has been due to the fact that in many parts of the country banks exist having a capital of $25,000 or less. I have been told there are $15,000 and $10,000 banks. It is a question of comparative gains and losses. The weight of judgment is that a bank will not be safe unless it starts with at least $50,000 in cash.

Mr. KVALE. I understand the force of that argument, but the gentleman is familiar with the fact there are a great many small banks throughout the country which have been successful and which today are solvent.

Mr. LUCE. In this matter I incline to rely on the judgment of those who are more familiar with banking conditions than I am.

Mr. KVALE. If the gentleman will be patient for one moment, out in my section of the country for 10 years we have gone through the wringer; and there are unquestionably many banks that are stable and secure and solvent, but whose capital is not up to the $50,000 level arbitrarily set in this bill. Hence my interest.

Mr. LUCE. This section simply states that no national banking association shall be organized after this section takes effect with less capital than $50,000 in places with from 3,000 to 5,000 inhabitants. It affects no existing banks.

Mr. KVALE. But by implication will it affect those banks having less than $50,000 capital so they cannot come under the blanket guaranty or insurance of deposits?

Mr. LUCE. Let me wait until we come to that part of the bill.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may reply to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I may say it does not adversely affect them.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I should like to know if there are any figures proving the statement which is so generally made that the number of failures are greater in small banks than in large banks?

Mr. LUCE. I have not seen them. Only general statements have come to my notice.

Mr. KELLER. I have been trying to get some figures along this line for some time but have not been able to, and if the gentleman or some member of the committee can supply them I shall be pleased to have the facts.

Mr. LUCE. I shall bear that in mind.

Then there comes a collateral provision whereby entry of new banks into the Federal Reserve System will no longer be permitted when there has been cash payment of only 60 percent of capital, the present law allowing them to make good the additional 40 percent out of their earnings from time to time. This conforms to the idea that the capital structure of our banks ought to be strengthened.

Again the matter of affiliate relationship appears, the next section eliminating from the capital structure the stock of other corporations.

Section 17, on the bottom of page 23, cuts out brokers from deposit banking after 2 years; and on the next appears the corresponding aspect of that matter, with provision about concerns other than brokers, to accomplish the same result.

After a minor provision about interest rates on loans in States where laws are lacking, come the provisions for reopening closed banks. One of them I wish I had brought to the attention of the committee, inasmuch as I should hope before we get through with this bill the figure "85" on page 26, line 15, will be lowered, for it is going to be difficult to secure consent in writing of the holders of 85 percent of the deposits and unsecured credit liabilities in a closed bank. However, that is a mere detail with which we may not concern ourselves now, for if change is found desirable, it can be easily made by the conference committee.

Section 20 is, in my judgment, the best thing in the whole bill. It is pretty nearly the only provision in the whole bill that puts any teeth into existing law.

The reasons why we have had so many bank failures are not easy to determine, but we know, at least, that one reason has been the inability of the Comptroller of the Currency to compel banks to conduct their business according to sound methods and on right principles.

All the Comptroller has been able to do has been to slap a bank officer on the wrist and gently say, "I wish you would not do that again." Comptrollers have not been able to put any punch into their orders. I regard this provision of the bill as an attempt to inject more energy into the Comptroller of the Currency. I should like to jack up his office by giving it more authority, more inspectors, more money, with demand that it find out a bank is going to fail before it fails. [Applause.] But all that the authors of this bill have seen fit to do is to provide that when in the opinion of the Federal Reserve agent a director or officer shall have continued to violate any law or shall have continued unsafe or unsound practices he shall have a trial. That trial bids fair to take from 2 to 6 months and so does not insure any prompt meeting of the situation.

It has come to my knowledge that studies have been made determining the causes of the bank failures in this country over a period of years. They remarkably disclose the presence of the same causes. They show that failures have been chiefly due to bad banking practices of which the authorities knew, or might have known, and which they have not stopped.

In this section we give them a chance to stop these practices. I wish the section were a good deal stronger and went farther, but I am glad it goes as far as it does.

Section 21 puts an end to the practice of some of the big banks in having a board of directors whose names occupy half a letterheading, for publicity purposes, without in reality guaranteeing any real responsibility whatever. We tell the big banks that they shall not have more than 25 directors.

In the next section there is an attempt further to prevent the interlocking of banks and investment companies.

I told you that you would find this scattered all the way through.

Then, there is a section that prevents bank employees or officers from having any interest in lending companies, and then one that cuts out the double liability of stockholders.

This provision on double liability cannot and will not stand if the bank insurance end of the bill goes by the board. The committee has put it in with the belief that in case the deposits are insured, there will no longer be need for the requirement of double liability. I think the committee was influenced in putting in this section by the knowledge we all possess that double liability often prevents getting the help of the best men in the community; men who would gladly undertake some of the duties of directors or officers if the danger were not so great. Also double liability too often brings undeserved loss to the innocent. These considerations seemed to us to offset any advantage that may remain in double liability after the insurance-guaranty provision goes into force, if it does go into force.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. In the gentleman's opinion, if the bill passes in its present form, will the depositors in our banks be given a bona fide guaranty that their money will be safe?

Mr. LUCE. I shall get to that in a discussion of the last third of the bill. I am proceeding in the order of the bill and shall discuss that question then.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. HOEPEL. I just heard the gentleman make the statement that all the Comptroller could do would be merely to slap these bankers.

Mr. LUCE. That is what my understanding is.

Mr. HOEPEL. Would not the Comptroller have power to do more than slap these bankers if in the organization of the banks of America the United States held 25 or 50 percent of the stock of the various banks? We would not then require a bank guaranty law; is not that true?

Mr. LUCE. That is another question not entering into my attempt to explain this bill.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN. I was wondering if this committee had given consideration to placing a criminal liability upon all bank officers in case the bank fails. It seems to me this is a question that should have consideration in these times.

Mr. LUCE. I do not think that has been given consideration.

What the bill tries to do is not to punish, but to prevent. It does not go far enough in preventing; that is all there is to it.

Now, we come to the second title of the bill, and I desire so much to emphasize the third title that I want to hasten now and dispose of this whole title about affiliates in just a word.

The affiliates are to be put out of business in 2 years. Eighteen pages are given chiefly to the conduct of these affiliates within the 2 years. In my judgment, they are now so ashamed of themselves or else are making so little money that abuse of the affiliate idea no longer exists and is not likely soon to be reborn. If I had my own way, instead of having 19 pages, I would put this into 19 lines, and I am not going to give 19 seconds more to its discussion. So far as I know it is all right.

We come now to the important part of the bill, the guaranteeing of deposits.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment in order to correct the record?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. I notice the gentleman said there is no savings bank between Cleveland and the coast.

Mr. LUCE. Between Cleveland and Sacramento; so I have been told.

Mr. BEEDY. That is true, with one exception in Minneapolis.

Mr. LUCE. I am glad to be informed about Minneapolis. New England men must have carried the idea there.

Mr. BEEDY. And I made a misleading statement which ought to be corrected. Affiliates, as such—that is, separate corporations doing other than a banking business—are taboo after 2 years, but holding-company affiliates endure for a longer period, under close supervision.

Mr. LUCE. They do. It is unfortunate that the phrase "holding-company affiliates" was used. It confuses two things.

Mr. BEEDY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LUCE. The essential part of this bill is that it puts an end to what we ordinarily think of as affiliates.

Mr. KELLER. I did not get that and I am very much interested in that part of the bill.

Mr. LUCE. The 2-year provision applies to only what you and I think of as affiliates. It does not apply to holding companies which hold the stock of various banks or what we ordinarily refer to as group banking or chain banking. It does not touch that beyond some control. What the public thinks of as affiliates will go out of existence in 2 years and I am quite indifferent about what the provisions relating to affiliates are, because I do not think they will amount to a hill of beans in the meantime.

Title III, the deposit insurance corporation, is the controversial part of the bill.

There are men in the country who are gravely apprehensive of doing anything in this direction.

Your committee differs radically as to some provisions of this section. We are expecting in the conference that agreement will be reached which will give us a better insurance bill. For one I have felt that the public is ready for some sort of insurance. The public demands it, and inasmuch as enactment will at any rate add to the reasons we are trying to give why men should once more be confident, I am willing to sink any doubts I may have and go along with the committee, desiring to have it put upon record, however, that in this measure, as in all the big measures of this session, the responsibility is that of the administration now controlling the Government. Our position as a minority is that we accept but we refrain from endorsing.

I wish, however, to preface consideration of the proposal with certain observations about insurance. In my time I have seen insurance ideas extended far beyond what anybody would have dreamed when I first became interested in the subject. I have seen each extension met by the same objections raised against insurance of deposits—that it will encourage carelessness and indifference on the part of those protected.

I remember the fight in my own legislature over the Workmen's Compensation Act.

I remember one Saturday afternoon I rode out to the western part of the State in company with one of my fellow legislators who afterward became President of the United States. We were good friends. As I sat with him I noticed that he was gloomy. At last I turned to him and said, "Calvin, what makes you so glum today?" He was then in the senate. He said, "They have just killed my Workmen's Compensation Act."

That was only 25 years ago, and today there is not a man in the United States, in my belief, of any intelligence who would ask us to repeal a workmen's compensation act.

I have seen insurance extended in every direction, and I fail to understand why the depositors in a bank, persons who have no opportunity to know, who have in fact no knowledge about the interior affairs of the bank, who do not know what securities are being bought for the investment on their money or anything else about the use of their money—I do not see why those people also should not be insured against mischance that they cannot guard against and prevent. [Applause.]

But, sir, I recognize the difficulties in the way. I recognize the fact that undoubtedly strong, prosperous, well-conducted banks will have to contribute in some cases by reason of the weakness of some other banks. That is true of all insurance.

I have been insured by a life-insurance policy for the greater part of my life. I am still here, and I hope someone else will not have to cash in on that policy for some time. [Laughter and applause.]

But all these years I have been paying money every quarter for the benefit of dependents of somebody else less fortunate than myself—somebody who met with accident or who was not gifted with equal physical strength to withstand the ravages of time.

Will you say that there should be no insurance because the weak and poor are protected? "God help the poor, the rich can look out for themselves." [Applause.]

So, Mr. Chairman, I am hoping that a sound, prudent system may in the end be agreed upon which will carry into this field the benefits that insurance has brought in so many other fields.

The main issues here, so far as I can make out, are the treatment of the State banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve System and that of the closed member banks. The latter brings to the surface my sense of fairness. There are gentlemen who desire this insurance to be carried so far that every depositor in every bank that is already closed shall receive to the full every penny of his deposits. That is not insurance. That is charity.

Why should you give to one class of the country and not to another? Why should you give to depositors in banks, and not give to the merchants who have failed, not give to the men who have lost their homes by foreclosure of mortgages, not give to all of the other distressed? Why do you make fish of one and fowl of the other? Why draw these distinctions, and say because a man had his money in a bank, therefore, he shall get back every penny? I claim that is unfair, I claim it is unsound, I claim it is unreasonable and ought not to be permitted.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Hastily.

Mr. HOEPEL. What do you call this lending of money on securities which have no value? Is that charity, or is it good business on the part of the Government?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is inviting me into green fields, where I would like to stray, but unfortunately the hands of the clock persist in traveling, and I must limit my attention to the bill as it is. At the moment I am objecting to these retroactive provisions.

There are other parts of this title which, when it is considered in detail, I may desire to discuss, but I would use the few remaining minutes now at my command to make some general observations upon this bill.

The country has been led to believe we are about to revise our banking system so that hereafter there should be far less danger of suffering by depositors and injury to investors. We have the right to ask whether the assurance that this would be done is herein carried out. I maintain it is not carried out, that there will be grave disappointment when once the people of the land know how little has here been done. I would not be so cruel as to say that the mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse, for that would not be true. There are good things in this bill, things that ought to become law and that I am confident will become law, but it does not go to the heart of the question. The heart of the question you may find in the answer to another question, Why do banks fail?

In the last 10 years one third of the banks of this country have failed. One third of all the banks in this country have been unable to survive under our banking laws. Thousands, yes, millions of our people have been brought to distress by our failure to have a safe, sound, defensible banking system.

This bill does not provide that, it does not face the real issue, it does not attempt to answer the question of why banks fail; and until that question is answered, you will be disappointed. I am not one of those who criticize the President of the United States for taking the advice of men expert in various fields of knowledge. I am a believer in the expert. I ask why the expert is not brought into this field. I ask why the President does not bring to his command the ablest, the soundest, the most thoughtful, if you please, the most progressive men in the United States to tell him why, in the preparation of this bill, we have failed to meet the issue.

Such a group of men will find that we alone of all the countries in the world persist in the system of unit banking. I know that the moment I mention that name I am arousing the prejudice of two thirds of the men who are listening to me. I may be wrong in thinking that unit banking is one of the great causes of our troubles, but let us find out. Let us not rely on what has been virtually the snap judgment of one of your committees. We have had this session in the committee no discussion of that matter worth while. I want that question answered. I want to know why it is that there are no bank failures in England; why there are next to none in Canada; why in all the other countries of the globe there are better banking systems than we have; and so, whether I arouse the ire of some of my good friends on the committee, whether I arouse the ire of others who worship at the throne of unit bankers, I insist that this question will not be settled right until you have studied it and found out all the facts and have ascertained whether it is because of unit banking that we have so much suffered.

By their fruits ye shall know them, and by the fruits of a system under which one third of all its financial institutions go to ruin inside of 10 years—by those fruits certainly you may know something is wrong. You may know it deserves your study, and that there is nothing of more importance to the merchants, to the agriculturalists, to the industrialists, to the workingmen of this country than the discovery of the reason why banks fail. If you will answer that question and find out why banks fail, then you will be able to provide the remedy. [Applause.]

I yield whatever time I have remaining to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 16 minutes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, there are three parts to this bill. One attempts to dissociate what are known as "affiliates" from commercial banks, and for that effort Senator GLASS deserves the thanks of the Congress and the country, because he is the father of that very, very important provision of the bill.

Another part of the bill attempts to regulate the open-market operations of the Federal Reserve banks. In that provision I am not in entire accord, because it is an attempt to prevent the Federal Reserve banks from using their open-market operations for the purpose of stabilizing the currency of the country. However, as it is written it would, in my judgment, be totally ineffective, and therefore is not a serious defect in the bill.

No more important measure for the economic security and welfare of the country was ever offered to a legislative body than the bank-deposit insurance plan offered in this bill.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Does this bill in its present form give the depositors of the banks of the United States a bona-fide guaranty that when they place their money in the bank it will be safe?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It does. It guarantees all deposits up to $10,000. It guarantees deposits from $10,000 to $50,000 to the extent of 75 percent, and all deposits from $50,000 upward to the extent of 50 percent. I will say to the gentleman who asked the same question of the preceding speaker that within the first 60 years of our national banking system the entire system lost less than $75,000,000. This corporation will have assets of approximately $2,000,000,000.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Does the insurance corporation or guaranty corporation have a first lien upon the assets of a failed bank for whatever it must pay depositors?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It actually takes over the failed bank and sets up a new institution, pays off the depositors of the old bank, keeps the new institution running for 2 years, and if the local people want to reestablish the institution by buying stock in a new bank, they have 2 years in which to do it.

Mr. MAPES. Can the corporation take all of the assets of the failed bank to pay itself for the payments it makes to the depositors?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes; but after it pays off the depositors and reimburses itself for what it has to pay off, if there is any balance it goes back to the bank, so that it is not a money-making proposition.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. THOM. In the State of Ohio a great deal of our saving is through the medium of what is known as "building and loan associations." As I understand it, the building-and-loan association originally implied the idea that a person had to be a borrower in that institution, but in our State persons who are not borrowers and not owners of stock deposit their money in the building-and-loan associations.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This does not take care of building-and-loan associations.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will yield briefly, but I only have a few minutes.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman discuss the veto power which the corporation holds over the action of the State banking departments in certifying banks under this act?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will go into that. I only have a few minutes, so I must hurry.

The people of this country and of this world owe a great debt to the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. STEAGALL], who for 15 years, and for 12 years to my knowledge, has fought this battle for a bank-deposit guaranty. [Applause.] This time this bill will not only pass this House but it will pass the Senate and be signed by the President and will become a law.

Now, I will attempt to answer the question asked by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE]. Under the 5-minute rule the committee will offer two amendments. The chairman of the committee will offer an amendment to strike out section 3 of the bill; and when section 203, subsection (a), is read, I will offer an amendment. That is the subsection that applies to State banks. I will offer this amendment:

It is not the purpose of this subsection to discriminate in any manner against State nonmember and in favor of national or member banks, but the purpose is to provide all banks with the same opportunity to obtain and enjoy the benefits of this title. No bank shall be discriminated against because its capital stock is less than the amount required for eligibility for admission into the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. BOILEAU. Where is that to be offered?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That will be offered at the end of subsection (a) of section 302, at the top of page 55.

It seemed necessary to allow this corporation to examine State banks before permitting them to come into this insurance fund. It seemed necessary to let them continue to do it, but we propose to put into the act a rule of interpretation which shall instruct them that that section is not to be used for the purpose of putting the State banks out of business, but for the purpose of allowing the State banks to enjoy the privileges of that act, under the same conditions and circumstances that national banks and member banks can do.

Now, I am going to suggest to the members of the Committee that the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has for the last 8 months done, to my certain knowledge, the most intensive work on this bill. It would read like a romance if I could tell you the tremendous obstacles he has had to overcome to get this bill before the House. It is not exactly what he would want. It is not exactly what I would want, but it is, in good faith, a workable bank deposit insurance bill. It will actually do what it purports to do; and an individual in this country who puts his money in the bank, if this becomes law, will know that when he wants it he can get it out. [Applause.]

So, please approach the consideration of this bill with the understanding that your committee have gone just as far as they possibly could in helping the small institution in this country, in helping the small depositor; that it was extremely difficult to get any sort of legislation to insure bank deposits at all. The great bankers of this country are all opposed to it. Their power and authority—controlling, as they do, the credit of the country—is almost beyond belief; and it has taken labor, patience, and political strategy to get as far with this sort of legislation as we have been able to. In order that it may not be defeated, in order that nothing may happen to it, I am going to ask the Members of this House to vote down any amendment which is not supported by the committee. I give you my assurance that the committee has gone and will go as far as it can without losing the benefits of the legislation entirely, legislation which will be such a wonderful step in social service, unprecedented in the history of the world.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. I propose to offer an amendment providing that banks may not charge the borrower over 100 percent more than they themselves pay for deposits. I offer the amendment particularly in reference to Postal Savings. The banks of America today have over $1,000,000,000 which they receive from the Government for 2½-percent interest. Under this bill they have the right to charge borrowers up to 7 percent. I think my amendment ought to be accepted prohibiting banks from charging more than 100 percent in excess of the cost to them of getting the money they loan.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman, of course, has the privilege of offering any amendment he may see fit. As I indicated before, the committee has gone as far, and will go as far as it can safely go without endangering the life of the bill.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Once we embark on the guarantee or insurance of bank deposits, would it not be advisable to cease payment of interest upon Postal Savings deposits? Has the gentleman considered the advisability of such a policy?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I may say to my friend that as soon as the people know their deposits are guaranteed they will forget all about the Postal Savings System.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The gentleman made the statement that this insurance corporation would have a fund of $2,000,000,000.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Nearly $2,000,000,000.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Why does this bill require that the United States put in $150,000,000 to start this company going?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The Government has received about $750,000,000 as earnings of the Federal Reserve banks. It seemed to us it was but fair and right, inasmuch as practically the whole country will get the benefits of this act, that the Federal Treasury should contribute at least a part of the capital.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then it will be a contribution of $150,000,000?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; the Government takes stock and will be entitled to dividends on its stock.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Section (e), page 51, provides that banks shall subscribe certain amounts, up to one half of 1 percent of their total deposits. Is any part of this subscription to be passed on to the depositors, or is it to be solely and wholly paid by the banks themselves?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It is to be paid by the banks themselves.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. The gentleman knows I am for the bill. I voted for every bank guaranty bill that has been brought up, but will not the gentleman make very plain to us how this bill will affect our State banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve, banks having a small capital, say, of $25,000?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They are not required to have any particular amount of capital to get in.

Mr. GLOVER. The only requirement then, is that they be liquid and solvent and willing to carry out certain conditions imposed on them?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is all that is necessary.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. In the matter of State banks does not the gentleman believe that a report of the State bank examiner showing the solvency of a State bank should be sufficient so that State banks can operate without a lot of further red tape in the Department in Washington?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This corporation will only have two members who are connected with the Federal Reserve System and three, the major part, it is provided shall be appointed by the President. This would seem to indicate that the State banks will not be discriminated against. It looks to me as though they will have full and fair opportunity to receive the benefit of the insurance fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE I

SECTION 1. As used in this act and in any provision of law amended by this act—

(a) The terms "banks", "national bank", "national banking association", "member bank", "board", "district", and "reserve bank" shall have the meanings assigned to them in section 1 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.

(b) Except where otherwise specifically provided, the term "affiliate" shall include any corporation, business trust, association, or other similar organization—

(1) Of which a member bank, directly or indirectly, owns or controls either a majority of the voting shares or more than 50 percent of the number of shares voted for the election of its directors, trustees, or other persons exercising similar functions at the preceding election, or controls in any manner the election of a majority of its directors, trustees, or other persons exercising similar functions; or

(2) Of which control is held, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or in any other manner, by the shareholders of a member bank who own or control either a majority of the shares of such bank or more than 50 percent of the number of shares voted for the election of directors of such bank at the preceding election, or by trustees for the benefit of the shareholders of any such bank; or

(3) Of which a majority of its directors, trustees, or other persons exercising similar functions are directors of any one member bank.

(c) The term "holding company affiliate" shall include any corporation, business trust, association, or other similar organization—

(1) Which owns or controls, directly or indirectly, either a majority of the shares of capital stock of a member bank or more than 50 percent of the number of shares voted for the election of directors of any one bank at the preceding election, or controls in any manner the election of a majority of the directors of any one bank; or

(2) For the benefit of whose shareholders or members all or substantially all the capital stock of a member bank is held by trustees.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

WHO GOT THE GOLD

Mr. Chairman, before the Federal Reserve Act came into operation the national banks of the United States kept a percentage of their lawfully required gold reserves in their own vaults on their own premises. Each national bank kept the remainder of its gold reserve with its city correspondent. Gold was widely diffused. There were over 7,000 national banks and each one had gold on its premises. The principle of dividing a risk for safety's sake was well observed. Gold circulated freely in those days. It met the constant challenge of paper money and insured its prompt and quick redemption. The currency of the United States at that time was sound. Now all is changed. United States currency, even gold certificates, which are evidences of contract, have been pronounced irredeemable. The gold of the United States, in a great hoard, is under the control not of the Government but of private interests which have unlawfully taken it away from the people by currency tricks and low-class financial juggling. The blackest page in the history of piracy has been written in the United States during the past 19 years by the administrators of the Federal Reserve Act. To them and to them alone this country owes its ruin.

Mr. Chairman, gold is the prize as it has always been the prize of unscrupulous men.

Twenty years ago the gold in the vaults of our national banks, the gold in the pockets of the people, the gold in the cash drawers of our independent business men, and the gold in the independent United States Treasury attracted the covetous gaze of European financial adventurers. A number of them had already fastened themselves down upon the United States to batten on our growing wealth. Others came and brought the seeds of financial corruption with them. The evil central bank lifted its head here. The United States had twice risen to cast off the accursed thing. The first bank of the United States was unable to obtain a renewal of its charter and went out of existence in the year 1811. The second bank of the United States, commonly known as Biddle's Bank, reached the place where it dominated the Government and it was from that pinnacle of worldly success for itself and ruin for the country that Andrew Jackson, almost single-handed, dislodged it.

WHAT ANDREW JACKSON THOUGHT OF CENTRALIZED BANKS

In his farewell message to the American people, before he went back to the Hermitage, he uttered the following words concerning it:

The immense capital and peculiar privileges bestowed upon it enabled it to exercise despotic sway over the other banks in every part of the country. From its superior strength it could seriously injure, if not destroy, the business of any one of them which might incur its resentment; and it openly claimed for itself the power of regulating the currency throughout the United States. In other words, it asserted (and it undoubtedly possessed) the power to make money plenty or scarce at its pleasure, at any time and in any quarter of the Union, by controlling the issues of other banks and permitting an expansion or compelling a general contraction of the circulating medium according to its own will. The other banking institutions were sensible of its strength, and they soon generally became its obedient instruments, ready at all times to execute its mandates; and with the banks necessarily went also that numerous class of persons in our commercial cities who depend altogether on bank credits for their solvency and means of business, and who are therefore obliged, for their own safety, to propitiate the favor of the money power by distinguished zeal and devotion in its service. The result of the ill-advised legislation which established this great monopoly was to concentrate the whole moneyed power of the Union, with its boundless means of corruption and its numerous dependents, under the direction and command of one acknowledged head, thus organizing this particular interest as one body and securing to it unity and concert of action throughout the United States and enabling it to bring forward upon any occasion its entire and undivided strength to support or defeat any measure of the Government. In the hands of this formidable power, thus perfectly organized, was also placed unlimited dominion over the amount of the circulating medium, giving it the power to regulate the value of property and the fruits of labor in every quarter of the Union, and to bestow prosperity or bring ruin upon any city or section of the country as might best comport with its own interest or policy.

We are not left to conjecture how the moneyed power, thus organized and with such a weapon in its hands, would be likely to use it. The distress and alarm which pervaded and agitated the whole country when the Bank of the United States waged war upon the people in order to compel them to submit to its demands cannot yet be forgotten. The ruthless and unsparing temper with which whole cities and communities were oppressed, individuals impoverished and ruined, and a scene of cheerful prosperity suddenly changed into one of gloom and despondency ought to be indelibly impressed on the memory of the people of the United States. If such was its power in a time of peace, what would it not have been in a season of war, with an enemy at your doors? No nation but the freemen of the United States could have come out victorious from such a contest; yet, if you had not conquered, the Government would have passed from the hands of the many to the hands of the few, and this organized money power from its secret conclave would have dictated the choice of your highest officers and compelled you to make peace or war, as best suited their own wishes. The forms of your Government might for a time have remained, but its living spirit would have departed from it.

The distress and suffering inflicted on the people by the bank are some of the fruits of that system of policy which is continually striving to enlarge the authority of the Federal Government beyond the limits fixed by the Constitution—

Mr. Chairman, these words might have been written yesterday—

The powers enumerated in that instrument do not confer on Congress the right to establish such a corporation as the Bank of the United States, and the evil consequences which followed may warn us of the danger of departing from the true rule of construction and of permitting temporary circumstances or the hope of better promoting the public welfare to influence in any degree our decisions upon the extent of the authority of the general Government. Let us abide by the Constitution as it is written, or amend it in the constitutional mode if it is found to be defective.

The severe lessons of experience will, I doubt not, be sufficient to prevent Congress from again chartering such a monopoly, even if the Constitution did not present an insuperable objection to it. But you must remember, my fellow citizens, that eternal vigilance by the people is the price of liberty, and that you must pay the price if you wish to secure the blessing. It behooves you, therefore, to be watchful in your States as well as in the Federal Government. The power which the moneyed interest can exercise when concentrated under a single head and with our present system of currency was sufficiently demonstrated in the struggle made by the Bank of the United States.

Defeated in the general Government, the same class of intriguers and politicians will now resort to the States and endeavor to obtain there the same organization which they failed to perpetuate in the Union; and with specious and deceitful plans of public advantages and State interests and State pride they will endeavor to establish in the different States one moneyed institution with overgrown capital and exclusive privileges sufficient to enable it to control the operations of the other banks. Such an institution will be pregnant with the same evils produced by the Bank of the United States, although its sphere of action is more confined, and in the State in which it is chartered the money power will be able to embody its whole strength and to move together with undivided force to accomplish any object it may wish to attain. You have already had abundant evidence of its power to inflict injury upon the agricultural, mechanical, and laboring classes of society, and over those whose engagements in trade or speculation render them dependent on bank facilities the dominion of the State monopoly will be absolute and their obedience unlimited. With such a bank and a paper currency the money power would in a few years govern the State and control its measures, and if a sufficient number of States can be induced to create such establishments, the time will soon come when it will again take the field against the United States and succeed in perfecting and perpetuating its organization by a charter from Congress.

It is one of the serious evils of our present system of banking that it enables one class of society—and that by no means a numerous one—by its control over the currency to act injuriously upon the interests of all the others and to exercise more than its just proportion of influence in political affairs. The agricultural, the mechanical, and the laboring classes have little or no share in the direction of the great moneyed corporations, and from their habits and the nature of their pursuits they are incapable of forming extensive combinations to act together with united force. Such concert of action may sometimes be produced in a single city or in a small district of country by means of personal communications with each other, but they have no regular or active correspondence with those who are engaged in similar pursuits in distant places; they have but little patronage to give to the press, and exercise but a small share of influence over it; they have no crowd of dependents about them who hope to grow rich without labor by their countenance and favor, and who are therefore always ready to execute their wishes. The planter, the farmer, the mechanic, and the laborer all know that their success depends upon their own industry and economy, and that they must not expect to become suddenly rich by the fruits of their toil.

Yet these classes of society form the great body of the people of the United States; they are the bone and sinew of the country—men who love liberty and desire nothing but equal rights and equal laws, and who, moreover, hold the great mass of our national wealth, although it is distributed in moderate amounts among the millions of freemen who possess it. But with overwhelming numbers and wealth on their side they are in constant danger of losing their fair influence in the Government, and with difficulty maintain their just rights against the incessant efforts daily made to encroach upon them. The mischief springs from the power which the moneyed interest derives from a paper currency which they are able to control, from the multitude of corporations with exclusive privileges which they have succeeded in obtaining in the different States and which are employed to gether for their benefit; and unless you become more watchful in your States and check this spirit of monopoly and thirst for exclusive privileges you will in the end find that the most important powers of Government have been given or bartered away and the control over your dearest interests has passed into the hands of these corporations.

Thus spoke Andrew Jackson, who destroyed the Second Bank of the United States and reestablished in this country the financial freedom of the individual according to the intention of the founders.

With the destruction of the Second Bank of the United States the golden age of America began. What though some people were poor and others were obliged to address themselves to mighty tasks for which the means were not always sufficient, the United States grew upward. The people were united; they became disunited, and then they became united again because, as Lincoln said, the Nation could not endure "half slave and half free", and it was not written in the stars that a nation "so conceived and so dedicated" should perish from the face of the earth. The heroic struggle of the people of the United States from the day when Andrew Jackson broke the monopoly of Biddle's Bank by taking United States Government funds out of it, thereby delivering the United States from the greatest peril that had up to that time beset it, down to the day when a monopoly of money and credit was established here by means of the Federal Reserve Act, was the golden age of the United States.

DANGEROUS BEASTS MAKE SOFTEST APPROACH

Mr. Chairman, I have been told that some of the most dangerous beasts in the jungle make the softest approach. Those who approached the American people in order to obtain their gold walked softly and spoke with what appeared to be gentle reasonableness. The American people were told that panics would be prevented and that no panic would ever happen here again if a part of the reserves of our national banks were put into a central pool for use in emergencies. The American people were unsuspecting. They did not take the trouble to subject the arguments to the test of reason. The Federal Reserve Act was passed, and a part of the gold reserves of every national bank in the country was put into a central pool for the benefit of money lenders and foreign and domestic speculators. While this was being done a great war broke out. There has been a great deal of discussion in regard to the origin of that war. Some say that Germany started it; others say that France was waiting for it; and still others say that England might easily have prevented it. Such discussions always seem to me to be beside the mark. I do not think that nations start wars. I think that financiers give the signal. I do not find the origin of the World War where others look for it.

The international money lenders intended to finance the World War on an inflation of American credit. Several events occurred before the murder of the Archduke at Sarajevo, any one of which might have led to war had the bankers been ready with their apparatus for financing the feuds of Europe with the labor and the products and the wealth and the savings of the American people. Six months after the Federal Reserve Act was passed the war began.

Mr. Chairman, the international bankers were not long content with the percentage of gold reserves placed in a single pool for their benefit by the Federal Reserve Act. They lifted up their eyes to the field and saw that it was white for another harvest. On June 21, 1917, using the war as an excuse, they had the Federal Reserve Board send to the Congress a batch of ill-conceived and disastrous amendments to the Federal Reserve Act. Of these vicious amendments I will, at the moment, mention but one. That was an amendment requiring the national banks to surrender the remainder of their gold reserves to the central pool. Concerning this amendment of June 21, 1917, to section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, the Honorable Charles A. Lindbergh, of Minnesota, presented a minority report, as follows:

I cannot join with the Committee in recommending that the member banks of the Federal Reserve banks be authorized to remove from their own vaults any portion of reserves now required of them to be kept in their vaults. I was first to suggest in our original committee meetings the reduction of the reserves required to be kept. That reduction was adopted, I supposed, in the interest of the localities where deposits are made. But this amendment proposes to let the banks remove all the reserves from their vaults. It is admitted to be the purpose, practically stated by Mr. Warburg, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, that all the lawful money be taken from the country generally and placed in the 12 Federal Reserve banks. He stated to the Committee, with reference to the proposed amendment, that, if adopted, "with the pressure we could place upon them, it would be done."

I took down that statement and later asked Mr. Warburg what he meant by "the pressure we could place upon them." His answer indicated that, through the Federal Reserve Board, pressure would be brought to bear on the banks which would practically force them to remove the lawful money from their own vaults and place it in their Federal Reserve banks. While the banks themselves own the Federal Reserve banks and would profit thereby, I do not believe that the smaller country banks would be so disloyal to their localities as to take all the lawful money of their depositors and centralize it into the 12 Federal Reserve cities.

I was opposed to the original bill. I know that many Members voted for it under protest, but I doubt that these would have voted for it if the bill then had given to the Federal Reserve banks all the lawful money. Of course, anyone owning any money that is in circulation can get it redeemed. Any bank will accommodate its customers, and also courteously exchange it for others than customers as things now are, but if the bank would be required to ship currency to the reserve centers and have these ship back lawful money it would incur expense. The people may not generally observe whether they have lawful money or not as long as it all passes at par, but if they find out, as they will and have a right to, that the money left to circulate among them is not the best you may find that they will seek the best for the very purpose of hoarding. If the Federal Reserve banks are going to set the example of hoarding the lawful money, not even the bankers could "peep" if the people followed the example.

Congress has given to the bankers the exclusive privilege to inflate the currency several billion dollars. Nearly one and one half billions of dollars are granted to them in the act of August 4 last. If this amendment is passed, allowing the banks to be put in a position where the Federal Reserve Board can "with the pressure" it "could place upon them", force all the lawful money into the Federal Reserve banks, they will be able to secure from Uncle Sam the issue of still more bank currency. What would happen if the whole system were to break down? Who would get the lawful money? Do you think it would be the plain people, who have no time to study the different kinds of money? Would they be the first to get into the vaults of the Reserve banks, which belong to the other banks? No answer is needed. We all know who would get it.

The very purpose of accumulating all this lawful money in the central banks is to make it the basis for further inflation of credit for one thing, and another to enable certain speculators to pluck a prize that will be ready when the readjustment from the effect of the European war begins. This is the credit that the bankers sell, and is in effect backed by Uncle Sam. The plans are laid to sell that credit to an enormous extent in order to reap interest returns from the borrowers to enrich the professional speculators.

We are approaching the limit, the falling-off place. It is utterly impossible to keep the pace. Practically all of us will suffer when the break comes. If it should come while the European war is on, the interests, as well as those responsible for this kind of legislation, will have the good fortune of being able to make the war the goat. But in reality the only thing the war has to do with it is to hasten the day of reckoning. No country can long withstand this drain upon the general population caused by centralized wealth through this process of pyramiding credits on which to collect interest and in payment seize the products of the toilers. After the war there will be a readjustment of world-wide influence. The New York bankers and their affiliated interests everywhere are preparing to make a "ten-strike" in that readjustment. They wish to use the capital of the country—that is, the people's deposits—to accomplish that. That is the purpose of their pressing for this amendment. They want to gather all the lawful money into their 12 Reserve banks. They want the kind of money they can use to buy out the Europeans and make the enormous profits that will result.

That capital may be used by the speculators to make us pay dividends and profits on. It will be just that much more to offset against the labor of the toiling millions—the "reasonable profits", as the courts term it. These people figure far in advance; so in anticipation of the great rake-off that they hope to secure in the near future, they now seek to centralize the aggregate deposits of the lawful money belonging to the people in order that it may be within their control when the prize is ready for plucking. If it were merely a question between our speculators and foreign speculators, we might prefer the success of our own, but why permit them to gather in all of the people's lawful money to make the speculation on?

Mr. Chairman, the more I consider this minority report of the House Banking and Currency Committee by our former Member, the Honorable Charles A. Lindbergh, of Minnesota, the more I admire and respect that man. I regret that he died young and that the House lost the benefit of his moral grandeur and intellectual power. There are those who opposed him in this matter who will bear the mark of Cain to the day of judgment. He sleeps unsullied—the constant champion of the rights of man.

BIG BANKERS RULE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

The disastrous amendment that Lindbergh denounced was suggested and recommended by the Federal Reserve Board. It was watched over with jealous care while the bill for its adoption was pending in the Senate and the House. When either Chamber departed from the form dictated to it by the Federal Reserve Board, the matter was at once called to the attention of the legislators. I have read, with a sense of acute distaste, some of the communications which were prepared and sent to members of the Banking and Currency Committee in regard to this and other proposed amendments to the Federal Reserve Act by W. P. G. Harding, who was at that time the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board. I have some of those pages at hand but I will not read them because I do not wish to see them reproduced in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is, after all, the journal of a legislative body and not the journal of a body which will for long suffer itself to be ordered into action by the Federal Reserve Board. But I will say that the domination attempted to be exercised over Congress as shown by those communications has been continuously in evidence ever since. What the Federal Reserve Board asks for, it expects to obtain. The Federal Reserve Board represents the "invisible government" of the United States.

INTERNATIONAL BANKERS GOT CONTROL OF GOLD

Mr. Chairman, by the passage of this disastrous amendment of June 21, 1917, the private interests which were seeking to have all the gold in the United States placed in a central pool obtained control of all the gold reserves of all the national banks in the United States. Thereafter, a part of every dollar deposited in a national bank was sent to the central pool for the use of discount bankers and speculators. Mr. Chairman, it was a great mistake to seize any part of the gold reserves of our national banks by force of class legislation such as the Federal Reserve Act and it was a worse mistake to require the national banks to surrender the remainder of their gold reserves to the central pool. The reserves of the national banks belong to the national-bank depositors. With what justice could those bank deposits have been arbitrarily taken from the communities where they were earned and deposited and have been sent to the great gambling center of the American continent to feed the maw of international speculation? With what justice can the gold reserves of our national banks be left in that discount bankers' gambling pool now that the stucco-fronted, holler-than-thou Federal Reserve Board has announced the bankruptcy of the Federal Reserve banks? Their bankruptcy has been announced by their refusal to redeem their special Federal Reserve currency.

The Steagall bill shows that the Federal Reserve Board is incompetent to exercise proper supervision over the Federal Reserve banks and that it will cost the Government 150 millions to cushion their mistakes and to have the future losses of national banks transferred to the universal goat, the long-suffering American public. Mr. Chairman, it is no use to beat around the bush. The Federal Reserve System is doomed unless it "mends its ways", and the Wall Street bankers know it. The Federal Reserve banks have violated their charters. They are bankrupt and as for the Federal Reserve Board, which was to have been a "supreme court of banking", it now presents an almost pitiful spectacle. A little group of fallible and frightened men surveying the wreckage of the national banking system of the United States! The international money changers may keep this Board in the Treasury a while longer, but the day is coming when it will have to move out, bag and baggage. Mr. Chairman, this issue is the great political question of the day. The people of the United States are lining up against the creatures of privilege. The people of the United States are demanding a return to the Constitution and a return to democratic self-government. The party of Jefferson will stand with them. The party of Jefferson will stay close to the people in the approaching struggle, and if there is any disciple of Jefferson, real or pretended, who does not intend to uphold the principles of Jefferson, now is the time for him to make other connections. The party of Jefferson can dispense with him.

We cannot have the present Federal Reserve Act and the Constitution of the United States operating here at one and the same time. The Constitution is a charter of human freedom. The Federal Reserve Act is a charter of monopoly granted to a special class in direct defiance of the Constitution. A certain international banker used to say that if the Federal Reserve System ever got into politics that would be the end of it. It is in politics now, Mr. Speaker, and it is on its way to join the Second Bank of the United States on the scrapheap of special privilege.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein portions of the minority report of former Representative Lindbergh and portions of a statement by former President Jackson and to also include excerpts from volume 136, May 20, 1933, of the Financial Chronicle, concerning the resignation of Eugene Black as Federal Reserve Director at Atlanta.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, everybody appreciates the importance of the pending bill to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for the guaranty of bank deposits.

The bill contains 76 pages and is divided into three titles.

I am going to confine my remarks for the most part to title III, which deals with the subject of the guaranty of bank deposits.

The committees of the House and Senate have been studying the provisions of this bill for more than a year, and the bill now under consideration is the result of the most careful study. There is a great number of amendments included in the bill changing provisions of existing law. These are extremely technical, and Members of Congress not on the Committee on Banking and Currency are unable to give sufficient time to a detailed study of these amendments, particularly to title I, to intelligently and effectively discuss them. Some of them are very far-reaching in effect; but in order that one may familiarize himself with any amendment, he must compare the amended section with the original act and must know the interpretation that has been placed upon the original section. This would require much time and more than the average Member of Congress could devote to the bill.

In the time allotted to me I want to discuss briefly title III, which provides for the creation of a Federal deposit insurance corporation and the guaranty of bank deposits.

I have been advocating the guaranty of bank deposits ever since I have been in Congress. There is a Nation-wide demand for such a law. The guaranty of deposits is, first, in the interest of the general depositors themselves, and particularly the smaller ones. When the amount of money a small depositor has in a bank is lost, as a general thing, he has no other credit, and he therefore suffers a great loss. Second, the guaranty of bank deposits is in the interest of the shareholders of the bank.

This bill provides for the establishment of a fund of approximately $450,000,000, as follows: The Federal Reserve banks are to contribute to the extent of one half of their surplus on January 1, 1933, which will amount to about $150,000,000. There is to be subscribed for stock $150,000,000, to be appropriated out of Government funds, and the banks are required to contribute to the extent of one half of 1 percent of their deposits, and this will provide a fund of approximately $450,000,000.

Further provision is made that the corporation may issue notes, bonds, and debentures in an amount aggregating not more than three times the amount of its capital. This will provide a guaranty fund of approximately $2,000,000,000. In the event a bank is in a failing condition and its assets are taken over by the corporation, the depositors of $10,000 or less are paid in full at once. Seventy-five percent of deposits of $50,000 and 50 percent of the amount of deposits in excess of $50,000 are paid.

The bill takes generous care of State banks and permits them to take advantage of the law by giving them the same privileges of national banks upon compliance with the law by the State banks and subscribing for the same amount of stock as would be required of such State banks or trust companies if they became members of the Federal Reserve System. There is no discrimination against State banks.

The States are of course privileged to enact further bank deposit guaranty laws for the benefit of State banks, but this bill permits both national and State banks to take equal advantage of the provisions of this law. There cannot be any just complaint of any discrimination against State banks.

I have been fighting for the guaranty of bank deposits ever since I came to Congress. Year after year I have introduced such a bill, and during the present session I reintroduced the bill in a slightly amended form, H.R. 3359. This bill would require every bank belonging to the Federal Reserve System to furnish surety bonds for the protection of its depositors. In my State, and I assume this is true of all States where a bank is designated as a depository for public funds, such as Federal, school, county, city, State, or Indian funds, it is required to give a surety bond or to deposit certain securities, such as Government, State, or municipal bonds, to protect these special deposits. I have frequently stated, and want to restate it now in order to emphasize it, that I have never seen any difference in principle in requiring a bank to guarantee the deposit of public funds, such as I have indicated, and those of the general depositors.

The bill which I have introduced would require each bank to insure its own deposits by furnishing a bond of 25 percent of the total or aggregate amount of the general deposits, exclusive of interest-bearing time deposits. The Comptroller of the Currency reports for the year 1927, in his annual report for that year, page 17, as follows:

The average percentage of dividends paid on claims proved against the 706 receiverships that have been finally closed was 74.74 percent. Had offsets, loans paid, and other disbursements been included in this calculation the disbursements to creditors would show an average of 80.95 percent.

For this reason I thought that a bond of 25 percent would in all but extraordinary cases be sufficient to cover the loss and pay the depositors of any bank. However, I appreciate that during this great emergency, when banking structures have been crumbling, that it will perhaps be impossible for the banks at present to comply with such a law to make bonds in the sum of 23 percent of their total deposits. That could have been done when my bill was first introduced 10 years ago, and I think in normal times that the bill I have introduced is sound in principle and should be enacted into law. Every man insures his own property, his own life, and pays his own premiums. I think when the depression is over that we should enact a law requiring each bank to take out its own insurance for the protection of its general depositors.

I appreciate that this cannot perhaps be done at the present session, and I am therefore in favor of the provision in the bill creating a Federal deposit-insurance corporation. This bill will do more to restore confidence throughout the country than any other bill pending in Congress. It has been stated over and over again that unreasoning fear has seized hold of the people of the country and caused them to withdraw their money from the banks and hoard it, thus taking it out of circulation. This reduces the circulating medium to the extent of the amount hoarded. If this bill is enacted, all depositors great and small would redeposit their money in the banks because they know it would be safe. This would increase bank deposits greatly and from the use of the increased deposits the banks will be able to earn more than the one half of 1 percent of their aggregate deposits assessed against them.

If this bill is enacted, there will be a closer supervision over the banks and there will be fewer failures. When a bank fails there is not only a serious loss to the depositors but the general business of the community suffers, and, of course, the direct loss falls upon the shareholders of the bank. In my judgment it is short-sighted policy for the banks to oppose the payment of one half of 1 percent of their deposits when by so doing they are assured of additional deposits and increased loans.

In 1913 the banks of the country fought the enactment of the Federal Reserve Bank Act but later appreciated that it was a mistake and that the system properly administered was in their interest. As has been stated here today, much depends upon the administration of the law. We must and should assume the law is to be honestly and sympathetically administered, and if this is done it will do more to restore confidence than any other legislation we are to enact during this session of Congress.

There may be some provisions of the bill which need amending. I have not been able to study and analyze all of them. If the bill is enacted, undoubtedly when it is being administered it may be found that other amendments are necessary to be made during the next session of Congress. However, let me say that this bill is a step in the right direction, and that I most heartily favor and approve this or any other bill that has for its purpose the guaranty of general bank deposits. Unfortunately, more than one third of our banks have failed within the last 5 years. This of itself shows the necessity for the enactment of this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Does the gentleman know how the rate in this bill compares with the rates of bonding companies?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know what rates the bonding companies would charge such insurance now under present conditions.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. They do not do that now.

Mr. HASTINGS. For that reason the provisions of my bill could not be enacted and made effective during this period of depression; but when first introduced, and before the depression, it could have been, and when normal business conditions are restored each bank should guarantee its own deposits. In further answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, I think the rate charged by insurance companies was about one half of 1 percent.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I am interested in an amendment which a member of the committee, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, may soon offer to the bill, which purports to permit State banks to come under the provisions of the bill. I do not think we could enact any bill that would be more pleasing to the people of the country than a bank insurance law. This is a crying need, and the American people demand it.

It is impossible to enumerate all the injustices and hardships that have been brought about through bank failures. I hope this amendment of Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH will be so worded that there will be no question that the State banks can avail themselves of the privilege of coming under this law, if they so desire and meet the assessments which will be required.

The bill as passed last year in the House provided for this very thing; but if it is left to a Federal Board to administer, I am afraid we will find ourselves in the same predicament that we have been in with some of the Federal bureaus and agencies now in existence. These bureaus rarely meet the needs or wishes of the people, unless they are expressly so commanded.

So I hope the amendment will be so worded that it will be mandatory that if the State banks meet the assessment requirements, they can and must be admitted, rather than to leave it to the discretion of the board.

This is a serious situation with which we are confronted. Banks have been closed up, fortunes of the rich and pennies of the poor carried away, destroyed, or even stolen. Immediately after the collapse of the real-estate boom in my State our citizens lost millions of dollars in deposits, with no recourse, and our people have not even yet been able to overcome these adversities, losses, and hardships. Life savings, checking deposits, charity funds, church funds wiped out alike, leaving many destitute and almost desperate.

It is time that we pass a law so secure that when a man puts his money in a bank he will know for sure that when he comes back it will be there the same as he does when he deposits in his own post office. [Applause.] It is only fair and just that our citizens be protected from the unwise, the unscrupulous, and dishonest.

There is no reason why one man should take another's earnings and use it in wild speculation and also loan it to others unable to pay. This abuse of the American people must cease. Deposits must either be insured or guaranteed or the amount of loans regulated in proportion to capital stock and surplus. This swindling of the American people must cease. Why, the former officials of closed banks are even trying to commit self-destruction. They dread to face the story of their own mismanagement and probable theft. The Congress should and can successfully regulate and control banking. I do not indict all bankers; some are honest and possess the greatest integrity. In some instances it is the system and the economic conditions and not the individual, but there have been those who handle depositors' money in a way that they would not handle their own. I hope this bill will put a stop to this orgy of speculation with depositors' funds throughout the United States and make safe in the future our bank deposits. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. I am in favor generally of all the provisions of this bill, as a member of the committee, and I want to add my humble testimony to the great amount of work that has been done on the bill by the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House and by several of the other members of the committee, both majority and minority. Only one thing, in my opinion, has been standing between the people of this country and their being pushed over the brink, perhaps into a communistic state, and that is the confidence and the credit, if you please, the people have had, and I hope still have in the Government of the United States. That is one of the reasons, and it is reason enough, why I am for the deposit-insurance features of the bill, which have been discussed here today and which I will not now attempt to rediscuss.

I call the attention of the House to section 309, page 75, of the bill, for which I, perhaps, more than any other member of the committee, was responsible. That is the section which forbids a bank from engaging in the business of operating an insurance agency. I come from up-State New York. I was born and brought up on a farm. I am familiar with the little village and hamlet, and in every one of those places, as well as in the larger towns and cities, you will find an insurance agent who is capable of and who does honestly advise his clients with regard to all forms of insurance.

To allow any bank to engage in the business of local insurance is to subject that man who maintains an office and who pays a tax to unfair competition. Besides, writing and selling insurance is not a proper function of a bank. I think that is so obvious that further argument on my part is unnecessary.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] will offer an amendment to this section, which has been considered, and with which I may say in advance I agree. I hope that the entire bill will be passed, and I hope particularly that this section will not be weakened or emasculated, though I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina. It is in the interest of protecting the man who is expert in his line of business. I refer to a general insurance agent. It is in the interest of protecting him against unfair competition. Perhaps there are other Members of the House of Representatives who have had the experience of going to a bank and trying to get a loan, or a note renewed, and who have in that way learned of the credit pressure that can be put upon one. That is why I am in favor of this, and I am in favor of those who are in need of insurance in any of its forms being given the advice of disinterested experts. [Applause]

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, in my opinion, this is one of the most important pieces of legislation that has come before this Congress or that could come before it. The country is looking for this kind of legislation. The return to normalcy, the return back to business prosperity, is dependent largely upon legislation of this kind. People want to know when they put their money in a bank, where it may be used, that it is absolutely safe. As it is now, the banks have lost confidence in the people and the people in the banks, and as a result of that condition we have banks transacting practically no business at all. When you pass this bill and insure the depositors of men and women who have saved their earnings, it will go into the banks at once. It is now hiding away. You cannot blame them for it. Take the bank failures we have had in the United States for the last 3 or 4 years, and especially for the last year. Who can blame the individual who has a little hard-earned money for getting a lockbox and hiding his money away. If he puts it in a bank, he does not know whether the bank will fail or not. When this is passed, you are going to find that all that money will flow back into the banks that is now hidden away, and then you will have money to carry on the business of our country. Not only that, but you will have men willing to invest in bank stock. A man who has good judgment and knows how to use his money is very slow to purchase bank stock anywhere at the present time. The truth of the matter is that in the smaller banks nobody would care to invest at all, because if the bank fails they would be called upon for a double assessment, just as they have recently through a court decision in my district, where my friends had to pay $40,000 on a double indemnity. When this legislation passes, there will be none of that. When this is passed and our banks get under this law, my opinion is that we will have very few bank failures thereafter, for the reason that this will bring them under careful and close supervision of those who understand and know a good banking business. And we ought to have that kind of business or we ought not to have any at all.

I am vitally interested in that part of this bill which permits our State banks that are not under the Federal Reserve to come in under this protection. I do not want to support any kind of national legislation that would crush out our smaller banks in the States, that are serving a useful purpose in every community in which they undertake to function. I want to help them, and this bill will help them.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does the gentleman have any idea that this bill will do anything other than close out State banks which have small capital surplus?

Mr. GLOVER. Oh, I am not alarmed as the gentleman is on everything that comes up. [Laughter and applause.] I have confidence in the administration of this act. I believe that under the administration of the bill we are now considering, these banks will be taken care of; that is, those that are liquid. I do not believe any other kind of bank ought to receive a man's deposits at all. If it is not in a solvent condition, they have no right to hold out to the public that they are solvent and receive the funds of individuals, and then fail possibly the next day. With this kind of restriction over them, that condition will not prevail. I think this will mean that many of the banks that are now closed, which can come under the provisions of this bill, will come back into active operation [applause], and we will have prosperity come back to this country. I am supporting it on that ground. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER] has expired.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GLOVER. I have the utmost confidence in the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency as well as the committee which has drafted this bill. I know very little about banking myself. I know how to struggle to get out of the red when I get there, and that is about my knowledge of banking; but I do know the effects of banking as well as anybody, and I believe that the committee which has studied this bill has studied it carefully, and I am going along with the committee on the bill and I hope to see it enacted into law and signed by the President and in operation within the next 10 days. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word.

Now, in considering this bill that which counts is that which is written into the bill, not that which here is glibly spoken, and I invite the attention of the members of the committee to page 22.

Section 5138 provides that no bank shall be given a national charter in a town of less than 6,000 population, except that its capital stock be not less than $50,000.

Then on page 23, the very next page, it specifically provides:

No applying bank shall be admitted to membership in a Federal Reserve bank unless it possesses a paid-up unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated, under the provisions of the National Bank Act, as amended.

That means clearly that no State bank anywhere in the United States can enter the Federal Reserve, after the enactment of this law, unless it has a capital of at least $50,000. Now, where does that leave the ordinary country bank in Arkansas or Kansas or the other agricultural States, when it comes to a State bank's applying for membership in the Federal Reserve?

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McGUGIN. No; I cannot yield now. I will later.

Let us turn over to title III, page 53. Section 302 is a joker section as it stands now, and is lulling State banks into destruction if this body permits this bill to be enacted with this section as it now stands. It provides first that State banks shall come in upon certification of the State authority, but then it follows with these words, "After examination by and approval of the Corporation." Why these additional words except to trap the State banks into eternal destruction, and force a 1-bank system in this country? Why these words "after examination by and approval of the Corporation"? Why not let it stand with the provision that State banks shall enter upon a certificate of solvency from their own State authority?

Let us go on down to line 7 on page 54:

The Corporation is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the further examination of such bank or trust company.

It follows as night follows day that that corporation, in the fullness of time, is going to lay down rules equal to entrance into the Federal Reserve System, because this deposit-guaranty fund is set up primarily for Federal Reserve member banks.

Go a little farther down, in line 13:

If at any time the board of directors of the Corporation is of opinion that any such State bank or trust company has failed to comply with the provisions of this title applicable to such State bank or trust company or that the continued participation by any such State bank or trust company is detrimental to the safe and economical carrying out of the duties of the Corporation under this title.

All of those who are for this bill insist that no bank is safe unless it is a member of the Federal Reserve System or has a capital stock of $50,000 or more. If that is not true, why do you write it into the act that a bank cannot enter the Federal Reserve System unless it has a minimum capital of $50,000? Obviously, because you do not think it is a sound bank, but you leave it in the power of this corporation which will administer this insurance fund, to provide rules and regulations, and to by its arbitrary order, drive State banks from that fund whenever in its judgment it is unsafe for the corporation to leave the bank in it.

There is no excuse for Members of this Congress to stand here and sugar coat their words to the agricultural States, and permit this crucifixion of the State banks. Those of you who do it, saying you are trying to do something for the State banking system of this country, are either not reading this bill or you are betraying the State banks of this country. It ill-behoves a Democratic Congress to surrender State sovereignty to the extent that a State cannot prescribe its own banking system without bowing to the dictates of a Federal agency. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin] has expired.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the spirit of calm deliberation let us get our facts straight. There is not any question about this fact. Under the terms of this bill any bank which is not now in existence and which proposes to organize and to become a member of the Federal Reserve System must have a capital stock of at least $50,000. But any State bank now in existence with a capital of $25,000, if it is a sound bank and will submit to a proper examination by this corporation which is undertaking to insure the bank's deposits, can participate in the benefits of this insurance provision. [Applause.]

Why do we set a limit of $50,000 as the necessary amount of capital for banks hereafter to be organized to become members of the Federal Reserve System? To destroy State banks? Certainly not! I do not suppose there is any man in this Chamber who represents a State with more small State banks according to population than I. Why do I vote to support this proposal?

Let me read you some figures: 10,500 banks, in round numbers, with $5,000,000,000 of deposits, failed between 1921 and 1932. Eighty percent of them were nonmember banks, with average deposits of only $350,000. Ninety percent of them were situated in towns of less than 25,000 people. Sixty percent of them were in towns of less than 10,000 people. Fifty-nine percent of them had a capital of less than $25,000. Only one quarter of 1 percent of them had a capital of more than $1,000,000,000. Eighty-five percent of them, unfortunately but most lamentably the fact, 85 percent of them were State banks. Seventy percent of all the loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were made to State banks.

This $50,000 capital stock provision, my friends, was written into this bill in order that this country might be saved, so far as human foresight by a single provision can save it, from a repetition of this bank calamity we have just experienced. [Applause.]

This afternoon a friend of mine, a Member of this Congress from the Second District of Maine, was discussing the pending bill with me. He is an insurance man and is capable of offering pertinent suggestions relating to the insurance-of-deposits section of this proposed legislation.

He said:

Did it ever occur to you that it is a very wise and reasonable provision that the deposit-insurance corporation, if it is to insure bank deposits, should be given the right to examine the bank applying for insurance? Did you ever apply for life insurance when the insurance company did not subject you to a physical examination?

Why should not this corporation have the right to examine the banks whose deposits it is asked to insure?

Mr. Chairman, when this matter is approached in the calm light of reason it will be seen that the provisions of this bill so far as it goes are substantially sound. Every member of this committee has done his best to bring to this House a sensible and sound proposal for the modification of our banking laws.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman will concede, however, that the set-up is essentially a Federal board and the State of Maine will have nothing to say about it.

Mr. BEEDY. But the State of Maine is not undertaking to insure the deposits of banks throughout the country. The deposit-insurance company, if this bill becomes law, must undertake the responsibility of insuring deposits. Its board of directors will be appointed by the President of the United States, and surely no President would ever think of appointing to this board of directors any but public-spirited men, men of sound judgment, whose sole aim will be to deal justly with any bank seeking to protect its depositors. I have faith to believe that the present President of the United States will appoint the right kind of men.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does the gentleman take the position that when the State banking department of Maine issues a certificate that a Maine bank is solvent, that that is not sufficient and that the gentleman's own State banking department is not dependable but that dependence must be placed upon a Federal board to make this examination?

Mr. BEEDY. That is all right as far as it goes, but I repeat that the State banking department of Maine is not guaranteeing to insure the deposits of the banks and this corporation set up by the Federal Government is. [Applause.] It is a responsibility and obligation assumed in pursuance of Federal law, and the Federal agency should have the right to demand the examination.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. It will be an American board, will it not?

Mr. BEEDY. I have faith enough in the present President, or any President, regardless of the party to which he may belong, to believe that such will be the case.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Does not the gentleman believe that the powers this corporation is to exercise should be circumscribed a little more closely so we will have some definite assurance that these $25,000 sound banks will not be ruled out?

Mr. BEEDY. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that the aim of this corporation must of necessity be to make the insurance feature helpful, and to do so it must admit as many sound banks as possible. Unsound banks are not entitled to impose the hazardous burden of insured deposits upon any institution which aims to make the insurance of deposits a success by admitting only those banks whose moneys are reasonably safeguarded by sound management.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

DESTROY SMALL BANKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the closing of so many banks in the last 12 years, during the time that Mr. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury, I desire to invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is my belief, and I think this belief is corroborated and substantiated by sufficient facts, that there was a deliberate attempt on the part of Mr. Andrew W. Mellon and his Comptroller of the Currency to destroy the small banks of this country.

I think they issued plenty of rules and regulations which had for their purpose the destruction of the small banks of the country. In this connection, it will also be interesting, possibly, to the Membership of the House to know that the Mellon fortune increased from just a relatively small amount before the World War to owning and controlling about $2,000,000,000 at the close of the World War to the enormous sum of $7,990,000,000 at the time he left the office of Secretary of the Treasury and ran off to England.

MELLON WEALTH $7,990,000,000

I invite your attention to a well-written article by one of the writers for the World's Work magazine, Mr. William Preston Beazell, in which he describes the value of the Mellon fortune. He names the companies that are owned and controlled by Mr. Mellon and his family, and the total resources of these companies aggregate not $8,000,000,000, but $7,990,000,000. This is equal to—

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I am not particularly fond of these big fortunes and I do not care to defend Mr. Mellon, but I think under the 5-minute rule we ought to confine our remarks to the bill. This is an intricate, technical bill.

Mr. PATMAN. I think it ill becomes the gentleman from Maine, after taking up as much time as he has taken up this afternoon, to object to anyone talking on a subject which is so closely related to the bill and in answer to what the gentleman himself has discussed.

Mr. BEEDY. I try not to take up too much time, and I am sorry if I have taken up too much of the time of the House.

Mr. PATMAN. In fact, I can bring the remarks within the rule.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I shall insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. PATMAN. The fortune I have mentioned is twice as much money as the average amount of money that has been in circulation during the past 3 years, or at least twice the average amount in circulation. It is twice all the gold in the United States and is equal to two thirds of all the gold in the entire world. It is equal to one half the value of all the property in the United States in the year 1860. It is equal to twice the value of all agricultural products sold in America by all producers during the year 1932; equal to entire value of all property in Texas or all property in Alabama, Mississippi, and Georgia; or all property in Maryland and Virginia; or all livestock, farm implements, and machinery. It is nearly twice the expenses of the Federal Government in 1 year.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Mr. Chairman, having used more time in the House today than any other Member I feel qualified to accept all the gentleman's comments in this matter. We want to get through this bill today if we can. It is doubtful if we can, but we would like to do it, and I am quite willing to take whatever responsibility may come to my shoulders for protesting against using up time on matters not pertinent to the question now at issue.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate under the 5-minute rule is confined to the bill. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. PATMAN. This is on the question of breaking these banks and Mr. Mellon was then Secretary of the Treasury and caused them to break. More than 10,000 banks closed their doors while he held that position.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. LUCE. That a discussion of Mr. Mellon is not pertinent to the question before the House.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am talking about closed banks and this is what the gentleman from Maine talked about.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the bill.

BIG BANKS VERSUS SMALL BANKS

Mr. PATMAN. This is in connection with banks and banking legislation and answering the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY]. I want to invite your attention to how the big banks fared during this time. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] has told you about how the little banks got along and I want to tell you something about the big ones.

You take the Union Trust Co., a Mellon-owned and a close corporation in Pittsburgh; it is capitalized at $1,500,000. During the period of time that the gentleman from Maine was talking about, from 1921 to 1932, it has been paying dividends amounting to 206 percent a year.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. PATMAN. And in addition to that, placing aside—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate under the 5-minute rule is confined to the bill. The gentleman will confine his remarks to the bill.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, of course, I feel this is closely related to the bill and is in connection with the subject matter and is in answer to what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] said about the small banks that were compelled to go out of business—10,000 of them during the last 12 years. He did not say during the reign of Mr. Mellon, but I want to make it plain that it was during the time Mr. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury [laughter], and I should also like to make it plain why the little banks were taken out of business and why the big banks made 200 percent profit during a like period. The Mellon bank paid over 200 percent in annual dividends during this period, also set aside what was equal to 600 percent annually to surplus or 400 percent a year.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Massachusetts is well taken. The amendment before the House is to strike out the last four words. The gentleman will proceed in order.

UNFAITHFUL TRUSTEE

Mr. PATMAN. The last word is "trustees" and you know Mr. Mellon was a trustee for the people of this Nation [laughter], and it was his duty and obligation to represent the people and not represent his own special and private interests. You cannot go into any of these public buildings that were constructed during the time he was Secretary of the Treasury and not find all kinds of aluminum. [Laughter and applause.] Mellon produced, Mellon sold at Mellon's price to Mellon for the United States Government.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order and desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. LUCE. Orderly conduct of the proceedings of the House calls for a Member of the House to comply with the direction of the presiding officer. If the Member insists upon disregarding that direction, he not only brings the procedure of the House into disrepute but he wastes the time of the House. Believing the members of the committee in charge of the bill desire that the debate shall be confined to the bill for the common convenience and for the benefit of all the Members, it seems to me appropriate to ask that the Chair enforce its ruling.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to his point of order, but is making a speech that we do not care to listen to.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I assure the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have covered all I desire to say, and, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the Committee on Banking and Currency approves of that amendment, and I ask that the House adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PATMAN moves to strike out section 3, line 22, page 4, and amend on line 5, page 5, as follows:

"Sec. 3. The first paragraph of section 7 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 289), is amended, effective July 1, 1933, to read as follows:

"After all necessary expenses of a Federal Reserve bank shall have been paid or provided for, the stockholders shall be entitled to receive an annual dividend of 6 percent on the paid-in capital stock, which dividend shall be cumulative. After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, the net earnings shall be paid into the surplus fund of the Federal Reserve bank."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I discussed that fully last Saturday, and I have nothing further to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. (a) The first paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 321; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 321), is amended by inserting immediately after the words "United States" a comma and the following: "including Morris Plan banks and other incorporated banking institutions engaged in similar business."

(b) The second paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 329), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any State member bank from establishing and operating branches in the United States or any dependency or insular possession thereof or in any foreign country, on the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations and restrictions as are applicable to the establishment of branches by national banks."

(c) Section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 321-331; supp. VI, title 12, secs. 321-331), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"Any mutual savings bank having no capital stock but having surplus and undivided profits not less than the amount of capital required for the organization of a national bank in the same place may apply for and be admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law as State banks and trust companies, except that such savings bank shall subscribe for capital stock of the Federal Reserve bank in an amount equal to six tenths of 1 percent of its total deposit liabilities as shown by the most recent report of examination of such savings bank preceding its admission to membership. Thereafter such subscription shall be adjusted semiannually on the same percentage basis in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board. If any mutual savings bank applying for membership is not permitted by the laws under which it was organized to purchase stock in a Federal Reserve bank, it shall, upon admission to the system, deposit with the Federal Reserve bank an amount equal to the amount which it would have been required to pay in on account of a subscription to capital stock. Thereafter such deposit shall be adjusted semiannually in the same manner as subscriptions for stock. Such deposit shall be subject to the same conditions with respect to repayment as amounts paid upon subscriptions to capital stock by other member banks, and the Federal Reserve bank shall pay interest thereon at the same rate as dividends are actually paid on outstanding shares of stock of such Federal Reserve bank. If the laws under which such savings bank was organized be amended so as to authorize mutual savings banks to subscribe for Federal Reserve bank stock, such savings bank shall thereupon subscribe for the appropriate amount of stock in the Federal Reserve bank, and the deposit hereinbefore provided for in lieu of payment upon capital stock shall be applied upon such subscription. If the laws under which such savings bank was organized be not amended at the next session of the legislature following the admission of such savings bank to membership so as to authorize mutual savings banks to purchase Federal Reserve bank stock, or if such laws be so amended and such bank fail within 6 months thereafter to purchase such stock, all of its rights and privileges as a member bank shall be forfeited and its membership in the Federal Reserve System shall be terminated in the manner prescribed elsewhere in this section with respect to State banks and trust companies. Each mutual savings bank shall comply with all the provisions of law applicable to State member banks and trust companies, with the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, and with the conditions of membership prescribed for such savings bank at the time of admission to membership, except as otherwise hereinbefore provided with respect to capital stock."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 5, strike out all of section 4 (b) from line 12 to line 21, inclusive, page 5.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, this is the section that provides an extension of the right of State banks to establish branch banks. I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the provision of the law as it now exists. This provision, section (b), contained in this bill, changes that.

It reads as follows:

(b) The second paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 329), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any State member bank from establishing and operating branches in the United States or any dependency or insular possession thereof or in any foreign country on the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations and restrictions as are applicable to the establishment of branches by national banks."

Under this provision, which is foreign to all other provisions of the bill, you will notice that it permits any State-bank member to establish and operate branches anywhere in the United States if permitted to do so under State law. It is extending the system of chain banks and as it applies to State-bank members that have not the privilege under the law.

Our State-bank association has gone on record in strong resolutions in opposition to chain branch banks. They have said in their resolutions in no uncertain terms that they are opposed to chain banking. I have not heard nor have we been shown in any of the speeches here so far why we should at this time particularly extend the system of branch or chain banking as it applies to the respective States.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman in his State allow interlocking directorates and ownership of banks by certain groups of individual bankers?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am not sure about that. I think I know what the gentleman has in mind—group banking. I am opposed to that system of banking just as much as I am to chain banking.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman has that system in his State?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; but I do not favor it, and I do not favor extending the system any further than it is now. Our bankers are not asking for it. I see no reason why we should put a provision like this into a perfectly good bank insurance law, in order to give the banks of certain States additional chain-banking privileges and rights. I do not believe it is right or that the country needs that kind of legislation.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman agrees that State banks ought to have a right to come into the guaranty system?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am in favor of that, but I do not think we ought to wrap the chains around the necks of the bankers any more than they are wrapped at the present time. I do not think it is right to extend the system of branch banking any further than it is now.

I call the attention of the membership particularly to a letter that was written to Senator Lewis, showing the large number of branch-bank failures in the United States and abroad in the last few years. It is a very illuminating article. Some gentlemen have referred here in their speeches to the strength of branch banking.

Is there safety in branch banking? Witness the closing of the branch-banking systems in the United States when they were put to the test. The most disastrous failures we had were branch, group, and chain failures, such as the following:

Bank of United States, New York, 59 branches; Federal National, Boston, 8 branches; Banco Kentucky group, 7 branches; A. B. Banks, American chain, Arkansas, 27 branches; Manley chain, Georgia, 87 branches; Bain Banks, Chicago, 12 branches; Bankers Trust Co., Pennsylvania, 20 branches; United States National, Los Angeles, 8 branches; Security Home Trust, Toledo, 10 branches; Peoples State Bank, South Carolina, 44 branches; Arizona State Bank, 5 branches; and Foreman National group, Chicago, 6 branches.

To this rather impressive group, with deposits running into hundreds of millions of dollars, of branch- and chain-bank collapses, which were due to many of the same abuses that weaken unit banks, I could name important branch-, group-, and chain-banking systems in Detroit, Boston, San Francisco, and other cities which got into trouble and merged or were supported by other banks or United States credit until the crisis was past.

The weakest links in our banking system proved to be the "branch banks", and they went down comparatively early in the depression. It was their failures that caused public confidence to be shaken so badly that runs were precipitated on and closed many well-managed small independent banks.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CHRISTIANSON) there were—ayes 10, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first four words on page 6.

When the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] was speaking he referred to mutual savings banks as a New England institution, and it occurred to me that the experience in my State might be of interest in connection with this section. We have a State made up of rural communities. We have 20 mutual savings banks. We have 19 savings banks and trust companies combined; that is, these have a savings-bank department and a commercial department. We also have 16 trust companies. We have had no failure of a mutual savings bank in 50 years. We have had no failure of a trust company with one exception during that period of time. We had no banks close up to the time of the bank holiday, and I have a feeling that our country bankers could have worked through this depression if they had been left alone.

The mutual savings banks and trust companies in my State, particularly, have been a great reservoir from which the West and the South have drawn for a portion of their material prosperity. We have from these banks in the small communities nearly $50,000,000 invested today in farm mortgages in the West and the South, and we consider them a fairly good investment. We do not begrudge at all the toil which was necessary to dig that out of the soil. So the prosperity of other sections is our prosperity. I repeat, if these had been left alone they could have gotten along during the depression, because I believe the country bankers know more about the banking facilities and the needs of these local communities than all the Federal Reserve officials put together. [Applause.]

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

Page 5, lines 6 to 11, strike out subsection (a) of section 4.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, this section attempts to bring the Morris Plan Banks within the protection of the Federal Reserve Act. I do not think by any stretch of the imagination, at the inception of this act or any time since, has it been the purpose of the originators of the act or anyone else to make it possible for the Morris Plan Banks or any similar small-loan plan bank to be able to come within the provisions of this law. You gentlemen know what these banks are. They loan money to the small-wage earners. They not only get security, but they get double security. They always demand two endorsers, and everyone signs his life away to them when he gets the loan. They get a high rate of interest. One endorser has to be a man who has a Government or State or municipal position and the other must show a good line of credit. That is practically the only kind of banking they do.

I say we should strike subsection (a) from section 4 entirely.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. What protection is given to the Morris Plan Bank under this bill?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. What protection need we give them? The Morris Plan Bank is owned by the Chemical National Bank, of New York.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think this paragraph amends the original Federal Reserve Act. What provision of the Federal Reserve Act does this apply to?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, pages 14 and 15, referring to admission to membership. It makes them members of the Federal Reserve System. You will find that in section 9, page 4 of the act. I do not think there should be any argument on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEIDEMAN) there were ayes 36 and noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. (a) The second paragraph of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 242), is amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for 2 years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank. The appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for 2 years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed. Upon the expiration of the term of any appointive member of the Federal Reserve Board in office when this paragraph as amended takes effect, the President shall fix the term of the successor to such member at not to exceed 12 years, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, but in such manner as to provide for the expiration of the term of not more than one appointive member in any 2-year period, and thereafter each appointive member shall hold office for a term of 12 years from the expiration of the term of his predecessor. Of the 6 persons thus appointed, 1 shall be designated by the President as governor and 1 as vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board. The governor of the Federal Reserve Board, subject to its supervision, shall be its active executive officer. Each member of the Federal Reserve Board shall within 15 days after notice of appointment make and subscribe to the oath of office."

(b) The fourth paragraph of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 244), is amended to read as follows:

"The principal offices of the Board shall be in the District of Columbia. At meetings of the Board the Secretary of the Treasury shall preside as chairman, and, in his absence, the governor shall preside. In the absence of both the Secretary of the Treasury and the governor the vice governor shall preside. In the absence of the Secretary of the Treasury, the governor, and the vice governor the Board shall elect a member to act as chairman pro tempore. The Board shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its disbursements and expenses allowed and paid, and may leave on deposit in the Federal Reserve banks the proceeds of assessments levied upon them to defray its estimated expenses and the salaries of its members and employees, whose employment, compensation, leave, and expenses shall be governed solely by the provisions of this act, specific amendments thereof, and rules and regulations of the Board not inconsistent therewith; and funds derived from such assessments shall not be construed to be Government funds or appropriated moneys. No member of the Federal Reserve Board shall be an officer or director of any bank, banking institution, trust company, or Federal Reserve bank or hold stock in any bank, banking institution, or trust company; and before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal Reserve Board he shall certify under oath that he has complied with this requirement, and such certification shall be filed with the secretary of the Board. Whenever a vacancy shall occur, other than by expiration of term, among the six members of the Federal Reserve Board appointed by the President as above provided, a successor shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy, and when appointed he shall hold office for the unexpired term of his predecessor."

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COLMER: On page 10, line 2, after the word "moneys", insert "Provided, however, That no salary or other compensation shall be paid by said Federal Reserve Board to any of its governors, officers, agents, or employees in excess of $15,000 per annum."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. There is nothing in this provision about salaries of members.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

SALARIES OF FEDERAL RESERVE OFFICIALS

Mr. PATMAN. This section has to do with setting the salaries of the officers and employees of the Federal Reserve Board and those working for the Federal Reserve banks. Under section 3 of this act, and under section 7 of the original Federal Reserve Act, all money that is earned by Federal Reserve banks is applied as follows: First, current operating expenses, which usually amount to $27,000,000 or $29,000,000 a year are paid; secondly, 6-percent dividends, paid on the capital stock of the banks, actually paid in; third, the remainder, after a proper surplus fund has been accumulated, goes into the Treasury of the United States. Therefore, the more money that is spent by the Federal Reserve Board for officers and employees, the less money goes to the Treasury of the United States. It is certainly material, since it amounts to an appropriation of public funds, that we restrict the salaries of the officers and employees, if we desire to restrict their salaries. It is public money and comes within this section which relates to the payment of officers and employees.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. LUCE. I submit the matter, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CANNON of Missouri). The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. The Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting between sections 12 and 13 (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 261, 262, and 342) thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 12A. (a) There is hereby created a Federal Open Market Committee (hereinafter referred to as the 'committee'), which shall consist of as many members as there are Federal Reserve districts. Each Federal Reserve bank by its board of directors shall annually select one member of said committee. The meetings of said committee shall be held at Washington, District of Columbia, at least four times each year, upon the call of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board or at the request of any three members of the committee, and, in the discretion of the Board, may be attended by the members of the Board.

"(b) No Federal Reserve bank shall engage in open-market operations under section 14 of this act except in accordance with regulations adopted by the Federal Reserve Board. The Board shall consider, adopt, and transmit to the committee and to the several Federal Reserve banks regulations relating to the open-market transactions of such banks and the relations of the Federal Reserve System with foreign central or other foreign banks.

"(c) The time, character, and volume of all purchases and sales of paper described in section 14 of this act as eligible for open-market operations shall be governed with a view to accommodating commerce and business and with regard to their bearing upon the general credit situation of the country.

"(d) If any Federal Reserve bank shall decide not to participate in open-market operations recommended and approved as provided in paragraph (b) hereof, it shall file with the chairman of the committee within 30 days a notice of its decision, and transmit a copy thereof to the Federal Reserve Board."

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STOKES: On page 12, line 1, strike out the whole of subsection (b) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, however, That the Federal Reserve Board shall have power to prohibit any operations which any Federal Reserve bank is authorized by this section to conduct, when the volume or extent of said operation is, in the judgment of the Board, calculated to affect the general credit situation of the country or the relations of the Federal Reserve System with foreign, central, or other foreign banks."

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, this section (b) would practically restrict Federal Reserve banks in all purchases of Government bonds, and open-market operations and the purchase of gold. Open-market operations of the Federal Reserve banks is a matter which they have been working up for the past 10 or 15 years, and it is of very great advantage to the merchants of the country, because they can borrow on those bills at very low rates of interest, anywhere from one half or three quarters of 1 percent or 1 percent, whereas if this section is not stricken, it leaves the entire matter to the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington, a political body appointed by the President. In case we should have a poor board it might affect the entire operations of these very important banks.

I urge the Membership to vote for the amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STOKES].

I do this to call particular attention to this section of the bill. It is one of the most important sections of the bill. It deals with the open-market transactions of the 12 Federal Reserve banks. I desire to speak with particular reference to the operations carried on by the New York Federal Reserve Bank.

Under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STOKES] the New York Federal Reserve Bank and any other of the 12 banks will be permitted to carry on open-market operations just as they have been doing over the past several years in paper originating in any country in the world. His amendment apparently is to leave the right about where it is at present. I wonder if the Members of the House really know and understand the authority that this section gives and the practical operations of the Federal Reserve as carried on in the open market, which is being made wide open here? You are now authorizing and making legal the right to the Federal Reserve Board and through them to the 12 Federal Reserve banks to buy and sell foreign business paper. The Federal Reserve credit can be used to finance operations between any foreign country, and they will be given the low rate of interest that prevails in open-market transactions in the United States. It has been the common practice of the Federal Reserve for the past several years to carry on those transactions and finance foreign competitors of United States industry. I have called attention to this section repeatedly. It is one of the most important we can deal with.

Are you willing to finance foreign business to the detriment of American industry who employ American labor.

Then if you are vote for these amendments to the open-markets provisions of the Federal Reserve Act, proposed in this bill. It is what the Bank of England, the Bank of France, and the Reichsbank of Germany, want you to do.

In this bill you are authorizing the appointment of a new committee, supposedly to be picked from one of the official family of each of the Federal Reserve districts, but I would call your attention to the fact that there is no such limitation. If each one of the 12 Federal Reserve banks see fit to pick a man, a specialist in New York City to represent it, this entire open-market committee can be in New York City. That is where the open market is located. That is where this foreign paper comes to the United States. It comes over to the big acceptance houses in New York City.

I do not know what they are going to do. It may be these 12 banks are going to call on some foreigners to sit in to supervise these open-market transactions. They can do so under the provisions of this section, if they see fit to, because there is absolutely no restriction as to whom they shall appoint. This amendment provides that each Federal Reserve district may appoint a man.

Now, I know that the officers of many of the other Federal Reserve banks have been complaining because they did not want to handle all these open-market operations that the New York banks wanted them to handle. I happen to know that some of the officers of the other 11 banks have been very much disturbed about the transactions that were carried on in financing the foreigners in their own transactions between their own countries. All has not been complete harmony in financing the foreigner.

If you want to extend this opportunity along those lines, to use cheap Federal Reserve credit and continue to charge Americans who are engaged in industry and who employ American labor at higher rates, this is the plan by which to do it. The thing this amendment does in changing the present activities is that it permits these members of the open-market committee to be picked anywhere the management sees fit to pick them and legalizes this foreign acceptance business under the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. And the open-market committee has as a medium of their operation 10 or 11 distinct corporations now existing, for example, the Discount Corporation of New York, the American Securities Co., the First National, the Old Colony Corporation, and so forth.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; I may say to the gentleman that is where the open-market transactions originate. The International Acceptance Bank was one of these discount houses. Hundreds of millions of dollars—yes, billions of dollars—worth of these acceptances flow in from foreign countries to be purchased by Federal Reserve and member banks and others who have money to invest.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. To get it into the RECORD, the Discount Corporation of New York has as acceptances and assets $147,000,000, and that listed as directors are Mr. J. P. Morgan, Mr. Albert H. Wiggin—

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; and many others of the same kind. I would like to yield to the gentleman, but I cannot.

There are nine of these acceptance houses in New York who make a practice of accumulating this open-markets paper from foreigners, discounting paper that originates in Germany, in China, in South America, and everywhere else. There is now in operation the stand-still committee headed by Albert H. Wiggin, of New York, dealing with billions of dollars worth of this credit that is tied up and frozen in Germany and is now held by the Federal Reserve and the banks of the United States which they got through this channel, all approved by the Federal Reserve Board and banks.

I am simply calling it to the attention of the House. I realize how useless it is to attempt to amend this bill, but I do not want this bill to pass without the House at least knowing what it is doing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. Section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 353 to 358), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(g) The Federal Reserve Board shall exercise special supervision over all relationships and transactions of any kind entered into by any Federal Reserve bank with any foreign bank or banker, or with any group of foreign banks or bankers, and all such relationships and transactions shall be subject to such regulations, conditions, and limitations as the Board may prescribe. No officer or other representative of any Federal Reserve bank shall conduct negotiations of any kind with the officers or representatives of any foreign bank or banker without first obtaining the permission of the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve Board shall have the right, in its discretion, to be represented in any conference or negotiations by such representative or representatives as the Board may designate. A full report of all conferences or negotiations, and all understandings or agreements arrived at or transactions agreed upon, and all other material facts appertaining to such conferences or negotiations, shall be filed with the Federal Reserve Board in writing by a duly authorized officer of each Federal Reserve bank which shall have participated in such conferences or negotiations."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: On page 15, line 11, at the end of the paragraph, add the following: "Provided, however, That no agreement shall be made that will directly or indirectly permit the credit of the United States Government for the assets of any Federal Reserve bank to be used or pledged in any way or manner whatsoever in furtherance of a world bank."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the amendment is not germane. I think it is up to the gentleman from Texas to prove that it is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this section has reference to agreements entered into by and between the Federal Reserve bank of the United States and banks of foreign countries. This amendment provides that a Federal Reserve bank shall not enter into any agreement that will directly or indirectly permit the pledging of the credit of the United States or the assets of any Federal Reserve bank in connection with the establishment of a world bank.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

MONEY MANUFACTURING PLANT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is all right for the credit of this Nation to be used for the people of the United States. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing employs about 5,000 people. That is the place where the paper money is printed. This great manufacturing plant turns out every day from $1,000,000 to $30,000,000 of plain greenbacks, or paper money. The Federal Reserve notes are issued there and delivered from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to a Federal Reserve bank.

MORTGAGE ON ALL PROPERTY OF PEOPLE

Each Federal Reserve note that is so delivered represents a mortgage upon all the homes and other property of all the people of this Nation. It is a mortgage upon the incomes of all the people. We can justify the issuance of this credit for the benefit of the people of the United States, but I would like to know from the members of this committee, or any Member of this House, how we can justify mortgaging the property of this Nation and the incomes of the people in aid and furtherance of a world bank, or furthering the business of a foreign country.

EXPORTATION AND IMPORTATION OF GOODS

In the original Federal Reserve Act it is stated that Federal Reserve banks may use the credit of this Nation for the exportation and importation of goods, clearly meaning goods exported from and to the United States.

However, the Federal Reserve Board in the past, having been so anxious to use the credit of this Nation for the interest of those in foreign countries and possibly in the interest of international bankers here in America, has construed this language to mean that the credit of this Nation may be used for the exportation and the importation of goods between foreign countries when the goods do not touch the United States at all. For instance, if a German merchant or manufacturer desires to sell goods to a merchant in Japan, he can draw his draft in dollars, get it accepted in New York, have it delivered to the Federal Reserve bank, and draw out Federal Reserve notes before these goods ever leave Germany to go to Japan; and all during the time these goods are being manufactured and stored in Germany and all during the time they are being shipped to Japan and delivered there, the credit of this Nation, which represents a mortgage upon all the property of this country, is used to finance the sale of these goods.

I know you can justify the use of this credit for our own people, but I do submit that we should not use this credit and this power for foreign countries or for foreign people in opposition to and in competition with citizens of the United States of America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to speak in opposition, but I rise in opposition to the amendment, if the committee will permit, to confirm what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has just said.

I should like to go a little farther to elucidate these transactions and show you that when the transaction has been consummated, as the gentleman from Texas has pointed out, the foreigners hold these first mortgages against the people of the United States in the form of Federal Reserve notes.

We know from the Treasury, in a statement that was issued recently, that the foreigners hold $600,000,000 worth of our gold certificates, undoubtedly acquired in the same manner, in the settlement of transactions with the Federal Reserve bank in financing transactions between foreign countries in which the United States has no interest whatsoever, except to furnish the money to finance foreign competitors of United States industry.

Why, in this open-market provision which we have just agreed to here, you open up the opportunity, if you intend to issue $3,000,000,000 worth of Federal Reserve bank notes or greenbacks, for the Federal Reserve System to buy in the open market $3,000,000,000 worth of paper representing foreign trade transactions between foreign countries.

There is not any question about the part the Federal Reserve is playing in aiding and assisting these foreign competitors of the people of the United States through the operations that are carried on with the central banks and with the Bank of International Settlements.

Why, at the coming economic conference at London what are you going to do? You are going to enlarge the possibilities of the Bank for International Settlements to absorb the money and the credit of the United States in financing the foreigners as against the American people. There is not any question about that. They are all provided for, and the agent of the governor of the Bank of England, Prof. O. M. W. Sprague, came here last Saturday and visited the Treasury and the White House for the purpose of arranging a standardization of exchanges in preparation for the benefits which England and the other countries will receive when this bill has been passed by the Congress of the United States. They want this open-market amendment; are you going to give it to them?

I should like to know who is back of this bill. According to a statement that was issued today from the White House, this is not a part of the emergency program, but, apparently, influences are behind this effort to slip the measure through under the guise of a guaranty of bank deposits which, of course, everybody wants. However, you are doing things in this bill that are surrendering the financial supremacy of the people of the United States, through the Federal Reserve, to these international bankers who are operating and propose to operate through building up the Bank for International Settlements to control the issuance of an international money and give them complete control of money and credit throughout the whole world. If you want to do this, accept the amendment provided in this bill and you will completely deliver the finances of this country that have not already been delivered to the business interests and bankers of these foreign countries.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Is the gentleman in favor of the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; I shall favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FORD. How is the United States ever going to be a world financial power if we are going to stop or force the stopping of any transaction of an international character?

Mr. McFADDEN. In answer to that, I am not ambitious that the United States shall become a world financial power. [Applause.] I am more interested, I will say to the gentleman, in the welfare of the American people.

Mr. FORD. Not any more than I am.

Mr. McFADDEN. And in the employment of the 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 people who are now unemployed and in making a settlement with the soldiers who fought our battle and fought the battle of the foreigners in the World War. Let us pay our debts to our own people first.

Mr. FORD. Of course, that is all hooey; but answer this one question: How are the European countries ever going to pay the United States the debts that they owe if this and other means are not afforded to create an equivalent of exchange in the United States to take up that debt?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am not so much concerned about that, I will say to the gentleman. We have domestic affairs here that are of more importance. I will say, however, in regard to the debt the foreigners owe us—and I have not changed my position in regard to that from that which I took in 1931—if these foreign nations do not intend to pay, let them default. That is the position of the Congress today. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has voiced a sentiment that finds a sincere response among the Members of this House.

I am sure that every Member of the House feels just as the gentleman does with respect to the uncontrolled use of the credit facilities of the Federal Reserve System in the international financing programs. These transactions have been carried on in the past without restraint. One of the fundamental purposes of the bill now before this House is to prevent those practices. I want to say to the gentleman that there has been no undue rush or effort to blindfold anybody in connection with this legislation. It has been under consideration for 2 years. It has been the subject of prolonged hearings and discussions by the Senate, and the measure as it relates to the matter under discussion passed that body last year.

It has been worked out with the utmost care, and the purpose of the section is that the Federal Reserve Board shall have control of the open-market operations of Federal Reserve banks. This section makes it the duty of the Federal Reserve Board to regulate such transactions and restrict them in order to protect the people of the United States against the unauthorized use of credits by the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman knows that this open market is no new proposition.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is true; but this section places on the Board the duty and responsibility of restricting such operations and to no longer permit the banks to exercise free and unbridled power in the extension of such credits.

Mr. McFADDEN. Under the supervision of the Federal Reserve Board, the operations have been carried on.

Mr. STEAGALL. But this bill specifically imposes regulations and restrictions. If there had been such a law in the past—there has been some division of opinion in the construction of the existing law—and proper enforcement of it, the complaints which the gentleman makes would never have been heard. This bill makes it clear the duty of the Federal Reserve Board is to supervise and restrict these transactions.

Mr. McFADDEN. I still want to reiterate that this will not change it one iota.

Mr. STEAGALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I cannot yield further for a speech, because we should like to get along with the bill as far as we can today, and the discussion has ranged beyond necessary limits.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

There being no objection, the amendment was again reported.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make us a brief statement, as we could not hear what he had in mind.

Mr. McFADDEN. If the gentleman will permit, what I mean is this: Under the operation of the open market during the past few years they, the Federal Reserve banks and member banks, have loaned hundreds of millions of dollars of Federal Reserve credit, some of it illegally obtained, to carry on and finance transactions between foreign countries. The Federal Reserve System was created as a financial system for the people of the United States. It never was contemplated that they were going to finance bankers, foreign governments, and manufacturers in foreign commerce between other countries outside the United States. How many of you gentlemen here would vote to give the foreigner the right to use Federal Reserve credit to finance his commercial transactions between foreign countries, and to finance him with this cheap money to undersell American-made goods in our own market?

I am not taking a narrow view in regard to this. This is exactly what you are doing. I know that it is necessary for the people and the banking interests of the country to carry on certain foreign financial transactions, but when an illicit use of the credit of the United States through the employment of Federal Reserve notes and credit which have been illegally issued is made, and vast amounts running into billions of dollars have been tied up and now remain frozen in Germany and Japan and other countries, I think it is time to call a halt. I see nothing in this bill that is going to change the policy which was approved and acquiesced in by the Federal Reserve Board. There is no question but that the Federal Reserve Board could have stopped these illegal transactions, if they had wanted to do it. But did they do it? Was the Congress ever advised that the Federal Reserve Board was incompetent to carry on the safety of the transactions of the Federal Reserve banks? No, it was not. I again repeat, that you are opening up this System in a way to further exploitation and furnishing of funds to finance foreigners, to the detriment of the United States. The Federal Reserve were evidently of the opinion that the rank and file of the public were unaware of what was being done, that these great transactions were only known to the insiders, the international financial group, who were making millions of dollars out of the fraudulent use of the Federal Reserve money and credit they were using, because even the Secretary of the Treasury raised no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Let me read one paragraph from the bill, subsection (c), page 12:

The time, character, and volume of all purchases and sales of paper described in section 14 of this act as eligible for open-market operations shall be governed with a view to accommodating commerce and business and with regard to their bearing upon the general credit situation of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEIDEMAN: Page 15, line 11, subsection (g), add the following: "A complete report of all conferences and transactions herein covered shall be made to the Congress of the United States on January 1 of each year."

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, subsection (g) provides that reports shall be made to the Federal Reserve Board, but that does not necessarily mean that they shall be made to Congress or that they are even available to Congress, because I find there is some information that I want to get out of that Board now and I cannot, and my experience is not unusual. All Members of Congress have run into the same thing. If this section is going to operate the way it is intended, and they should make a report to their own Board, I can see no harm in the report being made also to the Congress; and if some of you gentlemen in this body are suspicious of what is going to happen, I think you should vote to amend this section in this way. You will then have a report every year as to what the international conferences are. I do not think the risk is unreasonable, and I think for your own protection you should approve the amendment. Congress is entitled to know what is going on in the Federal Reserve System.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEIDEMAN) there were—ayes 68, noes 55.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. (a) Section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting, after the sixth paragraph thereof, the following new paragraph:

"No member bank shall act as the medium or agent of any nonbanking corporation, partnership, association, business trust, or individual in making loans on the security of stocks, bonds, and other investment securities to brokers or dealers in stocks, bonds, and other investment securities. Every violation of this provision by any member bank shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $100 per day during the continuance of such violation; and such fine may be collected, by suit or otherwise, by the Federal Reserve bank of the district in which such member bank is located."

(b) Such section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 142, 374, 461-466; Supp. VI, title 12, sec. 462a), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The Federal Reserve Board shall from time to time limit by regulation the rate of interest which may be paid by member banks on deposits, and may prescribe different rates for such payment on time and savings deposits having different maturities or subject to different conditions respecting withdrawal or repayment. No member bank shall pay any time deposit before its maturity, or waive any requirement of notice before payment of any savings deposit except as to all saving deposits having the same requirement."

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am much in favor of the guaranty provisions of this bill; and while I have been hearing nothing but banking the last few months, I must admit that I need additional information if I am going to vote for this bill. I rise for the purpose of getting information from the chairman on one point in this section. I notice on page 25 of the bill it is provided that the interest charged by the bank to the borrower shall be 7 percent. In the section under discussion the interest which the bank pays to the depositor is left indeterminate. In other words, the banker is assured of his 7 percent, but the poor individual, who has very little, if anything, left today, must take such interest rate as this self-constituted board may designate. I contend that if the Postal Savings Department can stipulate a rate of 2 percent, we should at least designate that the minimum amount these member banks shall pay will be at least 2 percent.

The subject of inflation was brought up, and inflation, we are told, is going to bring us out of our present distress. The only thing that will bring this Nation out of its distress is a more equitable distribution of the wealth of the Nation.

In this provision you are making the rich richer, with no provision for the poor. I wish the chairman of the committee would inform us what assurance we have if we put money in these banks of the amount of interest that we, as depositors, will receive. It is well defined how much we will be charged when we go to the bank to borrow, but nothing is stipulated as to the interest that is to be paid to us on our money deposited.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing definite at all about the amount to be charged. The only thing that is definite is that the borrower shall not be charged more than 7 percent, or 1 percent more than the rediscount cost of the Federal Reserve bank, which is regulated entirely by the law of supply and demand. It goes down as low as one half of 1 percent sometimes.

Mr. HOEPEL. I admit that, but this provision of 7 percent stands out in this bill and is the amount the small borrower must pay when in financial distress.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Seven percent is the extreme limit of interest which a member bank can charge a borrower, and that only in case it can rediscount its paper and has to pay 6 percent to rediscount its paper in the Federal Reserve banks. The Federal Reserve never has charged 6 percent except probably during 1921, I believe. Usually it is from 2½ to 3 percent.

Mr. HOEPEL. There is one provision in this bill which is definite and positive. You may not be able to give me a definite figure as to what interest I am going to receive as a depositor, but this I know: That the Post Office Department has turned over to the banks of America $1,157,000,000. The Government receives from the banks for this amount only 2½ percent interest; yet, when I go to the bank to borrow this money, you as well as I must pay 7 percent interest.

That is being done today in my district, and that, I say, is unfair. We are giving the American banker $45,000,000 gratuity on our own postal savings. I hope that when this proposition comes up in my amendment that the amendment will be accepted and that no bank will be permitted to charge any borrower interest in excess of 100 percent of the interest rate the bank pays its depositors. If a bank cannot function and stand on its own feet with 100 percent profit on our money, it has no economic or business right to exist.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 11. Section 22 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 375, 376, 503, 593-595; Supp. VI, title 12, sec. 593), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(g) No executive officer of any member bank shall borrow from or otherwise become indebted to any member bank of which he is an executive officer, and no member bank shall make any loan or extend credit in any other manner to any of its own executive officers: Provided, That loans heretofore made to any such officer may be renewed or extended not more than 2 years from the effective date of this title, if in accord with sound banking practice. If any executive officer of any member bank borrow from or if he be or become indebted to any bank other than a member bank of which he is an executive officer, he shall make a written report to the chairman of the board of directors of the member bank of which he is an executive officer, stating the date and amount of such loan or indebtedness, the security therefor, and the purpose for which the proceeds have been or are to be used. Any executive officer of any member bank violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not exceeding 1 year, or fined not more than $5,000, or both; and any member bank violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be fined not more than $10,000, and may be fined a further sum equal to the amount so loaned or credit so extended."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BAILEY: Page 16, line 18, after the word "officer", insert the words "or director"; and add the same language at each point in section (g) after the word "officer" each time such word is used.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, this apparently is but a simple amendment, but, in fact, it will have considerable to do with the final result of the operation of this bill. I happen to be one of those who cannot agree that the Federal Government should adopt a guaranty of deposits. I do it because the experience in my own State has been very sad; and I want to say that if, as I believe is true, you are going to adopt a guaranty deposit bill, you must tighten the laws governing the operation of banks. Otherwise you will find the national banks in the same condition in which we found our State banks.

One of the greatest troubles, one of the worst banking practices, has been loans made to people connected with banks. For that reason I believe this Congress should add in this law a prohibition against borrowing by a director from a bank in which he is a director.

It will be said that we may make it difficult to obtain good directors, but I say that is a fallacy that is easily exploded, because if a director has good credit, he can borrow money from other banks, and if he has not good credit, he ought not be permitted to borrow from any bank. This amendment simply changes the wording of this section so as to include the directors of banks with executive officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH) there were—ayes 59, noes 51.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH and Mr. BAILEY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 58, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BAILEY: Page 17, line 3, after the word "shall", insert a comma and the following: "and if the loan is made by a member bank the executive officer of such bank making the loan shall."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, a careful reading of this section shows that the executive officer who borrows the money is required to make the report. My amendment would require the executive officer of the banks making the loan also to make a report. In other words, it is simply a provision to make it certain that someone not interested in the loan is compelled by law to make the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: Between section 11 and section 12 add section 11a, as follows:

"In no case shall the compensation of any member or employee be at a rate in excess of the rate of compensation received for like or similar work performed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the Civil Service laws and regulations: Provided further, That in no event shall such compensation be at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum less any deductions provided for in the act entitled 'An act to maintain the credit of the Government of the United States, approved March 29, 1933.'"

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order, this is a separate section to the bill that limits the salaries in keeping with the Civil Service laws and the rules and regulations thereunder, and is, I think, germane to the bill. It is a separate section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

LET US LIMIT THESE SALARIES AND SAVE MILLIONS FOR THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, under the original Federal Reserve Act the Federal Reserve Board members have the right to administer the act under the Civil Service rules. They are not doing this. This amendment permits them, if they wish, the way they are operating now, to use the Civil Service rules and regulations to administer the act; and if they do not care to do that, they can make the payment to the different officers and employees on the same basis as all Civil Service employees are paid.

$10,000 PER YEAR IS ENOUGH

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. The other limitation and the amendment is a limitation of the compensation to be received by the officers and employees to the same pay that you as Congressmen are receiving. Is not this fair? Do you not think we can get good members to work in the Federal Reserve System for not to exceed $10,000 per year?

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. This is a limitation on the compensation we pay these officers. I am informed that many of the officers are now being paid salaries from $20,000 to $50,000 per year.

I submit in all fairness and with all candor that these officers and these employees in the Federal Reserve System should not receive any more than you yourselves receive, and I believe we can get good men to fill these positions for not to exceed $10,000 per year.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a matter of information? I made the request not long ago.

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield first to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], who had an amendment on the same subject.

Mr. COLMER. Do I understand that the gentleman's amendment will limit the pay of the governors in the Federal Reserve System to $10,000?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. COLMER. Does the gentleman know that they are now receiving as high as $50,000?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes. I know that they are receiving that amount, and that is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. COLMER. I am with the gentleman.

Mr. McFARLANE. I submit we can get good men for this money, and it is money that comes out of the Treasury of the United States. It is very important that we limit these salaries.

I now yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. I did not get the amendment clearly. Is the amendment limited in its proposals to the salary of the governor of each of the 12 central banks?

Mr. McFARLANE. No; it covers all the officers and employees.

Mr. BEEDY. Of just the central banks?

Mr. McFARLANE. No; all 12 of them.

Mr. BEEDY. That is what I was afraid of. The gentleman understands that the banks that are in the System are private banks and the Government has nothing to do with them. The gentleman does not mean to propose that the Federal Government shall limit the salaries of men employed by private banks?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; they are using the credit of the United States, and all money over a certain amount plus 6-percent dividends on their paid-up capital stock under the law must be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and I want to limit these salaries so as to keep these banks from eating up this surplus in big salaries. That is what I want to do. I want to limit the salaries of all officers and employees of organizations using the credit of the United States and making enormous profits accordingly.

Mr. BEEDY. I think there would be very sound reason in limiting it as to the central banks, but I doubt the wisdom of it as to others.

Mr. McFARLANE. I yielded for a question and not for a speech.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. As I understand it, in order for a man to be an officer or governor of a Federal Reserve bank he is supposed to leave behind him all of his banking connections. If the gentleman wants to get a man who has experience in banking, naturally he wants to get someone who has been in the banking business; and if he has to leave all his other connections behind him, does not the gentleman think we are possibly limiting it to small an amount if we limit it to $10,000?

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman I would point out that in our Federal Reserve district, which is the eleventh district, we have had a gentleman there, Mr. Talley, who has taken the position of governor of that district, who was receiving $5,000 a year before he received this political appointment, and since that time has been receiving several times that amount.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman believes we can get good men at this salary?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; I know we can.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, an examination of the amendment at the desk indicates that it applies only to officers of the Federal Reserve banks. If the gentleman meant also to include member banks, then he should modify his amendment. Whether we would have any right to interfere or whether it would be prudent to interfere thus with the practices of institutions that are private corporations is another question.

An amendment of this sort to one familiar with the conditions of living in the big cities where the Federal Reserve banks are located, seems wholly unjustifiable.

Some years ago Samuel L. Vauclain, president of one of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, in an article in the American Magazine, made the estimate that in the city of New York there were 50,000 persons who must be making $25,000 a year or more. Is it conceivable that you would put in charge of the huge New York Federal Reserve bank, entrusted with the responsibility of caring for more millions of dollars each year than the human mind can conceive—

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. May I finish the sentence first?

Mr. COLMER. You may; yes.

Mr. LUCE. Is it conceivable that you will put in charge of such an institution a man not worth receiving more than $10,000 a year? Larger salaries than this are paid to men in the legal departments of such institutions and they are paid because the men can earn more outside than the smaller salaries suggested. You would drain your great Federal Reserve System of its trained men; its men who by long experience in banking and finance have acquired powers of administration, who are true executives. Nothing could be more rash than for the public to insist that its executives handling these millions and millions of dollars shall be of that grade suggested by this salary.

Now, while I am on my feet, I know there is rising in the minds of some gentlemen here that fact that our own salaries, recently $10,000, but are now $8,500. It was for many years in the English parliament the custom to pay no salaries. A small salary has now been paid there for some time in order that Labor members may serve. It is a grave question whether it is wise to pay salaries of any kind to members of legislative bodies, but inasmuch as we have established that system, there is no better rule than to say that the salary of a legislator shall be that which will allow him to leave his ordinary occupations for a time and without suffering serve his country. He must look for a great part of his reward to the honor of the office, to the satisfaction of trying to serve his fellow men and making whatever talents the Lord may have given him useful as far as they may go, but in the business world the law of supply and demand rules. You do not get good men unless you pay them what they can receive in other occupations.

You will, inevitably, by the passage of a provision of this sort, lower the quality of the men conducting a system upon which the welfare of the country greatly depends. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, not for the reason that the gentleman from Massachusetts has suggested but because I do not believe that Congress has a right to do this. These are private banks. If the amendment extends to member banks, I cannot see that we have any business to dictate what salaries shall be paid by member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

I agree with the purposes that the gentleman is intending to serve. I agree that the salaries of the officers of the Federal Reserve banks in many instances are altogether too high, but I think the matter should be reached in another way. If Congress wants to deal with it, it should deal with it by instructing the Federal Reserve Board to make the changes suggested. The Federal Reserve Board have been most generous with the 12 banks in this matter of salaries. It is a subject that ought to be dealt with, but I do not think that we would be dealing with it in a proper manner by this amendment.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to give you gentlemen the savings that would be accomplished by putting this amendment in effect. Upon reducing 48 employees of the Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board to $10,000 a year salary, you would save $496,000.

You have been talking about economy ever since we have been here. The gentleman from Massachusetts heretofore has been talking economy, and now, not because this little item of $496,000 will be saved, but because it affects the big bankers, they are not in favor of it.

These Federal Reserve banks do spend some of our money. On page 156 of their report you will find that spent for telegraph and telephone lines, $737,000.

On page 226 of the Federal Reserve Board report they spent for private wires and telephones $251,000. In other words, the Federal Reserve Board spent of your money $969,414.10 for telephones and private wires.

On page 151 the expenses of directors' meetings, $175,000; travel, $214,000; printing and office supplies and binding, $703,000; amounting to over a million dollars.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is the gentleman quoting from the Federal Reserve bank report and not from appropriations made by Congress?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I quote from Federal Reserve Report for 1932. We pay for that, whether we pay one way or the other.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If these salaries were cut from the surplus we would receive the revenue?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Well, we were supposed to receive a certain portion of it, but we never did. The more money the Federal Reserve spends, the less there is to be refunded to the Treasury.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that generally speaking, I have been in favor of the changes that have so far taken place. Further, what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] called attention to is literally true. The Federal Reserve System is a private banking system. I think we have a perfect right to limit expenditures because of our right to control, but this is not the place to do it. We are getting along here, and we are fooling away a lot of time on nonessentials, things that are not vital. I hope we will get along and finish this bill up, because the work that has been done by this committee is well worthy of our support, unless there is a vital reason for not supporting it. It does seem to me that this is not a vital matter and it is not the place to do this thing. If the gentleman will bring this up in a separate bill at the right time and make the corrections along that line, I shall not only be glad to go along with him and aid him to accomplish the things he wants to do, but this is not the time, and it is not vital to this matter.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. If we want to reduce salaries, why is not now the place to start?

Mr. KELLER. For the reason that the Government of the United States does not pay the salaries at all.

Mr. McFARLANE. But they are using the credit of the Government of the United States, they are making their money off the credit of the United States, and should not we have the right to limit their salaries because we receive the surplus?

Mr. KELLER. But as long as we permit them to go on as a private organization I doubt whether we have such a right.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so that I may make a suggestion to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] in his short talk made a suggestion that might be worthy of being followed out at this point. If the gentleman's amendment is defeated, then offer another amendment carrying instructions to the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. This amendment is prepared by the drafting committee and is in harmony with each and every other provision of the bill. If you want to cut these salaries this will do the job.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman stated that there was a time and a place to introduce the bill. I should like to ask the gentleman when that time is and where the place is.

Mr. KELLER. I will answer that and I think I can do it. The time and place to introduce the bill is in the next session, when we are not laboring under the necessity of emergency as we are at the present time. I shall be delighted to join with the gentleman in that matter at that time.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. We have put many things into the various bills that we have passed almost to the regulation of ash cans.

Mr. KELLER. Unfortunately, we have.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Let us just pass this and see what happens. Let us start our economy right now. Charity begins at home.

Mr. KELLER. Yes, but this is not charity; it is business. We ought to carry this through and do it as rapidly as possible. The amendment is not a vital matter here.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I am in favor of this amendment. The Federal Reserve banks were organized in 1913. Each member bank is required—at least, it was in the law—to subscribe for stock to an amount equal to 6 percent of its capital and surplus. They have never paid in more than 3 percent of their capital and surplus. The largest amount ever paid in by the member banks to the Federal Reserve banks is $160,500,000. The capital stock of the Federal Reserve banks aggregates $321,000,000. On that small capital stock of $160,500,000—and it was as low as $100,000,000—those banks have transacted business aggregating almost $100,000,000,000 a year. Could they do it on that small capital stock? No; it would not be possible. The reason they have been able to transact that large amount of business is because they were using free of charge the credit of the entire Nation. It was contemplated by the framers of the Federal Reserve Act that the Federal Reserve System or the Federal Reserve banks should pay a small compensation for the use of that Government credit, and it was written into section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act that when the Federal Reserve notes were delivered by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to a private bank, a Federal Reserve bank, the bank should pay to the Treasury of the United States such an interest charge as may be assessed by the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve Board set a zero rate, no interest at all, upon the theory that when the earnings of the Federal Reserve banks came in at the end of the year, and when the operating expenses of the banks had been paid, and 6 percent dividends paid on paid-in capital stock, the surplus would go into the Treasury of the United States, and therefore the initial interest rate should not be required since the surplus would go into the Treasury.

GOVERNMENT MONEY BEING SPENT

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Now, under the present law they are challenged, or we dare them to spend all the money they can. The more money they spend the less they have to pay into the Treasury. That being true, the money they are spending is Government money. We really should make the appropriation for the Federal Reserve banks. We should set the salaries of the officers and employees, because it is Government money they are using. That being true, it is just as necessary and essential to place a limitation upon their salaries as it is to place a limitation upon the salary of any officer or employee of any department of this Government. [Applause.]

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I should like to know what we are driving at in this bill; whether it is to guarantee bank deposits or an attempt to rewrite the entire Federal Reserve Act.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, in any event, when an amendment can be offered and passed that would save the Government of the United States a half million dollars a year, I see no reason why the gentleman should oppose it. Why should we permit Federal Reserve banks to pay salaries aggregating twenty or thirty or forty or fifty thousand dollars a year out of Government money, money that should go to the Treasury of the United States, and yet reduce by 15 percent the salaries of employees who are only making $1,000 a year? [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. But, I repeat the question to the gentleman in different form—that is, what we are driving at is one certain, specific thing, and to do no more than that at the present time. If the gentleman will write a bill covering the thing he is driving at, I will join wholeheartedly and enthusiastically with him in putting it forward.

Mr. PATMAN. I should be glad to do that, were it necessary, but it is germane to this bill. Anything that is germane should be considered. If it is not germane, the Chairman will not permit its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL]?

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have 5 minutes on this amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I modify the request to make it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the big salaries paid by the Federal Reserve Board to its officers and employees and the extravagance of it for several years have been a scandal to this Nation. [Applause.] We must stop these tremendous unearned salaries. Some of the finest bankers of the United States are bankers that you find at home—honest, sincere, hard-working men, who sometimes work from 8 o'clock in the morning until 6 and 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening, and not many of them get as much as $5,000 a year. And many get only $2,500, $3,000, and $4,000, while many officials and employees of the Federal Reserve banks must get these tremendous, unreasonable salaries of twenty, twenty-five, thirty, thirty-five, forty, and even fifty thousand dollars a year. It ought to stop.

Our former colleague from Texas, Mr. Williams, who went out this last election and whose place Mr. McFARLANE now occupies, has put some information into this RECORD that every Member ought to read. During the last 5 or 6 years I have put in statement after statement showing its inexcusable extravagance and the many palaces that have been built with this money by the Federal Reserve Board all over the country, outlandish palaces, unreasonable in their extravagances.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, Congress has passed legislation to prohibit a repetition of that.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; finally we did prohibit it, and we should pass legislation to stop these outrageous salaries. If not now, when are we going to do it? Are we going to put it off until next year or year after next, or until all of us here die? We want to do it while we are living do we not? When is a better time than right now to put a limitation on these scandalous salaries?

Some Congressmen and some Senators here work as hard as any banker in the United States. The time we give to the people of this country, in my judgment, is just as valuable as the time that any banker gives, and if Congressmen and Senators can work for $8,500 a year, why should you pay some of those bankers $50,000. It ought to stop. [Applause.]

The only fault I have with this amendment is that I object to any reference to the Classification Act of 1923. That is such a monstrosity that it ought to be repealed.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just one minute. The provision in this amendment which limits salaries of the bankers to $10,000, as a maximum is good, and I am in favor of it, and I hope it will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. As to the Civil Service amendment, to which the gentleman refers, that is just a guidepost in setting the salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I do not even like to refer to it except to try to repeal it, although it is appropos to Federal Reserve bankers, because under that 1923 Classification Act there have been so many very ordinary $1,500 clerks put into nine- and ten-thousand dollar positions, by a mere sleight-of-hand performance of calling them "chief", or "director", or "commissioner", that, of course, it ought to go along with the Federal Reserve banking legislation.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Is it not true that the governors of the Federal Reserve System are limited to $12,000 a year?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but they pay some of their officials twenty, thirty, thirty-five, forty, and even fifty thousand dollar salaries.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. That is the way it is done, is it?

Mr. BLANTON. That is the way it is done. At one time in years gone by I sat here with my mouth open, almost entranced, every time the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] got up to speak, listening to him. At that time he was for cutting down these outrageous expenses of government, and I have been looking for him to get up every minute for the last 10 or 15 minutes and say, "I accept the amendment to limit these salaries. It is a good one." Why he does not do it, I cannot understand.

You know, after fellows get up into these high positions, and get to associating with these highbrow Federal Reserve bankers their ideas change. [Laughter.] But, after all, our friend, the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee [Mr. STEAGALL], is a good scout, and "with all his faults we love him still."

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman vote for a bill I have introduced—

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota (continuing). Limiting the salary of the Members of the House and Senate to $7,500 a year?

Mr. BLANTON. I have a similar bill now pending before the committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am just reminded that the amendment refers to employees only. It would not apply to the officers of the Federal Reserve bank.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again read so that Members may know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the McFarlane amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, again I should like to point out to the membership here that the amendment refers only to employees.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I think the suggestion is a wise one.

I ask unanimous consent, with the approval of my colleague, that the word "officer" be inserted just preceding the word "member", so it will read "officer, member, or employee."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I accept the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BEEDY and Mr. RAMSPECK objected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I move to amend the amendment of my colleague by inserting the word "officer" preceding the word "member."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment must be in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I will put it in writing inside of 2 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, these salaries are paid from the earnings of the Federal Reserve banks, private banks, and I question very seriously whether we have the right to deal with the earnings of these private banks in this manner, much as I should like to reach this situation.

I think also that the amendment as read would include member banks. That would include the fixing of the salaries of the president, vice president, cashier, and other officers of member banks located throughout the country.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. And a large number of the member banks are State institutions, over which we have no jurisdiction whatsoever.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is correct.

I think it would be well if this could be rephrased so as to be a direction to the Federal Reserve Board to do this thing that the gentleman is trying to bring about.

Now, I should like to go as far as the gentleman is proposing to go in fixing the salaries of some of the officers of these city banks. I have a resolution pending before this House inquiring into the salary that was paid for the last 5 years to Albert H. Wiggin of the Chase National Bank. I understand now he has been retired at a salary or pension which would surprise even the most enthusiastic Member here.

Some of these things should have been attended to by the supervising officers of the Federal Reserve bank or the Comptroller of the Currency; and such salaries as have been paid should have been stopped.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am sure the gentleman is in sympathy, is he not, with the purport of the amendment to limit the salaries of all these officials?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am in sympathy with its purport.

Mr. McFARLANE. Then vote for the amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not want to vote for something which is none of the business of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McFARLANE. Vote for it and we can correct it in free conference.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. May we have the amendment divided so we can vote upon that part which would put the employees of the Board under Civil Service as distinguished from the part relating to salaries?

The CHAIRMAN. The phraseology of the amendment does not permit of division.

Mr. MAPES. May I call the Chairman's attention to the fact that the limitation as to salaries is included in the proviso? It seems to me, therefore, that the amendment might be divided in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not so drawn that one part of it being taken away a substantive proposition remains.

Mr. MAPES. If the Chair will read the amendment and then so holds, I will, of course, submit to the Chair's decision, but I call the Chair's attention to the fact that the limitation on salaries is included in the proviso, which is an entirely separate and distinct provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The phraseology of the amendment does not permit of division.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 55, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. The Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting between section 24 and section 25 (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 371 and 601-605; Supp. VI, title 12, sec. 371) thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 24A. Hereafter no national bank, without the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, and no State member bank, without the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, shall (1) invest in bank premises, or in the stock, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations of any corporation holding the premises of such bank or (2) make loans to or upon the security of the stock of any such corporation, if the aggregate of all such investments and loans will exceed the amount of the capital stock of such bank."

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this to ask the Chairman of the Committee if he will not move that the Committee now rise. The Members of the House are tired, the members of the Committee are tired, and I do not think we ought to be held here any longer.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman that I am urged by the majority leader to try to make further progress before we quit this afternoon.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me say to the gentleman and to the House that we have a public-works bill that is longer than this, we have an insurance bill for which there is a rule, we have a railroad bill, we have a possible tariff bill, and we have a possible farm bill that is coming before this House. We have read about 17 pages of the pending bill. At this rate it will take 4 days to finish the consideration of this bill. I think the Members of the House ought to be willing to stay here for a reasonable time and let us make some progress on the bill before we rise. [Applause.] It is no more to me than it is to you, but I say to you that the President of the United States and the Members of Congress and the people of this country, who are above us all, want this Congress to get through with its work and adjourn and go home, and we are not going to do it unless we make some progress on these bills.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, we want to get through and we want to go home, but we have been here 6 long hours and I will stay here without anything to eat until midnight if you want me to.

Mr. BYRNS. There is no intention of requiring that.

Mr. BEEDY. But I thought I sensed the feeling of the House and the Committee. I want to cooperate with the gentleman to do all that we ought to do, and I will go just as far as any other Member.

Mr. BYRNS. I appreciate that, and let me say to the gentleman that it is only 10 minutes past 5 and I dare say there is not anybody in the gentleman's district or in anybody else's district who quits work at 5 o'clock. We certainly can stay here until 6 o'clock or even longer and then get home in time to have our dinner, and I think we ought to do this. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 14. Paragraph "Seventh" of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 24; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 24), is amended to read as follows:

"Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes according to the provisions of this title; and generally by engaging in all forms of banking business and undertakings all types of banking transactions that may, by the laws of the State in which such bank is situated, be permitted to banks of deposit and discount organized and incorporated under the laws of such State, except insofar as they may be forbidden by the provisions of any act of Congress. The business of dealing in investment securities by the association shall be limited to purchasing and selling such securities without recourse, solely upon the order, and for the account of customers, and in no case for its own account, and the association shall not underwrite any issue of securities: Provided, That the association may purchase for its own account investment securities under such limitations and restrictions as the Comptroller of the Currency may by regulation prescribe, but in no event (1) shall the total amount of any issue of investment securities of any one obligor or maker purchased after this section as amended takes effect and held by the association for its own account exceed at any time 10 percent of the total amount of such issue outstanding, but this limitation shall not apply to any such issue the total amount of which does not exceed $100,000 and does not exceed 50 percent of the capital of the association, nor (2) shall the total amount of the investment securities of any one obligor or maker purchased after this section as amended takes effect and held by the association for its own account exceed at any time 15 percent of the amount of the capital stock of the association actually paid in and unimpaired and 25 percent of its unimpaired surplus fund. As used in this section the term 'investment securities' shall mean marketable obligations evidencing indebtedness of any person, copartnership, association, or corporation in the form of bonds, notes, and/or debentures commonly known as investment securities under such further definition of the term 'investment securities' as may by regulation be prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency. Except as hereinafter provided, or otherwise permitted by law, nothing herein contained shall authorize the purchase by the association of any shares of stock of any corporation. The limitations herein contained as to investment securities shall not apply to obligations of the United States, or obligations of any State or of any political subdivision thereof, or obligations issued under authority of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, or any other acts creating Federal corporations: Provided, That in carrying on the business commonly known as the safe-deposit business the association shall not invest in the capital stock of a corporation organized under the law of any State to conduct a safe-deposit business in an amount in excess of 15 percent of the capital stock of the association actually paid in and unimpaired and 15 percent of its unimpaired surplus."

The restrictions of this section as to dealing in investment securities shall take effect 2 years after the date of the approval of this act.

Sec. 15. (a) Section 5138 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 51; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 51), is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5138. After this section as amended takes effect, no national banking association shall be organized with a less capital than $100,000, except that such associations with a capital of not less than $50,000 may be organized in any place the population of which does not exceed 6,000 inhabitants. No such association shall be organized in a city the population of which exceeds 50,000 persons with a capital of less than $200,000, except that in the outlying districts of such a city where the State laws permit the organization of State banks with a capital of $100,000 or less, national banking associations now organized or hereafter organized may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, have a capital of not less than $100,000."

(b) The tenth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 329), is amended to read as follows:

"No applying bank shall be admitted to membership in a Federal Reserve bank unless it possesses a paid-up unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provisions of the National Bank Act, as amended."

Sec. 16. Section 5139 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 52; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 52), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"After 2 years from the date of the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, no certificate representing the stock of any such association shall represent the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank, nor shall the ownership, sale, or transfer of any certificate representing the stock of any such association be conditioned in any manner whatsoever upon the ownership, sale, or transfer of a certificate representing the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], in view of the colloquy that recently took place with the gentleman from Maine about the need for haste in the consideration of this legislation, whether this bill is a part of the emergency program of the President?

Mr. BYRNS. I have no information on the subject.

Mr. McFADDEN. I may say that the papers today have given out a program that the President, apparently, put out, and this bill is not a part of that program.

Mr. BYRNS. I have no information that it is.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman further that I am reliably informed that the Secretary of the Treasury is unalterably opposed to this bill, and I am trying to find out in this great rush we are in whether or not the administration considers this a part of the emergency program.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman that I have no information that it is, but I do know that it is to be followed by 2 or 3 or 4 bills that are of vital interest to the administration and which the administration is anxious to have passed.

Mr. McFADDEN. In view of the fact that the gentleman has no information as to whether or not this measure is a part of the emergency program and in view of the further fact that there is no emergency provision in this bill, I want to suggest to the gentleman that this bill be laid aside and that we carry out the President's program. [Applause.] After that program is finished, if there is a chance to consider this bill, I suggest that that would be the proper course to pursue.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that this bill is now before the House. He should address his appeal, of course, to the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee; but if the gentleman will assist Members in quickly disposing of the bill we will get to the emergency program of the President very quickly. I do not want to deny anybody the right to offer any legitimate amendments, but it does seem to me that we should discuss our amendments and dispose of this bill within a reasonable time, and that is all I am asking.

As I said a while ago, it is no more to me than it is to any other Member of the House, but I do think it is important, and particularly important to Members upon this side of the aisle to get through with this legislation so that we can go home, as the people want us to do.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me while I ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. BEEDY. Is it the purpose to take this bill up tomorrow and make it the order of business tomorrow and continue with its consideration?

Mr. BYRNS. That is my understanding. I have no information to the contrary.

Mr. BEEDY. And there has been no request to postpone the consideration of the bill until Wednesday?

Mr. BYRNS. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. McFADDEN. Under the statement the gentleman has just given, it seems to me that the bill should be laid aside, and I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he will not agree to laying the bill aside so that the President's program can be carried out. This evidently is not a part of his program.

Mr. STEAGALL. Is the gentleman speaking for the President of the United States?

Mr. McFADDEN. I read the announcements made in the paper. I am trying to get some information from the administration leadership on the floor of the House, and I am still seeking information whether this is a part of the President's emergency plan.

Mr. BYRNS. That has nothing to do with the merits or demerits of this bill. We have no information from the President as to his views on this. If the gentleman will go down and see the President he will doubtless tell him, but so far as I know he has not given any information as to his position on this bill.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McGUGIN: Page 22, lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "six thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen thousand"; and in line 14 strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a comma and add the following: "except further in cities of not to exceed six thousand inhabitants the amount of capital required shall not exceed twenty-five thousand, and in cities of less than three thousand inhabitants the amount of capital required shall not exceed $15,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is proposing an amendment to section 15. We have passed that section.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McGUGIN. I move to strike out the last word. If there was ever any question that it is the very purpose of this committee and those sponsoring this bill to drive the State banking system into the Federal Reserve System, this action of the Chairman closes the book on that subject.

I did not think the gentleman from Alabama would raise the question, in view of the fact that we went by the section when Members of the House could not keep track of where the Clerk was reading.

Here is what the facts are: When you take section 5138, the minimum capital for any bank is $50,000; and when you turn to the next section the minimum capital for an applying bank in the Federal Reserve is the same as would be required if the bank was seeking an initial charter.

Under this bill no bank can come into the Federal Reserve System with less than $50,000 capital, and then it must be located in a city of less than 6,000 inhabitants. That means an end of independent banking in small towns. That is the very purpose of this bill. The small banks will be driven out and the people will demand banking facilities, and then they will be forced to turn to chain banks in order to obtain banking facilities.

There is no greater hypocrisy, no greater falsehood uttered in the name of banking, than that which frequently is said—that these small banks were the ones that broke down the banking system of the country. I deny the charge. It was the large banks that contributed most to the demoralizing of the banking system of the country. What State bank came down to Washington as Dawes did and begged the Government for $90,000,000 in order to keep its doors open? Was it the failure of a country bank that caused the banks of this country to close a few weeks ago? No. It was the failure of a great bank in Detroit. I resent the slander against the State and local banks. It is the very purpose of the majority of the Banking and Currency Committee to destroy the State banking system and draft it into a national system.

They want to drive this country into one bank system, a national system, and that is the thing that I am opposing, and we have no chance to reach it now, after you have gone by this section, because the capital stock must be a minimum of $50,000, and as we go on in the bill a State bank cannot obtain this insurance unless it becomes a Federal Reserve bank, and to become a Federal Reserve bank it must have a capital of $50,000, or meet rules and regulations that a board which is not yet set up shall make, and no one knows what those rules will be.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Did the gentleman hear section 15 read by the Clerk, or did any other man in this House hear it read?

Mr. McGUGIN. I did not; and I was listening attentively. I did not hear it, and I was sitting on the front seat. I am certain it was not read. The only reason we cannot offer an amendment to reach that section is because the Banking and Currency Committee, through its chairman, Mr. STEAGALL, is taking advantage of the fact that it was not read, or if read a Member could not hear the reading of the section and he is now invoking the rule that we cannot offer such an amendment at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to offer his amendment.

Mr. McGUGIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The section was not read and I know it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be permitted to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McGUGIN. I thought so. The gentleman from Cincinnati, Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER], knows little about the needs of farm credit or the credit of a man living out in the country, or a small merchant; he knows the credit needs of Cincinnati.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at the attitude of my friend from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] because if his view in respect to the deflation of the dollar takes place, and the dollar is cut in two, then $50,000 tomorrow will be the equivalent of $25,000 today. Inasmuch as he advocates very strongly that change I do not think he ought to disturb these figures, lest the result might not be consistent with that obtained by cutting the value of the dollar in two.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. McGUGIN. Assuming that the gentleman knows something about rural credit and needs, does the gentleman think there is any need in a town of 1,500 to 3,000 people for a bank having the capitalization of $50,000 as a minimum?

Mr. LUCE. Inasmuch as the record of the failures of 9,000 banks in the last 10 years shows that a chief cause of their failure has been too small an amount of capital, I think the gentleman is butting his head against a fact.

Mr. McGUGIN. Did lack of capitalization cause Mr. Dawes' bank to fail? Was it lack of capitalization that caused the Detroit banks to fail?

Mr. LUCE. Oh, the gentleman is drawing a herring across the trail to distract our attention from the small banks, to which he addressed his remarks. We are concerned at the moment with the small banks and the fact that all the thinking men of the country in these matters of finance attribute a very great part of the distressing failures of the last 10 years to their lack of capitalization.

Mr. McGUGIN. I say to the gentleman if it is the purpose of the gentleman to do away with the small banks, he is succeeding admirably.

Mr. LUCE. We are going to make the small bank safe or we will put it out of business.

Mr. McGUGIN. I thank the gentleman for that last statement.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the restrictions to which the gentleman from Kansas objects applies only to national banks, or to a State bank which joins the Federal Reserve System. Those restrictions will increase the chartering of small State banks all over the country, out of their necessity.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. McFADDEN. I hope the gentleman will not do that. He will not gain time by that sort of tactics.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McGUGIN) there were—ayes 71 and noes 29.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. Tellers were refused.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McGUGIN. I now make the point of order that the page including section 15 was never read by the Clerk. That was my judgment at the time, and I was watching it. I was not prone to make the point of order until I find I am substantiated in that statement by other Members on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CANNON of Missouri). The point of order is overruled.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] be permitted to offer his amendment. I think there was so much confusion in the House at the time that no one knew just where the Clerk was reading. The gentleman should at least have a right to offer his amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. How much time will it require?

Mr. McFADDEN. I should like 5 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from Kansas has already spoken 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Give the gentleman 2 minutes then.

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman will confine it to 2 minutes' debate I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like 5 minutes on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN], may be allowed to offer an amendment out of order, and that debate thereon be limited to 2 minutes. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to discuss the amendment for 5 minutes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, let me say that I dare say the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] has taken more time on this bill than any other Member of the House. It does seem to me the gentleman ought to permit those Members here, who are anxious to dispose of this bill or to get along as far as page 49 to do so, and then come back here tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am not attempting to delay the bill. This is an important provision. It may be that I am unnecessarily taking up the time of the House.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, if it means 7 minutes' debate I will take the responsibility of objecting myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] limiting the debate to 2 minutes?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. (a) After the expiration of 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, it shall be unlawful—

(2) For any person, firm, corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization, other than a banking institution or private banker subject to examination and regulation under State or Federal law, to engage to any extent whatever in the business of receiving deposits subject to check or to repayment upon presentation of a passbook, certificate of deposit, or other evidence of debt, or upon request of the depositor, unless such person, firm, corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization shall submit to periodic examination by the Comptroller of the Currency or by the Federal Reserve bank of the district and shall make and publish periodic reports of its condition, exhibiting in detail its resources and liabilities, such examination and reports to be made and published at the same time and in the same manner and with like effect and penalties as are now provided by law in respect of national banking associations transacting business in the same locality.

(b) Whoever shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and any officer, director, employee, or agent of any person, firm, corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization who knowingly participates in any such violation shall be punished by a like fine or imprisonment or both.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFADDEN: On page 25, after line 6, insert the following new sections:

"SEC. —. That any person, firm, or corporation subject to the laws of any State or Territory of the United States and acting in any fiduciary capacity for another residing within another State or Territory, or in the District of Columbia, who shall use the mails to induce others or another living within or outside the State or Territory where such person, firm, or corporation resides, or does any profit-gaining business, or who shall by an argument, advertisement, device, or other method persuade or induce others or another to enter into an agreement or arrangement to avoid the payment of any tax or revenue due or liable to become due to the Government of the United States, shall be guilty of a felony, and all persons combining, cooperating, or acting with one or more other persons for the purpose herein declared a felony shall be likewise guilty of a felony.

"No officer, agent, employee, attorney in fact or proxy, for any stockholder of a corporation doing business under the National Banking Act, or doing an interstate business of any kind within the United States or any of its States or Territories, when such a stockholder shall be either a trustee, guardian, agent, attorney, depository, or holder of the capital stock of any such corporation, for anyone owning a legal, equitable, or beneficial interest in said capital stock, for the purpose of voting said stock at any meeting of such corporation, or for the purpose of holding or accumulating said stock in any manner to avoid the payment of any tax or revenue due or to become due the Government of the United States, or to give to anyone holding or exercising any control over said capital stock the power to vote the same at any election of such corporation, shall hereafter hold or vote such capital stock at any meeting of any such corporation without the written consent of the owner of such legal, equitable, or beneficial interest of or to such capital stock.

"Any person or firm convicted of any violation of any provisions of this section shall be imprisoned for a term of not less than 3 years nor more than 10 years in a Federal penitentiary, and to pay a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, and, in the case of a violation by a corporation, such corporation, upon conviction, shall pay a fine of $10,000, together with all the costs incident to the prosecution thereof."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. GOSS. I am willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment proposes to deal with a subject which is of tremendous importance. I refer to the trust departments of National and State member banks of the Federal Reserve System. In the operation of these departments in some of the big cities of the country there are great abuses. The trust officers of those institutions, under the authority of the officers of the main bank, are resorting, in the handling of estates, to practices which I am surprised that the heads of the banks themselves even permit to continue. I am the more surprised that the supervisory officer of the Federal Reserve System allows it to continue.

Those trust officers, in carrying on sacred trust operations, are conniving with the people to leave their trust funds with the institution, under the assurance and promise that if they will do so they will secure them a refund or a cutting out of the legal taxes which are due the United States Government. That is a practice that should be stopped. I am trying to reach that in this amendment. I believe this amendment will cure it. This, I realize, is subject to a point of order; but I appeal to the committee and to the membership of this House to permit the enactment of the provision in this bill.

It will correct the evil that now is practiced. I realize that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GOSS], who has raised the point of order, will make the point of order; and because of this fact I shall not be able to say all that should be said, so I shall extend my remarks so that the Membership may know and understand what I am trying to do.

These remarks are as follows:

I want to call attention to a practice that has grown up in the operation of trust departments of banks, members of the Federal Reserve System, and otherwise, known as their trust or estates department, a comparatively new venture developed during the past few years and now not supervised as this sacred trust business should be supervised. It is through this channel that unscrupulous bank officers have proceeded and now are continuing to proceed in their nefarious scheming to defraud the public and particularly these trust accounts and the estates which are trusted to the bank for safe-keeping. Clever lawyers have so manipulated trust agreements between banks and their clients' trust estates as to give these unscrupulous officers practically entire control over the management of the securities placed in these departments, and history records almost a complete spoliation of many estates that have been entrusted to some of our leading financial institutions.

This business has become so profitable that the officers of these trust departments are now engaged in soliciting among aged wealthy people and others that their life savings or gains be placed with them for safe-keeping. In some instances owners of estates have been so deceived as to the agreement or understanding entered into for the management of their estates as to deprive their heirs of practically any rights whatsoever, and an investigation will show in some instances where estates have been entirely plundered and the rights of the heirs entirely taken away and the assets purloined for the benefit of the bank or its managing officers.

I intend this to be a severe indictment of this particular class and operation of trust business, and I desire to cite one specific instance which is illustrative probably of many others in the hope that the calling of attention to this particular phase of the banking business as now conducted throughout the country will bring about a thorough investigation and correction of the dastardly practices that are being pursued.

In some of the larger institutions this particular business is mixed up along with the investment and security affiliates. It would almost seem as though some of these supposedly strong, well-managed financial institutions, officered by outstanding men with national reputations, were organized and operated as rackets, with legal departments officered by clever lawyers who maintain lobbies at the State and National capitals for the purpose of directing the course of legislation so as not to interfere with their own particular methods of operation.

In what I am about to say now I have in mind one of the leading institutions of this character in the United States, whose assets are in excess of $500,000,000. This institution is practicing the very kind of business that I am referring to. Its affiliates and subsidiaries and trust departments are capitalized with over $5,000,000. It is a common practice for this class of institutions which are engaged in distribution of securities to use the funds in these trust departments to trade in and out, and oftentimes stable, well-seasoned securities, which are placed in these trusts, have been taken out and unseasoned securities of speculative nature and of questionable value have been substituted, and estates have thus been depleted in this manner.

In other instances, securities of an inferior grade held by the parent institution or one of its affiliates have been unloaded into these sacred trust estates which are supposed to be honestly managed by the officers of the institution.

In this particular instance the unscrupulous officers of this institution have not been content with the exploitation of these trust estates, but have extended their nefarious operations to exploit the stockholders of the institution of which they are the trusted and supposedly respected officers. In order to accomplish this they have organized within themselves securities companies through which are liquidated the good assets of the parent institution. These liquidated assets are then repurchased at greatly depreciated values by cliques of officers of the same institution who profit personally, either through their control of the affiliate or by the losses which have been thus sustained by the stockholders in the supposed liquidation of assets which have been depreciated in value by one reason or another through the process of writing down the good securities and substituting in their place the worthless stuff of the subsidiaries. Under this plan, the inside group are enabled to pick up great bargains for half their market value, while the rest of the stockholders are left to hold the sack filled with worthless junk.

So that you may know how this plan works, a piece of property worth $1,000,000 right now in sound values is written down to $300,000, foreclosed on, and taken over by the inside gang by a bid of $200,000, which carries a deficiency judgment with it for the rest. It is a rich melon, but it is nevertheless a form of looting peculiarly known and practiced by certain New York City bankers who are now on the griddle or are about to be placed there for violations of the laws of the land. In some instances even the money used to buy at sheriff sale is lent by the bank to the inside gang in control of the inside subsidiaries.

In connection with this course, drives have been put on to depress the stock of the bank, then buy it up and gain absolute ownership of it for as low as 30 percent of its value, also on money borrowed from the bank itself.

The officers of these trust departments and their attorneys have invented a scheme to evade income taxes and by such practices which are now in operation are actively engaged in a conspiracy to defraud the Government of the United States.

The part taken by the officers in control of the trust department is new to most people so I will give you the plan which has been uncovered from the brokers who have been engaged in the stock transactions for these bankers. The heads of the trust department under the guidance of their able lawyers have organized a policy for absorbing the income of beneficiaries into capital asset of all estates, such as stock dividends, for the purpose of market manipulation. That declared policy is this: The trust department does not regard the book value or the market value of stock dividends coming into estates under their control in making distribution of the income. They always look to the actual value of the stock coming in as a stock dividend. Only the actual values are regarded by them. Then in the open court, within the hearing of all the lawyers for the brokers on the street, ready to pick up stock thrown over by frightened stockholders, the annual accounts of the trust estates, with the inside and superior knowledge of trust officers knowing all the inside facts about the securities held by the bank itself, which have any bank stock in the list of their securities report to the court openly that this "actual value" is from 50 to 75 percent less than it is carried at on the books of the bank which issued it. This happens in many instances and many people are caught to their sorrow.

There is another angle to this conspiracy. By absorbing the stock dividends into the corpus of the fund the income taxes, after the decision in United States v. Phellis (257 U.S. 156), are avoided and the earnings of the trustee is increased by the amount of the dividends withheld from distribution. This has been done to boost the price of the stock on the market and among new subscribers while the insiders were unloading their securities on the bank proper—a favorite plan to depress values and permit the officers to gather it in for themselves.

This loose plan of the conduct of these trust departments of banks that are under Government and State supervision should be looked into by the Department of Justice of this Government because the supervision of the operations of these banks and their trust departments have not been properly carried on by the Federal Reserve management or by the Comptroller of the Currency.

The fact of the matter is that these big banks doing the particular business that I am referring to are so powerful and influential, financially and politically, that they use this influence to overcome any possible interruption to the racket which they are carrying on. The literature and correspondence of these officers who are corruptly carrying on these trust departments discloses clearly a conspiracy to defraud the Government out of its income taxes. In fact they secure much of their business on the basis that they will in the handling of these life trusts avoid the payment of legal taxes due the United States Government.

When the Department of Justice starts its investigations of the handling of these trusts it will find many exquisite pieces of literature, such as I am referring to, which invites the prospective "living trust" customer into a conspiracy with the trust officers to evade their income taxes to the Federal Government. The trustees offer to save more than enough to take care of their fees for all their services. They will split on these savings to save the honest taxpayer over half his taxes due the Government, and the citizens thus corrupted are allowing the trustees to keep part of what they prevent the Government from collecting from honest men after their corruption. To say the least, this is a fine, ethical standard for a bank.

The Income Tax Act provides a penalty of fine, costs of prosecution, and imprisonment for evasion of its provisions. Our Federal Criminal Code takes care of that. Section 37 covers acts of conspiracy to defeat the purposes of our revenue laws. It even goes so far as to protect war savings stamps from financial jugglery, as seen by the decisions of United States v. Janowitz (257 U.S. 42), also United States v. Hutto (256 U.S. 524), and Goldman v. United States (245 U.S. 474), where it is held that an unlawful conspiracy to bring about an illegal act, and the doing of an overt act, in furtherance of such conspiracy, is inherently and substantially, in itself, a crime, punishable as such irrespective of whether the result of the conspiracy has been to accomplish its illegal end. I would point out that the mere criminal agreement is the gravamen of the offense, under section 37 of our Criminal Code. And what is a conspiracy? It is held in the case of Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, (254 U.S. 443), that a "conspiracy" is a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or (b) to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means. This, I believe, is the general and universal rule.

I would point out that, when these trust officers tell their customers that their plan is the lawful way to evade paying their income taxes as they are now doing, they are entering into a conspiracy to defraud the Government that is indictable under our laws. I would point out the similarity of these cases to the cases that I have referred to the Attorney General of the United States, namely, Andrew W. Mellon, the Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, and the coalesced company, where these three interests have conspired together for the purpose of avoiding the payment of legal taxes due the United States Government. The same applies to the cases which are now pending before the Government and the Federal courts in the Gulf Oil cases, wherein W. L. Mellon and his associate officers entered into a profit-sharing agreement through which agreement millions of dollars' worth of Gulf Oil stock was distributed to the officers of the Gulf Refining Co. for the purpose of defrauding the Government out of legal taxes that were due it.

These kind of practices and many others which are now known are responsible for the lack of confidence which is so prevalent in Government and financial institutions. This Government must rid our banks of this kind of banditti, and if it does not do so they will spread throughout the land an epidemic of treason that will overthrow the Government and make our country a nation of slaves and sycophants and cowards.

I am proposing, therefore, to provide for the punishment of these acts, relating to the violation by officers of banks of the revenue laws, in an amendment which I hope this House will adopt when it is offered in connection with other amendments to this bill which will be made during its consideration.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment clearly is subject to a point of order. It brings in a lot of extraneous matters the committee have not had the opportunity of going into. Therefore, I shall have to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. GOSS. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I desire to be heard on it.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman just admitted it was subject to a point of order.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is all right; I have the right to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman admitted it was subject to a point of order?

Mr. BYRNS. I ask that the Chair rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McFADDEN. It is very evident a proper discussion of the provisions of this bill cannot take place.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I make this motion to strike out the last word because I want it to appear clearly in the RECORD so that the country may know it and so that the body at the other end of the Capitol may know it when this bill gets over there, that when this bill was in the House, section 513 (a), the section which pertains to the capitalization of national banks, was deliberately skipped, that it was not read to the House, that the Constitution was made a scrap of paper in that respect.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman should make a point of order to clear himself, considering the trick he played in order to shut off amendments in the consideration of this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the section now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it was the duty of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN], if there was any skipping done here, to stop the reading at that time and have the "skipped part" read.

And further, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the presumption is that all of the bill thus far has been read. I know it has been read scientifically. Our very efficient reading clerks know how to read scientifically. Bills have been read scientifically in this House for the last 50 years, and as long as we have a House of Representatives the practice of reading them scientifically will continue.

The CHAIRMAN. That question has been passed upon.

The gentleman will proceed to discuss the last word.

Mr. McGUGIN. The trouble in this instance is that scientific reading was deliberate skipping of a section in order to shut off amendments to an important section.

Mr. Chairman, the last word is the word "both." It is a very peculiar word. It contains four letters. Its first letter, "b", is the second letter of the alphabet. The next letter in this word, the letter "o", is that letter in the English alphabet which comes immediately following the letter "n." "t" is another letter of the English alphabet immediately following the letter "s." The letter "h", the last letter of the word "both", is another letter of the English alphabet.

Considering this word—it has only four letters—I think the House is entirely justified in striking it out.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is discussing a dilatory motion.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I take it the gentleman from Alabama would not object to striking out this word because I take it this word "both" was read.

I am very glad to know that it is not well for me to discuss anything other than the word "both", because there are other matters in which I am more interested.

Mr. KELLER. Nobody else is.

Mr. McGUGIN. If the gentleman from Illinois were discussing the subject he could do it much more entertainingly than I. I would deeply appreciate it if I had his great talent. I would use it to show why the word "both" should be stricken out.

I am not so much interested in striking from this bill the word "both" as I am interested in having the opportunity to offer amendments to bills in a constitutional manner, which I have not had this afternoon, as many Members of this House know. A little honesty and fair dealing, even in the House of Representatives in considering a banking bill, will not hurt the country.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, may I say in defense of the reading clerk that in the confusion here it frequently happens that I do not keep up with the reading of a bill. If the gentleman from Kansas sat in his seat without paying attention to the reading of the bill, that was his fault and not the fault of the House, and I do not think the gentleman ought to get up here and detain the House because of some fault on his own part, for, as the gentleman from Texas said, if the gentleman knew at the time it was being skipped, it was his privilege then, and his duty then to insist upon its being read. I think the gentleman convicts himself of sitting in this House and not paying attention to the reading of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire the regular order of business?

The CHAIRMAN. The order of business is the pending point of order made by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, has the time of the gentleman from Kansas expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I sensed the temper of the House, and I again call attention to the fact that the Committee is not making progress, and I have felt that the chairman should move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. BYRNS. It is quite apparent that only one or two Members object to continuing a while longer.

If these gentlemen will kindly consent, we can read a few more pages of the bill and be in a position to finish it tomorrow, and that is what we must do if the House wishes to dispose of these other bills.

Mr. BEEDY. Let me say to the gentleman that he is advocating on his side of the House a 6-hour day, and I think he ought to be consistent with the principle he advocates and, after sitting here 7 hours steady in the House today, let us go home.

Mr. BYRNS. We would have come to the point we want to reach if the Committee had permitted us to continue.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. The first two sentences of section 5197 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 85) are amended to read as follows:

"Any association may take, receive, reserve, and charge on any loan or discount made, or upon any notes, bills of exchange, or other evidences of debt, interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the State, Territory, or District where the bank is located, or at a rate of 1 percent in excess of the discount rate on 90-day commercial paper in effect at the Federal Reserve bank in the Federal Reserve district where the bank is located, whichever may be the greater, and no more, except that where by the laws of any State a different rate is limited for banks organized under State laws, the rate so limited shall be allowed for associations organized or existing in any such State under this title. When no rate is fixed by the laws of the State, or Territory, or District, the bank may take, receive, reserve, or charge a rate not exceeding 7 percent, or 1 percent in excess of the discount rate on 90-day commercial paper in effect at the Federal Reserve bank in the Federal Reserve district where the bank is located, whichever may be the greater, and such interest may be taken in advance, reckoning the days for which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt has to run."

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOEPEL: On page 26, line 5, after the word "run", strike out the period and quotation mark and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and add: "Provided, The interest charged the borrower shall in no instance exceed by 100 percent the rate of interest the association itself pays its depositors on time and/or savings deposits."

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment refers to the subject I spoke about a moment ago. It refers specifically to Postal Savings deposits. Not only are the banks of the United States receiving and not only do they now have over $1,000,000,000 of post-office funds for which they pay only 2½-percent interest, but they in turn charge you and me 7 percent interest for that same money when we borrow from them. Here is a curious fact in addition to this. The $1,000,000,000 which they now have is supposed to be guaranteed or protected by the deposit of Government bonds as a guaranty to the Government. What do we find in this bill? This bill provides for a repeal of that provision and the security which the bank must give to the Government is to be erased entirely, and instead of that we are drawing on our own Treasury for $150,000,000 to guarantee our own money.

This obnoxious feature is written into this bill and it is unfair to the taxpayer as well as the small borrower. There is no doubt about the fact that the broker in Wall Street can borrow money quite often at a lower rate of interest than the man who needs a little loan and is the one who is paying 7 percent, and I think if these banks are able to make 100 percent clear profit on our money which the Government turns over to them, that ought to be sufficient. This would give us a chance to borrow this money back from the banks at not more than 5 percent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPEL. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Possibly the gentleman's question is answered if he will turn to page 75 and read the proviso in line 5 wherein it is stated—

Provided, That no such security shall be required in case of such part of the deposits as are insured under title III of the Banking Act of 1933.

Mr. HOEPEL. That is just what I am putting forth. We are now putting our own Government money in private banks and providing $150,000,000 to guarantee it. This is what I am objecting to. Heretofore they have had to put up bonds as a guaranty.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this section simply limits the interest rates that may be charged by national banking associations to the rate fixed by the law of the State in which it does business or 1 percent above the rediscount rate of the Federal Reserve bank in that territory.

There are States that have no limitation on interest rates to be charged, and to meet conditions in these States this section is drawn so as to provide that in States that have no laws on the subject the rate shall not be higher than 7 percent. It is simply a limitation.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. In any case in which, in the opinion of the Comptroller of the Currency, it would be to the advantage of the depositors and unsecured creditors of any national banking association whose business has been closed, for such association to resume business upon the retention by the association, for a reasonable period to be prescribed by the Comptroller, of all or any part of its deposits, the Comptroller is authorized, in his discretion, to permit the association to resume business if depositors and unsecured creditors of the association representing at least 85 percent of its total deposit and unsecured credit liabilities consent in writing to such retention of deposits. Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect in any manner any powers of the Comptroller under the provisions of law in force on the date of enactment of this act with respect to the reorganization of national banking associations.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the House ought to have some explanation of this important section, and I ask the chairman of the committee to explain it to the House.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this simply provides that 85 percent of the depositors and creditors of the banking association that has been closed may determine what shall be done with the assets of that bank.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. After 1 year from the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the board of directors, board of trustees, or other similar governing body of every national banking association and of every State bank or trust company which is a member of the Federal Reserve System shall consist of not less than 5 nor more than 25 members; and every director, trustee, or other member of such governing body shall be the bona fide owner in his own right of shares of stock of such banking association, State bank, or trust company having a par value in the aggregate of not less than $2,000. If any national banking association violates the provisions of this section and continues such violation after 30 days' notice from the Comptroller of the Currency, the said Comptroller may appoint a receiver or conservator therefor, in accordance with the provisions of existing law. If any State bank or trust company which is a member of the Federal Reserve System violates the provisions of this section and continues such violation after 30 days' notice from the Federal Reserve Board, it shall be subject to the forfeiture of its membership in the Federal Reserve System in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of calling attention to the last line of page 28, where there is a provision for the qualification of a director which requires the ownership of a block of stock of not less than $2,000 in amount.

I have not given this any study, I am frank to say, but as I read it, it occurred to me that that is going to deprive from membership on the board a good many worthy, efficient, and competent retired farmers, or business and professional men who give unselfish service on these boards, and it may work a hardship to some unit banks, particularly the smaller ones that may elect to come in under the terms of the section.

I wonder if we cannot have a statement from some member of the committee justifying the fixing of that figure at $2,000. Perhaps it might be well to fix the requirement at $1,000, or perhaps even at $500. A small unit of $500 block of stock in a bank with $50,000, or even with $20,000, capital would insure the genuine interest of the director and would temper justice with mercy. I should like to hear from some member of the committee.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that that is the existing law, but it would take a few minutes for me to look it up.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say that the existing law places the requirement at the sum of $1,000. This provision increases it to $2,000. It is simply an additional safeguard thrown around the banks in the interest of the safety of depositors and the public.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with these statements, and I believe the committee should have a chance to express itself. I begin to believe this is truly important. I therefore offer this amendment:

Page 28, line 25, strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the chairman for refreshing my memory and disclosing that this is a change. Had I noticed it in the committee, I should have favored a larger amount. There is much complaint and criticism these days of men who are members of boards of directors of corporations conducting large enterprises whose own share and risk in the concern are very small. They are put on the board for publicity purposes. Their names are used to attract investments by leading investors to think that the directors have really a substantial interest in the corporation. I trust the gentleman will not press his amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. I understood that the reason for the $2,000 limit was to eliminate the double liability on the stock ownership; that is, that this should take its place. In other words the liability on the stock would be eliminated, but that the amount of stock to be owned must be $2,000.

Mr. LUCE. That was in part the reason, but it would not, of course, apply if a man were a large stockholder.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in favor of the amendment. I do so with considerable trepidation, because I have no knowledge on this subject, but if this is to apply to national banks with a capitalization of $25,000 or $50,000, then I think the $2,000 should be reduced to $1,000. One thousand dollars would be a large share in the capital stock of a bank of $25,000 or $50,000. As far as the big banks are concerned, with millions of dollars of capital, the question of whether it is $1,000 or $5,000 is immaterial. It does not affect the big banks. They should not be permitted to go on as directors unless they have a much larger sum than $2,000. However, if they are going to continue the small banks, I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota to reduce it to $1,000 should be agreed to. I should like to hear from the committee further.

Mr. KVALE. Is it not true that this limitation will operate only to restrict and limit the qualifications for the directors of small banks?

Mr. FISH. I think it will. Only within the last week I had a request in respect to the reorganization of a national bank. They have a very good citizen whom they want to put on as a director. He has not even $1,000 of stock. Raising it to $2,000 would make it difficult for a small institution, and of course this does not apply to big institutions.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; but I am not a specialist on this matter.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does not the gentleman recognize that this is just another section of the bill the purpose of which is to embarrass small banks to make it impossible to operate them?

Mr. FISH. I am not going into that issue. My contention is that if we are going to keep the small banks we should not make it difficult for them to get a proper board of directors. If you have a capitalization of $25,000, then I think a qualification of $2,000 in stock is too high a percentage. If you are going to wipe them out, that is another matter. I do not want to discuss that.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KVALE) there were—ayes 27, noes 73.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. All those in favor of ordering tellers will rise. [After a pause.] Not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. The provisions of section 5151 of the Revised Statutes and section 23 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 63 and 64) (imposing liability upon shareholders in national banking associations in addition to the amount invested in shares), shall not apply to hold any shareholder in any national banking association individually responsible in any amounts in excess of the amount invested in shares in such association, on account of any shares acquired by him after the date of enactment of this title.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Why should any difference be made in the liability of the stock, as to whether I owned it previously or acquired it after the passage of this act?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose is not to affect existing contractual relationships. Any holder of shares in an existing institution subscribed for those shares under a law which imposes what we commonly call double liability upon stockholders. In removing that liability, of course, it is desirable that we do not disturb any contractual obligation now in existence, but that it be made applicable to future ownership, or ownership acquired in the future.

Mr. SNELL. But when I subscribed for shares of stock or deposited my money in a bank, I did not have any guaranty. We are going to have a Government guaranty of deposits. I can see no reason why you should not treat stockholders exactly the same. Under this law the next day after it goes into effect, if I own any bank stock, I am going to sell it and buy some other man's bank stock.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, there are some difficulties in adjustments that will follow this legislation, but I do not think they are serious. It seems to me they will be worked out without much harm to anybody. Of course, the practical thing is just as suggested by the gentleman: Those who hold stock upon which they are now liable for additional assessments will, of course, undertake to readjust their holdings so as to come within the provisions of the new statute, which of course fits in with the deposit guaranty or insurance plan. This plan obviates the necessity for protection of depositors in the way of additional liability upon stock.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is stating that that is what will be done, and it probably will be done. Why would it not be better in framing this law to cut out these last two lines and let it apply to everyone equally?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not seriously averse to the suggestion the gentleman has made. Probably it is constructive.

Mr. SNELL. I should like to offer the amendment, if the gentleman will accept it.

Mr. STEAGALL. It seems to me that the orderly way in which to go about making this change is to provide that it shall apply to shares hereafter acquired. I think the difficulties to which the gentleman refers will be very easily adjusted.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman admits my point, and he says, "I know people will do it." I do not happen to be much of a bank stockholder; but if I were, I would sell my stock the next day and buy some other man's stock.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, there will be adjustments along the line which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. SNELL. Unless that is so, why is it not better, when we are drafting this bill to guarantee deposits, to cut it out of the bill? There is no reason for having a double assessment.

Mr. STEAGALL. To be frank, I wrote that section of this bill, employing the language of the original statute. What we sought to do was to avoid interference with any contractual relationships existing because of the liability imposed at the time stock now outstanding was purchased.

Mr. SNELL. But we are doing away with the liability need, because we are guaranteeing the deposits.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman that as the bill is now drawn, and as it will probably be enacted, it only provides for the guaranty of deposits in full which do not exceed $10,000. Above that amount the insurance is partial.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. As to deposits between $10,000 and $50,000 in amount, the insurance is 75 percent; and on any deposit above $50,000 the amount of the excess insured is 50 percent.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that; but there is no sense in having two different kinds of stockholders, one a favored class and another a special class with double liability. It does not seem to me that the fundamental principle carried in the bill is right.

Mr. STEAGALL. I really think the better way to go about this change in the law is to make it apply to transactions in the future in order to avoid any legal controversy. Otherwise the question of disturbing contractual relations may arise, and that was the thought underlying the preparation of the bill as it reads.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I should like to call attention to the fact that his suggestion proposes relieving present stockholders in banks of the total amount of double liability, whereas the amendment as it is now in the bill provides single liability on new stockholders only. I want to point out the practical impossibility of the operation, or the confusion that will result from the provision in the bill. For instance, bank stocks that are dealt in on exchanges, and many of them are. The exchanges will have two prices on the same stock at all times. The one which carries double liability will have a lower price, and the one that has single liability will have a higher price. It tends to all kinds of confusion.

Mr. SNELL. How can they have double liability, because every time you change stockholders he escapes liability?

Mr. McFADDEN. But when he trades, he is trading with different-price stock, because his stock that carries double liability will not be worth as much as that carrying single liability. All the double-liability holders will be getting rid of their stock.

Mr. SNELL. But when you buy it, it will be worth just as much to you. Of course, you are a new stockholder.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The liability does not attach on the stock, but merely after the stock is transferred, so that if I have 100 shares of stock and you have 100 and we change about, you have acquired that particular stock at a later date and the double liability does not attach. It does not attach upon the stock, but, according to this provision, as soon as that stock is transferred, the double liability is removed.

Mr. McFADDEN. There will be thousands of shares of bank stock that will not be exchanged, and the double liability will prevail.

Mr. BOILEAU. But they know what it is; and when they exchange it for the other, they will not have the double liability.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Might it not do this, unless we do accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, might it not force many banks to go into a reorganization plan to give up the old stock and issue new stock for the exact purpose of evading this double liability and coming under this section of this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. The plan suggested, we think, is the simple way of doing it. I may say to the gentleman I have no stubborn view as to the method by which this change may be accomplished. There will be another day for consideration of this bill during which the matter may be reviewed, and, if it can be worked out in a more lawyer-like way, I shall be very glad to go along with the effort.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. TABER. I think the gentleman from Alabama seems to be afraid that if something of this character is not in it, some of the stockholders of banks already in liquidation might be released.

Would it not be better to have the limitation applied simply to those banks which are closed at the date of the passage of this act? In this way the situation is covered.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. Chairman, I have not as yet been satisfied in my own mind that there is any justification for changing our entire banking system so far as the issuance of bank stock is concerned.

In my opinion a good case has not been made out here for the removal of the double-liability feature from bank stock. State banks have been operating upon this same system, and all the States of the Union still have the double-liability feature on bank stocks. I do not see any reason why stock issued by Federal banks should have this liability taken from them.

A man who is engaged in the banking business in normal times receives good dividends. This has been so at least until just recently. Bank stocks have been good business investments. The bankers of this country have received good dividends from their stock, and I feel, in view of the fact they have the active and actual management of the banks, they should be subject to this double liability. They are handling the deposits of the great masses of the people who have nothing whatsoever to say about the management of the banks. Those men who have stock in the bank are largely responsible for its management, and I believe it is not unfair to have double liability attached to bank stock.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. LAMBETH. Does the gentleman think the average stockholder has much to do with the management of a bank?

Mr. BOILEAU. I may say to the gentleman that out in the Middle West the stockholder is going to have much to say about management because this bill provides that in order to qualify as a director a man must have $2,000 worth of stock. This means that in many of the small national banks capitalized at $25,000, 4, 5, or 6 men are going to hold all the stock and be the directors, because a man who has only $100 worth of stock, or $200 or $300 worth of stock, cannot be a director. Thus the men who own the stock will actually be the directors of these banks, and I submit that if they are going to have the authority of complete management of the bank it is not unjust to submit them to double liability, because in the banking business there should not be anything of a speculative nature. The banker deals in dollars. The banker does not buy something and take the chance of having to dispose of it at a smaller price. It is true a banker now and then will make a bad investment, but if he makes a bad investment there is no reason why he should be relieved entirely of the responsibility.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think the gentleman's proposition is a sound one. The bankers of the country are receiving $40,000,000,000 and more of the depositors' money, and the average depositor does not know anything about the operation of banks.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is absolutely correct. I believe we should continue the policy we have followed up to this time. We should couple double liability of bank stocks with the guaranty of deposits that is written into this bill. Then we shall have gone a long ways toward better banking and honest banking in this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, experience has shown that creditors and depositors of banks realize only about 17 percent upon the liability of stockholders upon shares held in banks that are liquidated.

This is a situation that frequently develops:

Stockholders who own the larger portion of shares and who are officers in a bank have all the necessary facilities for keeping fully informed as to the condition of the bank and what is involved in the liability imposed upon the shares held by them.

Many citizens of the community who invest in the shares of banking institutions in response out of public spirit are sometimes without the information that officers and some of the stockholders in banks have.

It has been shown in many, many instances where banks have failed that some of the stockholders and officers have foreseen developments and relieved themselves of the liability imposed upon the holders of the shares, whereas the more innocent purchasers of stock in the institution are caught unawares and made to respond to the liability which may be assessed against them in cases of insolvency.

I have known many instances where citizens died leaving shares of stock in national banks to widows and children, and it turned out that instead of having inherited an asset they had inherited a liability. I can name numerous instances within my knowledge where widows, left with scant security against want in old age, are being called upon to respond to liability upon shares of stock in national banks held by their husbands, and in some instances there is serious question in some of the States as to whether a widow can claim her homestead exemption against the liability upon such stock held by her deceased husband.

These developments in connection with bank failures in recent years have brought us to a situation where in many of the communities that have been deprived of banking facilities it is going to be impossible for a long time to induce citizens to subscribe for stock in national banks.

The provision offered here will encourage investment in national banks and bring about the organization of national banks in communities that are now deprived of banking facilities because of bank failures.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman kindly state how many millions of dollars are lost by depositors for every dollar which some widow who inherited some stock has lost?

Mr. STEAGALL. I have just stated that in practical results it has been shown that not over 17 percent is realized by depositors and creditors out of liability upon shares of the stockholders. This is what the record shows.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. STEAGALL. We are going to rise in just a moment.

Mr. McGUGIN. I withdraw the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 21, noes 73.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H.R. 5661, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

GOVERNOR OF HAWAII (H.DOC. NO. 42)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which was read and referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered printed:

To the Congress:

It is particularly necessary to select for the post of Governor of Hawaii a man of experience and vision, who will be regarded by all citizens of the islands as one who will be absolutely impartial in his decisions on matters as to which there may be a difference of local opinion. In making my choice I should like to be free to pick, either from the islands themselves or from the entire United States, the best man for this post. I request, therefore, suitable legislation temporarily suspending that part of the law which requires the Governor of Hawaii to be an actual resident of the islands.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 22, 1933.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Just before the Committee rose I objected to the vote on a motion to strike out a section of the bill on the ground there was no quorum present. Is that the unfinished business when the Committee resumes business tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. That will be the unfinished business tomorrow in the Committee.

PURCHASE OF STOCK AND BONDS OF INSURANCE COMPANIES

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report for printing in the RECORD under the rule:

House Resolution 156

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1094, an act "To provide for the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of preferred stock and/or bonds and/or debentures of insurance companies." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

OUR AMERICAN SCHOOLS

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio address by my colleague [Mr. ELLZEY] on the American Schools.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following radio address delivered by my colleague, Hon. RUSSELL ELLZEY:

It was my happy privilege for 18 years to be actively associated with a large number of Mississippi school children and patrons, and therefore I am delighted to present my views. During the 12 minutes allotted to me I shall discuss three phases, namely:

1. The past achievements of our American schools.
2. Our American schools in a crisis.
3. The future hope of our American public-school system.

Approximately a century ago this Nation conceived the idea of offering education to the public, and this new ideal was clearly based on the principle of American free democracy. In the practical application of this system of educating the masses, necessarily the cost was transferred from the individual to the community. It awakened a new interest among citizens and offered hope to the stalwart taxpayer of limited means.

As a result of this growing interest, the smallest hamlets of this Nation have erected splendid school buildings. Millions of dollars have been expended by the taxpayers for such school equipment as science laboratories, libraries, modern classroom fixtures, and playgrounds. These splendid school plants are today the pride of the American communities and represent the honest efforts of our taxpayers to educate the children of the country.

While school plants were being constructed and equipped, marked progress was being made in developing a splendid personnel in the teaching profession. Teachers have spent millions of dollars in preparation for the work of this profession, always with the hope of rendering efficient service to the youth of America. No fair-minded American will charge that teachers hoard money, but, on the contrary, they contribute most generously to the community enterprises. They are interested in the spiritual, social, and economic development of that community where they reside—many of them being taxpayers and home owners. In this day of inspection of public institutions, when audits of banks, insurance companies, railroads, finance corporations, and industry are being made, the taxpayers of America, with appreciation, will find honest and efficient administration of school systems. These school officials have kept faith with the people and are disciples of rigid honesty.

Thousands of teachers during this great crisis have continued their services, even when the community was unable to pay their salaries for several months. Today one State owes her teachers $7,000,000, representing salaries long since past due. In one city there are 2,278 teachers who have been unable to meet payments on $7,800,567 worth of life insurance, 759 were unable to meet payments on homes, and 500 were actually assisted by a charitable foundation. Regardless of such conditions, the patriotic teachers have continued their services in the hope that the children of America might not suffer.

Each year there is mobilized through our American schools approximately 25,000,000 children. With a splendid personnel of teachers, and with modern school equipment, most remarkable results have been obtained in developing the youth of this country. Emphasis is given to subject matter, and to a fine program of physical development. The spiritual growth is most encouraging to the mothers and fathers. Those fine virtues of teamwork, self-respect, honesty, and fair play are emphasized in school programs. The Nation owes a lasting debt of gratitude to the American schools for instilling into the hearts of our youth a spirit of patriotism. In 1917, when America entered the greatest conflict in history, from our American schools the very flower of youth marched forth to war. Without fear of contradiction, I contend they will always constitute an important part of our national defense.

Every normal community of this Nation rejoices at the accomplishments of our public-school system. Yet, today, the very existence of our schools is threatened because of prevailing economic conditions. With so many heavy financial losses in bonds, bank deposits, stocks and foreclosures of mortgages on homes, there remains for the average taxpayer only one hope for his child, and that is an education at public expense.

Briefly I shall submit to you some reasons for the threatened collapse of the public-school system. Recently the national survey of school finance found that one half of the States of the Nation obtain 90 percent of financial support for schools from a general property tax and five sixths of the States receive 80 percent revenue from property tax.

During this great economic crisis two factors must be considered in planning school budgets. First, serious thought must be given to the tremendous shrinkage in the assessed valuation of property, necessarily resulting in decreased tax returns. Secondly, officials must remember that the earning power of the American citizen has so decreased, because of low commodity prices, lower wages, unemployment, and bank closures, that a surprisingly large number of patriotic and honest taxpayers have been unable to pay taxes. Remember that these same factors threatened, and in many cases have destroyed, other American institutions within the last 2 years. In analyzing this question, one so vital to the hearts of all Americans, let us consider very frankly what has happened. When financial institutions saw dangers ahead their leaders came to the Federal Government and successfully demanded financial assistance. The Government has extended loans, millions of dollars, to banks, insurance and railroad companies, and other public corporations. Furthermore, private industry is now turning to the Federal Government and making insistent demands for financial assistance through the Federal Treasury. I merely mention these convincing facts to clearly show you that other public and private institutions have had to face a threatened collapse, and that the school system is no exception to a general rule.

With "our public schools" threatened for lack of financial support, what is the hope for the future? For your consideration, ladies and gentlemen, I submit the following:

I. ECONOMY

1. Public-school officials will continue to effect every safe economy commensurate with efficiency and American ideals. In this connection let us not forget that drastic economies have already been made in many States. For instance, there are counties in the States of Arkansas, Florida, Kansas, Kentucky, Mississippi, Tennessee, Washington, Michigan, Missouri, New Mexico, South Dakota, and Wyoming where the average teachers' salaries have been reduced 40 percent and yet at the peak of prosperity the average wage of teachers was only $29 per week.

2. Every service in the school system that has outlived its usefulness must be eliminated.

3. Consideration must be given to a unified school system, at least within the individual State, to eliminate duplication in school costs.

II. STATE SUPPORT

Hitherto the economic ability of the individual school district has determined the program of education. Even during the most prosperous period of this Nation, in some States there existed certain areas which offered very limited educational advantages to the public. In those sections where wealth has been concentrated, superior advantages are available. Therefore, I am firmly convinced that each State, in its State financial budget, should make provisions for public education of all sections of that State.

III. FEDERAL SUPPORT

The Federal Government owes the same protection to all sections of the Nation. Likewise, each American child is entitled to an equal opportunity in life. Therefore, I am firmly convinced that the Federal Government should share its part in the cost of public education.

For several years much of the Nation's wealth has been concentrated in financial centers, but each section of the Nation has contributed. Therefore, it is eminently logical that the financial centers should help bear the public costs to society of all sections of the Nation, and of foremost importance among these is public education.

Ladies and gentlemen, you will be interested in knowing that the national government of several European countries contribute very generously to the public education of their children. For instance, the percentage of the government budget for education in Denmark is 20 percent; Belgium, 13 percent; Germany, 18.3 percent; Norway, 14.9 percent; Rumania, 17 percent; Sweden, 17.1 percent; Switzerland, 24.6 percent. Yet, in the greatest Nation on earth—America—only four tenths of 1 percent goes for public education.

Last year the English Government appropriated for educational purposes £51,000,000, or approximately $202,470,000, while our Federal Budget appropriated for education only $17,000,000. Please consider the very small amount of Federal appropriations—$17,000,000—for education in comparison with appropriations within recent years for other purposes.

The Editorial Research Reports show Federal subsidies to shipping and aviation for a 10-year period—$30,000,000 per year. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1932 showed, in part, the following appropriations, viz:

Agricultural experiment stations.....	$4,356,591.65
Cooperative agricultural extension work.....	8,649,649.90
Forest fire.....	1,573,193.50
Cooperative construction of rural post roads.....	127,367,119.74

I submit to you that no Federal appropriation would reach the masses of the people as would Federal support of public education—whereas often in the past millions of dollars of Federal funds have benefited only special groups of American citizens.

In conclusion, may I bespeak your most careful consideration of our American schools—especially at a time when these splendid institutions need the cooperation and loyal support of every American citizen. Frankly, I believe that each State should assume a large portion of the financial responsibility of educating the children of every section of that State. The Federal Government should contribute to public education its just share of the cost to the end that every worthy child of the greatest Nation on earth may have a golden opportunity of preparing for the walks of life and becoming a constructive builder for society as a whole. Above all, let us not be swept off our feet by a determined effort of a very few, who, under the guise of economy, would literally destroy our American schools. In this great crisis, let me appeal to taxpayers, teachers, and the American youth to carry on that fine type of service for society which has always been characteristics of our American schools!

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—H.R. 5480

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be permitted to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 5480, for 5 legislative days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, member banks of the Federal Reserve System number about 6,900, with aggregate resources of about $30,000,000,000. Of these about 6,100 are national banks and 800 are State banks, which could escape the provisions of this bill by withdrawing from the system.

There are about 11,800 nonmember banks, with aggregate resources of about $20,000,000,000. These would not be affected by the bill, except as they might become member banks or branches of member banks.

I. BRANCH BANKING

A. Provisions of the bill, sections 22, 17, and 5-b

First. Section 22 provides that national banks having a capital of $500,000 or more may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, establish branches at any point within the State in which they are located, provided that this is permitted by the laws of that State and subject to them. (The States in which State-wide branch banking is expressly allowed by law are Arizona, California, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, and Virginia. In 16 other States branch banking is permitted under certain restrictions or within certain limited areas. Branch banking is prohibited in 18 States and in 5 there is no law regarding the subject.) An exception is made in States having a population of less than 1,000,000 and no city exceeding 100,000, where the minimum capital requirement is reduced to $250,000. Further, the aggregate capital of a national bank and all of its branches must not be less than the capital required for as many national banks in the places in which they are located.

Capital requirements for the establishment of national banks are fixed by section 17 as follows:

In towns of less than 6,000 population.....	$50,000
In towns of less than 50,000 population.....	100,000
In towns of more than 50,000 population.....	200,000

Section 5 (b) authorizes State member banks to establish branches under the same conditions as apply to national banks.

B. Supporting arguments, with comments

First. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been obliged to make loans to about 5,000 banks which were in a critical condition. Much of this was used for the purpose of paying off loans from metropolitan correspondent banks. It has not eradicated the fundamental weaknesses of many of these banks, however, nor eliminated the probability of many bank failures during the near future. Last January Senator GLASS stated that he had reliable information as to the ultimate failure of at least 470 banks unless they are recapitalized or taken over by stronger institutions. The number of loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation indicate that this conservative figure probably represents a small proportion of the banks that are insecure.

With local capital for refinancing these banks available only in very rare cases, a serious emergency exists unless the machinery is created permitting strong institutions to take these unsound banks over. The consequences of continued bank failures are not confined to the further freezing of assets and forced liquidation of loans but will also result in a panic psychology which would seriously endanger many banks that are otherwise secure.

Second. Another emergency to be met results from the closing of 10,500 banks since 1920—more than a third of the then existing banks. This has left literally thousands of communities entirely devoid of banking facilities. Because of the absence of local capital for reorganizing these banks and the prohibitions placed upon branch banking there is a virtual economic paralysis in many sections which have suffered. Under the provisions of the bill strong metropolitan banks would be quick to meet this need and take a long step toward the revival of local business.

Third. The following figures reveal the nature of the banks which have suffered most heavily and indicate the direction of the steps necessary to remedy these conditions:

About 10,500 banks with $5,000,000,000 deposits failed during 1921-32. Eighty percent of these were nonmember banks with average deposits of only $350,000; 90 percent of these were situated in towns of less than 25,000 people; 60 percent were in towns of less than 1,000; 59 percent had capital of less than $25,000; one fourth of 1 percent only had capital of more than $1,000,000; 85 percent were State banks; 70 percent of the Reconstruction Finance loans were to State banks.

The following table shows that during a period of relative general prosperity the small banks, termed "one-crop banks" by Senator GLASS, are likely to have a high mortality. As economic conditions grow worse, the average size of failures increases but does not reach the level of the average bank in the larger towns and cities:

	Number of banks failed	Average deposits
1921-28.....	5,000	$297,400
1929.....	642	365,300
1930.....	1,345	642,900
1931.....	2,298	736,000

Internal causes generally assigned these failures are undercapitalization, lack of diversification and bad management, in order of importance. The first two of these will be obviously removed by consolidation with larger institutions. The third also, presumably, will be largely eliminated by the fact that large banks can better afford the services of the more skilled and experienced bankers.

Fourth. The external causes for the failure of so many local unit banks are the depression in agriculture during the period and—of fundamental though less immediate significance—the migration of opportunity for profitable banking operations toward the metropolitan centers. The former was manifested wherever a community largely dependent upon a single crop was adversely affected by a poor yield or an unfavorable market. Such a situation would bring about heavy withdrawals simultaneously with the freezing of the banks' assets.

The increased use of automobiles and other new social and economic trends of the past decade have set in motion a geographical integration of business. Local enterprises have merged with regional or State-wide corporations; the chain stores and public utilities which now serve the small towns generally carry only working balances in the small town; local depositors, with a wider shopping range, now seek the relative security afforded by the banks in the larger cities; as business units grow larger, loan requirements exceed what the small banker can lend under the restrictions of the National Banking Act (loans to single borrowers not to exceed 10 percent of capital and surplus). As a partial result of the reduction of opportunities for placing funds profitably in local enterprise, the unit banker has therefore been tempted to try some degree of diversification by purchasing securities with a high yield.

Thus the original conception of unit banking, which has been so nurtured to the exclusion of branch banking—that the bank's function is to finance local enterprise with local capital—has been gradually destroyed by several irresistible trends, and the banks themselves are being destroyed with it.

Fifth. Unit banking in its present state of collapse in the United States contrasts with the branch banking practiced in every important country today. During the present economic depression bank failures abroad have been few.

Among the countries where great branch-banking systems have long and successfully performed the functions of deposit and commercial banking are Scotland, England, and Canada. In Scotland, where branch banking has been practiced since the eighteenth century, there has never been a failure resulting in loss to note holders or depositors. In England, which a century ago was largely served by independent banks similar to ours, there are now only 16 chartered banks with 8,000 branches. There also depositors have suffered no losses in recent times.

Most interesting for the present purpose, however, is the record of branch banking in Canada, which is adjacent and economically and geographically similar to the portion of our country which has suffered most from bank failures. Branch banking existed there at the time of the Confederation in 1867, and in 1871 was laid the legislative foundation of the present system. Since then Canadian banking has been concentrated into 11 banks operating more than 4,000 branches (loan-and-trust companies excepted). During that period there have been 35 consolidations, of which the majority were after 1900, and 26 failures, of which the majority were prior to that date. Of these failures only nine involved loss to noteholders or depositors, and the aggregate of such losses during the 65 years was only $13,500,000. There have been no insolvencies since 1923.

In addition to the conclusions to be drawn from this remarkable record, Canadian experience with branch banking affords refutations of several of the arguments advanced by the opponents of branch banking. It disproves the assertion that branch banking tends toward monopoly, excluding the benefits of competition. It shows that the system does not drain money into the cities to the detriment of local development. There is no evidence of over-emphasis of collateral security as against progressive "character" loans. The record shows a distribution rather than centralization of credit. Although it is asserted the United States has too many banks, Canada enjoys more banking offices and more bank employees per capita than the United States. On the positive side, branch banking in Canada has achieved three things which must be attempted in any reform of American banking: Adequate capitalization, diversification of loans, and low overhead costs for rural banking accommodation. (These points will be further touched upon separately.)

Sixth. Contrary to the assertions of many opponents of branch banking, it is not a system alien to the United States and incompatible with its individualistic traditions. The provisions of the Glass bill by which it is to be limited to State-wide activities constitute a safeguard against the dreaded financial autocracy which, in fact, is more likely to become a reality under present laws. By prohibiting State-wide branch banking we have, in fact, encouraged interstate group banking.

In 1848 branch banking was practiced in half of our States, particularly those of the South, where strong systems grew and prospered until the Civil War. The early legislative inhibitions were not aimed at branch banking itself but at the abuses of note issuance and of "wildcat banking." The Civil War practically wiped out branch banking in the South, and the National Bank Act and prohibitive taxation of note issues of State banks brought about the conversion of most State branch banks into national unit banks. Thereafter there was no important change in banking law nor much development of branch banking in the national system until 1900. State branch banking has grown rapidly in some States during the last 30 years, and national branch banking has grown considerably as the result of the Consolidation Act of 1918 and the city-wide provisions of the McFadden Act of 1927.

Among the several States in which branch banking has reached a high degree of development under State charters or in which State branch systems have been converted into national banks, California is outstanding and offers the best illustration of the advantages of this type of banking. Here, in 1930, 63 out of 496 banks operated 826 branches. Of these 500 were operated by two banks—one of which had become a national bank, the other was under State charter—both owned by a single holding company. The record of banking in this State, of which two thirds of the banking offices are branches, shows a lower rate of suspensions and a higher percentage of profits than the average for the country. The State is not overbanked, but has adequate facilities which compete keenly in the agricultural and industrial development of the State.

State-wide branch banking, therefore, is neither new nor untried in the United States.

Seventh. Branch banking as authorized by the Glass bill is not only safer because of its capital strength but also because of the diversification it will permit. The "one-crop bank" is at the mercy of local conditions, with all its eggs in one basket, while the bank whose operations are regional may diversify their loans both as to borrowers' lines of business and as to liquidity. The rural bank generally lends to the farmer for 9-month periods. The city bank can take 90-day negotiable paper from merchants and shorter loans from industries. The branch bank, covering a region instead of a locality, can vary its investments to compensate for seasonal fluctuations or losses in one or more type of loans.

Eighth. Branch banking can supply loanable capital from the centers of population to outposts where credit needs are greater than money for deposits. In this sense a bank should function, like a railway, regionally and not locally. This mobility of capital will tend to equalize interest rates, which are at present unfavorable to the farmer. It is the frequent practice of banks establishing branches in agricultural or newly developed localities to take a moderate loss over a certain period while it builds up the community financially. This progressive policy is, of course, an impossibility for a unit bank financed by local funds. Moreover, the Bank of Italy in California and most of the Canadian branch systems frequently lend more money to rural localities than they receive in deposits from them, demonstrating again the relative shortcomings of the unit bank as a benefactor to local enterprise.

Ninth. The foregoing is a partial refutation of the assertion that branch banking will not only drain off deposits from small communities for use in the cities but that it will place the banking facilities of rural towns in the hands of officials who are not familiar or sympathetic with their needs. This popular argument does not bear examination. In the first place, it is unlikely that branches will be established in places where balanced banking cannot be developed—both deposits and loans.

Second. A branch bank will seek to place its funds where they will yield the best interest, namely in the rural communities.

Third. It is a common practice to place local branches under the management of local bankers intimately acquainted with conditions.

Fourth. Local managers are generally given discretionary powers in making loans up to a certain amount. In Canada this ranges from $2,500 to $10,000. In this connection a prominent Canadian banker has stated that in the case of his bank there invariably was at the main office at least one official who was personally acquainted with any client seeking a loan of $50,000 or more, and even generally with clients seeking loans of $10,000. This condition would apply all the more to State-wide branch banking as compared with dominion-wide banking.

Fifth. Local managers, as with managers of chain stores, will make every effort, for their own advancement, to lend as much money as is consistent with sound principles.

"Character loans" therefore, may be made under branch banking as readily as under unit banking, except for unsound loans made under the pressure of personal friendship.

A secondary point under this heading is the fact that, when a unit bank fails, it injures most those whom it was especially intended to help—the man who borrows on character instead of collateral. In this case a borrower who may be a good risk and a constructive force in the community will be rendered helpless by suits resulting from the forced liquidation of the bank's assets.

Tenth. It is asserted that branch banking will further centralize credit and produce a financial autocracy contrary to the public interest. Yet under our present laws 50 percent of the banking business is conducted by only 0.5 percent of our banks, while the other 99.5 percent of our banks handle the remaining 50 percent. This concentration is largely the result of the restrictions placed upon State-wide branch banking, which have driven many industries seeking large loans to money centers in other States. Under the provisions of the Glass bill the capital resources within States will tend to concentrate and to become available for financing the business of that State. This would actually tend toward decentralization.

Eleventh. I have already given, paragraph 3, the average deposits of the banks which have failed during the last decade, demonstrating the insecurity of the small banks, owing partly to under capitalization and bad management. The following table further shows the percentage of small banks which reported a loss during the period 1926–30, in terms of their volume of loans and discounts:

Percent lost money
Banks with loans and discounts less than $150,000.....	35
$150,000 to $250,000.....	28
$250,000 to $500,000.....	20.6
$500,000 to $750,000.....	14.6
$750,000 to $1,000,000.....	13.2

The smaller banks show the higher percentage of losses as well as failures. Here again becomes apparent one of the fundamental disadvantages of the small unit bank—its higher percentage of overhead and smaller margin for reserve. The magazine Fortune gives, in this connection, a hypothetical income and expense account for a small bank with $100,000 capital and $1,000,000 deposits:

Earnings:
Discounts and interest on investments.....	$56,000
From various other sources.....	6,000
	$62,000
Expenses:
Interest on deposits.....	28,000
Taxes.....	3,000
Other running expenses.....	7,000
Losses on bad loans.....	6,000
Dividends at 6 percent.....	6,000
	50,000
Left for salaries and reserves.....	12,000

If this rough calculation approximates the actual figures of a representative bank of this type, it is evident that there is little left to spend for banking brains and experience and none for building up a reserve. Under adverse circumstances the bank will lose money and eventually fail.

As a branch, however, it would be under the supervision of presumably skillful and experienced bankers. As to reserves, the resources of the parent institution, protected by diversification, are behind the small branch. For these reasons, therefore, the branch does not have to present as substantial a front as the unit bank designed to inspire the confidence of its depositors. Branch banking, as in rural Canada, may be done in simple quarters which the unit bank does not dare to use.

Twelfth. Branch banking would tend to increase both banking facilities and employment, rather than to decrease them, if we may judge by comparison with Canada. In the United States there are about 20,000 banks and 3,500 branches, or 1 banking office for every 5,000 persons, while in Canada there are 11 banks with 4,000 banking offices, or 1 to each 2,500 inhabitants. Should branch banking in this country bring the number of banking facilities up to the Canadian average, we would have 11,500 more than at present, employing, at 3 persons each, 34,500 persons.

Although the United States was admittedly overbanked in 1920, an increase of banking offices not separately incorporated is desirable. There are 3,165 urban places in the United States, of which at least 2,000 should have more than one banking office; there are 13,433 incorporated places in the rural districts; and outside of these 16,598 towns and villages lives 36.4 percent of our population.

Thirteenth. Other sections of the Glass bill deal with chain and group banking through holding company affiliates controlling member banks. Many such groups, including National and State member banks, have been formed throughout the country in order to realize some of the advantages of branch banking while circumventing the prohibitions in the National Bank Act. In 1911 Solicitor General Lehmann, with Attorney General Wickersham concurring, declared the establishment of such chains or groups to be illegal. This decision was never applied, however, nor brought to light until recently.

Group bankers themselves welcome branch-banking legislation by which they could simplify their organizations and afford their depositors more security than they now enjoy in most of these extralegal unsupervised organizations. Although many of them have been operated on sound and conservative principles, others have represented a menace to the public by their ability to conceal their true condition from both State and National examination.

Fourteenth. Unit banks are described as "very, very limited in scope * * * and monopolistic in their area." Senator GLASS attributes many of the banking evils to the "pawnshop" banks in the country districts where, free from the competition of branches of sound institutions, they monopolize the banking business of the area and involve its assets in failure as soon as difficulties arise.

Branch banking therefore would not tend toward monopoly, as frequently charged, but would rebuild the banking system on a sound competitive basis. Strong local institutions adequately serving their communities would be protected by the Comptroller of the Currency, whose consent is necessary for the establishment of branches. But where adequate banking facilities are lacking, healthy competition between branch systems would serve best the public interest. At present many unit banks have joined in clearing-house arrangements designed to curb competition and monopolistic in their intent. These same combinations would serve to protect unit banks from dangerous branch competition in the same manner as independent grocers have successfully organized to compete with the chain stores on equal footing. In France closely knit associations of local banks have been successful against branch-bank competition.

Fifteenth. The frequent assertion that branch banking is supported by the "big interests" of New York for their own profit is contrary to fact. The strongest supporters of this measure have been men representing all types of business except banking. The strongest opposition has come from bankers themselves, as witnessed by the hostility of the American Bankers' Association. Wall Street, by which is generally understood the "big interests", has observed a general neutrality in the matter. Strong advocacy would tend to antagonize the correspondents of New York banks. And open opposition would run counter to the judgment of New York bankers as to the best course for reorganizing national banking. New York banks would to some extent lose importance as the result of State-wide branch banking, because much more financing would be handled within the various States which now bring their banking business to New York. Another reason for the noncommittal attitude of New York is the fact that the large banks there would, in order to maintain their prestige in New York State, be obliged to undertake the expenses and risks of opening branches throughout the State—a course which would not be particularly desirable to them.

Sixteenth. Prior to the amendment which limited the application of section 22 to the States in which branch banking is already permitted, it was opposed on the grounds that it would be an unconstitutional usurpation of State rights to impose branch banking upon States prohibiting it to their State chartered banks. This general issue has frequently been before the Supreme Court. Its several decisions in the matter have established beyond question the fact that Congress, having established a national banking system under its constitutional powers, may take any measure it determines necessary to preserve it. (Some of the outstanding cases are McCulloch v. Maryland, Osborn v. Bank of the United States, Farmers and Mechanics National Bank v. Dearing.)

It is also established that wherever Federal legislation passed by Congress in exercise of its constitutional faculties shall conflict with State laws, the former shall be the law of the land and shall be binding upon the States. (Casey v. Gall, Davis v. Elmira Savings Bank, and others.) Opponents of branch banking erroneously refer to the Supreme Court decision in First National Bank in St. Louis v. Missouri as evidence of the unconstitutionality of section 20. In this decision the jurisdiction of State courts in enforcing State branch-banking prohibitions against a national bank was sustained. The national bank in question, however, had established a branch without the authority of any permissive Federal law or authorization by the Comptroller of the Currency. The case clearly indicates, however, that had there been a Federal statute authorizing branch banking, the laws of the State would not have applied.

A recent opinion written by Walter Wyatt, counsel for the Federal Reserve Board, states that the national bank system and the Federal Reserve Act having been constitutional Congress has the power to modify these to preserve their purposes. Second, that congressional power over the national currency extends over all modification of the Federal Reserve System. Third, that impending bank failures jeopardize interstate commerce, and that Congress may, therefore, take any steps it deems necessary to protect it.

C. The negative arguments, with comments

First. The branch-banking provisions of the Glass bill were drafted under the misconception that the banking disasters of recent years have been due to the fundamental weakness of unit banking as a system merely because we happened to have unit banking at the time. The real causes of the present banking crisis have been, first, the depression in agriculture and then the deflation following the boom in securities speculation. Both unit and branch or chain systems of banks failed prior to 1929 in the sections that were suffering economically. Both unit and branch banks failed in the cities when investment prices collapsed.

Economic conditions were a cause of banking failures, not an effect. Moreover, another cause for many banking collapses was the domination of smaller banks by their large metropolitan correspondents, which drained funds from the country districts for speculative purposes and loaded up the small bank with worthless securities. Had branch banking then been in Nation-wide practice, the same results would have ensued.

Section 22, therefore, seems to be conceived in a punitive spirit, threatening the innocent injured party, unit banking, with destruction by State-wide branch banking. It does not strike underlying factors requiring remedy.

Second. The foundation of the Federal Reserve System, upon which rests our national financial structure, is a system of independent banks serving their localities but drawing upon the elastic credit reserves of the 12 great Federal Reserve banks. The present system, with such modifications as will prevent speculation and other abuses, is capable of adjusting itself to all contingencies and effectively serving the Nation.

Branch banking, however, would tend to weaken this structure and eventually to destroy it. Experience in other nations shows that branch banking drives out unit banking. Thus we should be substituting for our present system other credit reservoirs in the form of great branch banks privately owned and operated for profit. The accommodation the local bank now receives from the Federal Reserve bank of its district under supervision in the public interest would instead be monopolized by the parent bank without recourse to the Federal Reserve.

Third. Corollary to the above point is the fact that under the unit system coordination with the money market and the automatic flow of credit in the interests of the general public is effected through the Federal Reserve System. In it are represented a wide range of diverse conditions throughout the country. Collectively its actions in providing fluidity and mobilization in times of emergency are uninfluenced by considerations of private profit. Under a branch-banking system this diversification of representation in the membership of the Federal Reserve System would be lost as the member units became larger. With effective control placed in a few hands, there would arise a prejudicial tendency for it to serve private rather than public interest.

Fourth. The common assertion that State-wide branch banking would achieve a desirable diversification of risks is fallacious. In States which rely primarily upon one or two crops, the dangers of concentrating banking business in a few large institutions are no less than the dangers of having isolated failures among independent banks. And in States where there is a great diversity of economic activity the local banker is better fitted to understand and to meet the peculiar problems of his community than is the big banker in the metropolis, who will be better acquainted with national industrial conditions.

Fifth. The present dual system of banking in the United States provides a salutary check upon illiberal or mistaken general policies to which a unified banking system under an overburdened bureaucracy would be subject. Depositors and borrowers now have a choice of the facilities they use, national or State. In a large number of cases comparative statistics show that State banks have served their communities better than national banks. In support of this Senator NORBECK, in his minority report on the Glass bill, cites the following figures:

December 1931:
State-bank deposits	$30,486,000,000
National-bank deposits	19,210,000,000
State-bank capital more than national	175,000,000
State-bank surplus more than national	1,700,000,000

March 25, 1931, to December 30, 1931: State-bank deposits decreased $3,700,000,000, or 8 percent; national-bank deposits decreased $3,100,000,000, or 13 percent. (These figures are evidently inaccurate. The percentages actually work out about 11 and 14 percent, respectively.)

In 1931 national-bank failures increased over 1930 by 154 percent; State-bank failures increased over 1930 by 60 percent.

National banks reopened in 1930	5
National banks reopened in 1931	25
State banks reopened in 1930	140
State banks reopened in 1931	250

Comment: I cite these figures not because they are convincing but because they are the only evidence offered in support of this favorite argument of the opponents of branch banking.

Sixth. Branch banking, with its nonresident management, will tend to eliminate character as an element in credit and to overemphasize collateral as the basis for loans. Comptroller Dawes asserts that under these conditions banks would "degenerate into a glorified pawnshop." These "character loans", it is asserted, have been a major factor in the progressive development of the United States. They are generally made to young and constructive men who do not have the necessary collateral security, and they depend entirely upon the local banker's intimate knowledge of the borrowers and their projects.

Comment: Among advantages character loans have been discussed, with special reference to the Canadian branch-banking practice. In Scotland, which has the oldest and one of the most comprehensive branch-banking systems, it is the well-established practice to make such loans very liberally. The Morris Plan banks in the country also successfully practice a form of character loans of the same type. In this connection two more points on this subject may be made: First, the local banker, responsible to no one but himself, is not only tempted to extend credit to personal friends irrespective of the risk involved, but he is frequently practically obliged to, against his better judgment. Under branch banking, even though the local manager may be a local man, the responsibility for such loans rests with the main office, and he is relieved of this difficulty. Second, the very borrowers who are supposed to be most benefited by liberal character loans are those to suffer most in case of the bank's failure. Lacking collateral they are rendered helpless by suit incident to the bank's liquidation.

Seventh. Advocates of branch banking frequently allude to its safety in Canada as contrasted with bank failures in the United States. Yet Canada, with natural resources nearly equal to ours, with similar climatic conditions and population, has remained relatively undeveloped. This is attributed to the unprogressiveness of branch banking, controlled from two metropolitan cities. The money actually lost to depositors in America, enormous though the sum is, is not a high price to have paid for the great national development our unit banking system has made possible. Under branch banking the flow of credit for constructive purposes would be reduced until our system might resemble Postal Savings banking—purely a deposit business.

Comment: The fallacies of this are discussed earlier. A further point to be made is the fact that the Glass bill does not contemplate branch banking on a Nation-wide scale, as in Canada, and that the comparison can be made only insofar as Canadian experience demonstrates some of the general advantages of branch banking.

Eighth. Branch banking tends to be monopolistic to an unwholesome degree.

Comment: The prohibition of branch banking has driven half of our banking business into a few institutions, thus tending toward an effective monopoly. And the small unit bank itself is intensely monopolistic in its area. State-wide branch banking, on the contrary, would decentralize credit and bring banking business back to the States in which it originates.

Ninth. Branch banking spells the ultimate ruin of the sound, independent, progressive unit bank which has long well served its locality.

Comment: While under the Glass bill the Comptroller of the Currency must approve the establishment of branches and will refuse them in communities already adequately served, at present unit banks have to meet the competition of chain and group banks established under scant supervision. Moreover, as discussed earlier, independent banks can and have joined in clearinghouse agreements for protection against competition, in much the same way as local grocers have combined.

Tenth. The common assumption that size, developed through branch banking, means strength is not supported by experience. It is vastly more dangerous, to use the branch banker's simile, to place all the eggs of a considerable region into one basket than to risk scattered unit bank failures. The failure of the Bank of the United States, for example, was greater disaster to a vast number of depositors than the failure of a number of country banks. Huge branch-bank failures have occurred in France, Germany, and Austria, unsettling international finance in their fall. Even the apparently excellent Canadian record is not conclusive proof of the greater safety of branch banking. The few losses to depositors have been achieved by ruinous assessments to the stockholders.

Moreover, a fair comparison cannot be made between the $13,500,000 lost to Canadian depositors and the five billions tied up in American banks. Bank liquidations are so slow in Canada that in 1929 the liquidations of three banks that failed in 1910, 1914, and 1923 were still reported incomplete. The last of these was the great Home Bank of Canada. Finally, the large number of consolidations in Canada is partly the result of the imminent collapse of large branch banks which had to be taken over to prevent failure. This process of attrition will eventually leave banks so few and so huge that it will be impossible to avert failures by absorption.

Eleventh. The branch-banking provisions of the Glass bill, prior to the amendment, would have been declared unconstitutional as an infringement of State rights. See First National Bank in St. Louis v. Missouri (263 U.S. 640, 1924).

Comment: The unquestionable constitutionality of such a law has been touched upon earlier.

Twelfth. Another criticism of the branch-banking provisions of the Glass bill is the opinion that it does not go far enough to cure the evils it is attacking. The diagnosis of the faults in our banking system and the points made in favor of branch banking would nearly all apply with even more force as support for a unified banking system nationalizing State banks and generally tending to bring them into larger branch-banking organization.

The opponents of branch banking answer this objection themselves by asserting that this Federal sanction of branch banking is "the camel's nose under the tent", and that it will rapidly lead to the elimination of independent banks throughout the country.

Proponents of a unified banking system, including Mr. Glass, consider this a far-from-sufficient measure to strengthen and perfect our banking system. It admittedly does not go to the root of the evil—duality—by which we have 50 different sets of banking laws instead of 1. Types of banking which are successful in some States, under excellent supervision, are disastrous in others. Group- and chain-banking systems, which have become important in our financial life, may easily elude examination by shifting paper in their portfolios from National to State banks or from one State to another. And only by nationalizing banks will it be possible to do away with such fatal laws as fixing capital requirements as low as $5,000.

II—DIVORCE OF INVESTMENT BANKING AND SECURITY AFFILIATES

A. The provisions of the bill

First. Section 9 seeks to prevent the use of Federal Reserve credit for speculative purposes by providing that loans to member banks shall become immediately due if, after warning, borrowing members increase, during the life of the loans, the amount of loans outstanding secured by investment securities or by the notes of investment houses. As further penalty such member banks would remain ineligible for credit during a period to be determined by the Federal Reserve Board.

Section 3-a. Federal Reserve banks shall report to the Board instances of member banks making undue use of credit for speculation in securities. Board may, after hearing, suspend such bank from use of credit facilities of Federal Reserve System.

Second. Section 16 prohibits national banks from underwriting or dealing in investment securities except upon order, and places the following restrictions upon the purchase of securities for own account:

National banks may not purchase for own account and hold more than 10 percent of the issue of any one obligor—unless the issue does not exceed $100,000—nor may such purchase exceed 50 percent of the bank's capital stock.

The total investments outstanding of any one obligor that may be purchased and held after this section takes effect shall not exceed 15 percent of the bank's capital and 25 percent of its surplus.

This section shall take effect 2 years after the enactment of the bill.

Last year, when this was under consideration, critics of the bill termed it extremely deflationary by requiring liquidation of bank's security holdings. Senator GLASS, however, insisted that its application was in futuro and would not affect bank's present portfolios but only purchases after enactment.

By investment securities under this section shall be meant bonds, notes, and debentures; the purchase of stocks is not permitted. Exception to this is made in the case of stock in a safety-deposit company, which may be purchased to the extent of 15 percent of the bank's capital and surplus.

The obligations of the United States, and of its political subdivisions, and those issued under the Federal Farm Loan Act, are excepted from all of the above limitations. Section 5 (b) applies these restrictions also to State member banks.

Section 10 prohibits "loans for the account of others" made on security collateral.

Third. Section 18 requires the divorce of security affiliates within 2 years. At the end of that period no certificates representing stock in any national banks shall represent stock in any other corporation except a member bank, nor shall the ownership or sale of such stock be conditioned upon ownership or sale of stock of any stock but that of a member bank.

No inhibitions are placed upon the methods for separating stock ownership. Section 5 (b) extends these limitations to State member banks and requires reports from and examinations of their affiliates.

Fourth. After 2 years no member bank shall in any way be associated with a holding company or any other organization chiefly engaged in the flotation, underwriting, or sale of investment securities. Section 20.

It should be observed that the regulations concerning holding-company affiliates are not treated in this section, as they do not fall under the heading of security dealings by member banks.

B. Supporting arguments

Leaving aside the question as to how successfully the details of these measures as drafted will effect the separation of investment from commercial banking and will keep Federal Reserve credit from speculative uses, the affirmative case for these sections may be treated under the following general headings:

First. The evils resulting from the present mingling of commercial and investment banking.

Second. The positive advantages to be achieved by the bill.

Third. Refutation of objections; not deflationary or difficult of achievement.

Fourth. Security affiliates are already illegal.

Fifth. Purposes of the bill approved; but it should go further; Aldrich.

First. The specific abuses and general disasters which have attended the participation of commercial banks, either directly or through their affiliates, in the investment business are widely known and have received recent publicity. The following will serve as summary of the part played by deposit banks in the boom which ended in 1929:

Prior to the World War and the liberty-loan drives, in which commercial banks assisted, the security business was largely conducted by private banks and investment houses. Then a few security affiliates were established for selling bankers' acceptances and Government issues. These rapidly grew and built up elaborate and expensive sales organizations which, to sustain themselves, entered more and more into the business of industrial long-term financing. First primarily concerned with selling these securities, their needs for more merchandise led them to participate in, underwrite, or originate a growing proportion of them. The more they sold, the more new issues they sought to handle. And as this growth continued, the more bank credit they were forced to make available for the purchase of new securities.

The unhealthy inflation of bank credit—far in excess of the requirements of gradually increasing business in production and distribution—were the result of a vicious circle. Nearly every line of industry was overcapitalized with new security issues. New investments had to be sold. Credit had to be extended freely to permit the purchase of these. This credit was applied to sustaining and increasing stock-market prices. And again these securities at inflated prices were accepted as collateral for still more credit, until brokers' loans alone reached $8,500,000,000, with "outside loans" at $5,000,000,000.

In the era of high-pressure investment sales many unsound issues were offered, and many found their way into the portfolios of the smaller banks in the agricultural States. Metropolitan banks held their correspondents in a condition of involuntary servitude and, under the threat of cutting off accommodations, coerced them into buying securities from the sale of which they were deriving profitable commissions. And the rural banks, finding less local use for their funds, were generally not adverse to these opportunities for diversification and more rapid returns. Then the individual depositors were urged to place their savings in stocks and bonds, and against these more credit was given.

Thus when stock-exchange values shrank about $60,000,000,000, thousands of small banks took large losses on their securities and were caught with frozen loans on unsalable collateral. Billions in deposits were tied up by failures, and credit tightened until all normal business was strangled, and nearly every industry had assumed an excessive capital debt, greater than normal development had justified and the proceeds of which were partly dissipated through speculation.

This situation, it is asserted, indicates that the remedy which will prevent its recurrence must be measures to keep commercial banks out of the investment business and commercial credit out of speculative channels. Had banks confined their activities to commercial banking they would not have been tempted to load the country down with securities at inflated prices. They would not so lavishly have extended credit for speculative uses. They would not have used their coercive powers over correspondents nor their persuasive power over depositors to cause them to buy on faith. Had private banks and investment houses—which are the logical medium for long-term financing—not had this competition they would have handled legitimate issues on their merits and the market would have been conditioned by credit policies consistent with sound commercial banking.

The measures of this bill not only abolish security affiliates and prevent member banks from dealing in securities but they also close Federal Reserve credit to borrowers engaged in securities speculation.

Second. (a) The Central Hanover Bank, among others, advertises that it has "no securities for sale." This constitutes an assurance to its depositors and to its correspondents that it is in a position to give them unbiased service and advice. It is in line with the principle set forth by Justice Day in Magruder v. Drury (235 U.S. 119), and which should be made to apply to the deposit bankers as well:

In effect, he is not allowed to unite the two opposite characters of buyer and seller, because his interests, when he is the seller or buyer on his own account, are directly conflicting with those of the person for whose account he buys or sells.

Further to develop the advantages of safeguarding the public against the frailties of human nature by separating the securities business from banking, the following points should be noted:

Bankers' advice to commercial accounts as to the issuance of securities will be untainted by self-interest.

The public will be protected against the possibility of being offered bonds which represent bad bank loans or "dirty linen" converted through a security affiliate.

A bank will not be tempted to make security loans for the purpose of selling issues in which it has a financial interest.

A bank will not be embarrassed by the necessity of appraising as collateral for loans securities sold to its customers by its own affiliates.

(b) Bank credit is a controlling factor in the business life of the Nation, and should be conditioned by the needs of commerce, industry, and agriculture. Heretofore, with banks interested in the securities market, speculation has exerted an undue influence upon the control of credit. Moreover, as we have seen, the abundance of money banks made available for speculation produced, through the inflation and subsequent collapse, unsound conditions in long-term financing. By divorcing long-term financing from short-term financing the conditions affecting each will serve as a check upon the other, and the exaggerated results of the intimate association between the two will be avoided. From this we may expect sounder credit policies from our commercial banks and an investment business more accurately responsive to the needs of industry.

Third. (a) It is asserted that these measures will have a deflationary effect when this is least desirable for business recovery. This criticism is made under the misconception that articles 16 and 18 will involve the liquidation of many security holdings and will require the liquidation of affiliates and their holdings. As a matter of fact, as Senator GLASS has pointed out, the sale of securities held prior to the enactment of the bill in excess of the specified percentages is not required. And the provisions as to security affiliates do not require their destruction, but allow ample time for separating their ownership in an orderly fashion.

(b) Critics predict that a vital part of the machinery for handling long-term financing will be destroyed, thereby crippling the reconstruction of business life of the country and placing obstacles to the necessary conversions of slow bank loans into securities. Banks and their affiliates, they assert, have become indispensable to these operations.

Facts do not support this argument. Although there are not reliable figures available showing the relative importance of commercial banks as compared with private banks and investment houses, the following shows the rapid rate at which the former captured the legitimate business of the latter in the origination and participation of more than $20,000,000,000 of investment securities during the 4-year period of 1927-30, inclusive:

	Originated in—		Participated in—
	1927	1930	1927	1930
	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent
Private banks, etc.	78.0	55.4	63.2	38.8
Commercial bank affiliates	12.8	39.2	20.6	54.4
Commercial banks	9.2	5.4	16.2	6.8
	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0

The large volume of business which the private banks lost to security affiliates could easily be recaptured and handled again through its proper channels. Formerly these facilities were adequate, and would presumably be so again, especially as there is likely to be a smaller volume of capital issues in the future than in the days of the speculative boom in overcapitalization. There would be more strength in the argument if security affiliates had actually handled more than half of this business over a long period of time and not principally in boom years.

(c) Another argument in opposition which has been disproved by recent developments is the belief that the divorce of these affiliates in 2 years would not only be undesirable but difficult of accomplishment without heavy losses. In the first place, there is no necessity, under the bill, of destroying these affiliates, which could continue independently if they were justified. All that is required is the separation of stock ownership. Moreover, after expressing a bitter opposition to these measures, 7 out of 10 New York banks having such affiliates have already discontinued their affiliates, or started doing so, expressing, in several instances, the belief that their maintenance is contrary to the best interests of sound commercial banking. The bill, when enacted, would supplement this voluntary separation and would preclude a recurrence of the conditions which made it advisable.

In this connection it should be noted that relatively few institutions will be affected. Of the 300 security affiliates in the country, about 200 belong to national banks, 70 belong to State member banks, 30 belong to nonmember banks. But the member banks by which the 270 affiliates are controlled represent about one half of the banking business of the country.

About three fifths of the security affiliates controlled by national banks have their stock trustee, and one fourth of them are owned directly by the stockholders of the bank. The stock of the remaining few is either owned by the bank or by another affiliate.

Fourth. Sponsors of the bill state that while the bill was not drafted for legal reasons, the security affiliates established by national banks are not only in contravention of the intended purposes of the National Banking Act but actually illegal. Authority for this is an opinion of Solicitor General Lehman, in 1911, with Attorney General Wickersham concurring. Decisions of the Supreme and many lower courts are copiously cited in support of this view. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 75, pt. 9, pp. 9899-9904.) This was never acted upon, however, nor even brought to public notice until 1932. Senator GLASS charges that it was suppressed.

Fifth. Beside criticisms of the purposes of these measures of the bill, some who favor such measures criticize it on the ground that it does not go far enough in realizing its objectives. Among those holding this view are Winthrop Aldrich, president of the Chase Bank—which, by the way, has bitterly assailed the proposed separation of commercial and investment banking through the pages of its Economic Bulletin—who recently said:

I am entirely in sympathy with the divorcing by law of security affiliates from commercial banks. I do not think, however, that the Glass bill goes sufficiently far in separating the business of commercial banking from that of dealing in securities. To separate commercial banks from their security affiliates is only half the problem.

He proposes four additional measures to make this more effective: First, no corporation or partnership should be permitted to accept deposits without being subject to the same regulations as commercial banks; second, no corporation dealing in securities should be permitted to take any deposits at all; third, interlocking directorates between banks and organizations dealing in securities should be prohibited; and, fourth, boards of directors of commercial banks should be small enough to enable each member to be familiar with the affairs of the banks and to discharge their responsibilities to stockholders, depositors, and business.

These suggestions are supplementary to the provisions of the Glass bill, of which he approves.

C. Arguments in opposition

The principal opposition to the divorce of investment banking from commercial banking comes from bankers and bank publications—which are by no means unanimous—and from the United States Chamber of Commerce. Three items in the report of its special committee on banking submitted for referendum declare against these measures and in favor of voluntary or Government regulation rather than complete divorce. The vote on them was, on the average, 6 to 1 against divorce and in favor of bond departments, affiliates, and loans for others.

The three classes of arguments in opposition are, in the order they will be treated: First, that the premises on which the bill was drafted were false and that it is attacking from the wrong direction; second, that the measures as drafted will be ineffectual anyway and will not achieve their purposes; and, third, that the enactment of the bill is dangerous to the business life of the country.

First. (a) These measures of the bill are aimed at the abuses which contributed to the financial debacle but were only symptomatic of a single underlying cause—cheap money and excessive credit. The prevention of this should be the object of legislation and of Federal Reserve policy. But to inhibit the normal functions of banking by restrictive measures directed at the mere details resulting from cheap money is futile and mistaken. Commercial customers have priority on loan funds of banks; and if such funds are not excessive, not much will be diverted into speculation and inflation of security values. The simplest way to achieve this fundamental safeguard is by extensive open-market operations and careful manipulation of the rediscount rate by the Federal Reserve, thus keeping the money market under control. This was not sufficiently done during the boom, until the easy-money policy of the Federal Reserve had allowed it to get out of control. Driving the rediscount rate higher came too late to tighten money effectively.

(b) Exception must be taken to a campaign statement of President Roosevelt:

Investment banking is a legitimate business. Commercial banking is another wholly separate and distinct legitimate business. Their consolidation and mingling is contrary to public policy.

This is not in harmony with the consensus of opinion in the business world, as shown by the testimony before the Senate committee and as reflected in the business press, nor with the academic opinions published in such organs as the Harvard Business Review.

The line of demarcation between commercial and investment banking—long- and short-term credit—is not distinct and they cannot be separated. Frequently their functions are interchangeable, such as, for example, the almost perpetual accommodations sometimes granted by banks to customers in the place of capital issues and such as instances of the conversion of short-term loans into bond issues. Commercial paper is sold in much the same way as investment securities. Market conditions are a controlling factor in the choice between these complementary means of financing.

In fact, these two forms of financing should be still more closely associated rather than separated, so that the conservation of sound banking will be reflected in higher-quality securities offered to the public. Moreover, banks, with their wide contacts with the public through their correspondents and branches, are the logical medium for selling securities. Investment houses have to resort to the expenses of traveling salesmen and costly branch sales offices.

Comment: Mere prevalence of these opinions does not prove the case against these provisions. In many instances the conversion of short-term loans into securities should never have been done nor would have except because of the connection between the two. Moreover, if banks had not been in the investment business, they would not have tended to drain so rapidly money from the small towns into the cities for speculative purposes, leaving the rates for agricultural accommodations higher than they should have been.

Another comment: Some hold the opinion that commercial and investment banking require very different types of temperament and experience. This is offered as further reason for their separation.

(c) It is untrue that many of the bank failures during 1929-31 were due to losses through security affiliates. In fact, 80 percent of the deposits in banks that failed were in banks which had neither bond departments nor security affiliates.

(d) The belief that affiliates endanger the depositor's money is contrary to fact. Affiliates are separately capitalized and generally owned in some manner by the stockholders. Deposits are not involved.

Comment: Depositors' money is lent to the affiliate, however. It is estimated that 50 percent of short-term credit to affiliates was granted by parent banks.

(e) The practice of placing securities in which an affiliate is interested into trust accounts operated by the parent bank is generally avoided by reputable bankers and should be prohibited by law. The same thing applies to the sale of a bank's stock by its affiliates, although there were some notorious cases of this. These matters therefore should be subject to regulation, but they should not be advanced as reasons for discontinuing affiliates altogether.

(f) The statement that commercial banks took advantage of their superior opportunities for selling investments by putting low-grade securities on the market is disproven by the fact that surveys show the securities they were responsible for have had better records as to defaults. This is further evidence that the best interests of the investing public are served by commercial banks.

(g) Economy in the costs of financing through commercial banks is shown by a survey of the origination of $8,000,000,000 in foreign bonds by commercial banks and investment houses. The spread, in the case of those handled by the latter, was 25 percent greater. Like figures are not available for domestic issues, but would probably indicate an equal saving.

Second. The foregoing arguments show that it is mistaken to attempt to separate investment from security banking. Next are comments as to whether the Glass bill will effectually prevent the use of Federal Reserve credit for speculative purposes.

(a) Section 3 authorizes Federal Reserve authorities to refuse rediscounts for speculative purposes when the Reserve banks shall find that their members are making such use of it. This is obviously a mild provision simply making into law a power they already had and tried, without success, to exercise in 1929. An earlier draft (S. 4115) proposed forbidding the Reserve banks from making loans to members for the purpose of lending on securities or carrying loans on them. As it stands now, this will probably have little effect, even though it is strengthened by section 8, which provides that loans to member banks shall fall immediately due if such members shall have increased, during the life of the loans, their own outstanding loans secured by investment securities. Under this section member banks to which this is applied may be declared ineligible for further loans for a period fixed by the Board.

Both of these, not being mandatory, are likely to be ineffectual and to become inoperative. Moreover, rediscounts are not the only way in which Federal Reserve credit may find its way into speculative uses. In 1929, when the System was striving to check speculation, it actually supplied important funds for that purpose by buying heavily in acceptances, trying to support them. Thus, member banks, selling acceptances to the general market, were releasing commercial paper, which, through purchase by the Reserve banks, became available money free of any control. Any such artificial attempt to make money easy for commerce and tight for speculation is bound to fail. It cannot be kept in separate compartments or distinguished by its color. I quote from the Chase Economic Bulletin a hypothetical case under the heading, "Blue, Pink, and Yellow Money", (Apr. 25, 1932):

When Federal Reserve authorities put out their credit, either by buying Government securities or by buying acceptances, they do not know for what purpose the money will be used. They pay for these with checks on themselves to dealers in Government securities or acceptances, who deposit these checks with their commercial banks—member banks. The member bank will redeposit these checks with the Federal Reserve bank, building up its balance there. Assume that the bank which first receives the Federal Reserve bank checks has ground to suppose that they represent an increase in Federal Reserve credit and, wishing to obey the spirit of the law, refrains from employing the money in security loans. Instead of so doing, it buys Government securities or even commercial paper. It pays for these with deposit credits or with checks on itself. These checks come in against it at the clearing house next day and the extra Federal Reserve funds are transferred to some other bank. This other bank has no notion whatever that the money which has come into it represents new Federal Reserve credit. The identity of the money is absolutely lost in the general stream of funds. The second bank, with a clear conscience, lends its excess money at the money post of the stock exchange. The money was blue when the Federal Reserve bank put it out. It became pink in the possession of the first bank, but it became definitely yellow once it got into the hands of the second bank.

(b) Not only will the measures of the bill fail to prevent the diversion of Federal Reserve credit into speculative channels but the bill does not take into consideration the fact that dangerous speculative inflation may take place in fields other than investment securities. The boom in 1919-20, ending in a crash that marked the beginning of the period of high bank mortality, was one of commodity prices. At its peak brokers' loans amounted to only $1,750,000,000, as compared with about $8,500,000,000 in 1929. Nothing in the bill will prevent a recurrence of this situation.

(c) These controversial measures in the Glass bill will therefore fail to achieve their primary purpose. The only way in which speculation may be kept within bounds is by control of the money market through the rediscount rate and open-market operations. By these means the Federal Reserve System may prevent the accumulation of excessive reserve credits which can be put to speculative use.

Comment: In 1929 the Federal Reserve System attempted to check speculation by selling Government securities until its portfolio was run down to within the danger point of losing all credit control whatever. It also unsuccessfully raised the discount rate. The effect these measures would have had if taken earlier is entirely a matter of conjecture, but experience does not prove them infallible.

Third. More serious than its shortcomings are the destructive effects the bill would have upon our financial structure. Some critics who have presented these arguments may have changed their views in the light of very recent developments, such as the Aldrich announcement, mentioned earlier, and the action taken by several banks in discontinuing their security affiliates. These measures were not taken, however, so much for the public interest as for private self-protection, and they need not therefore be considered to affect the validity of the following points as general propositions of public policy.

(a) Member banks, through their bond departments, or through their affiliates, represent probably about 50 percent of the machinery for handling securities in this country. To abolish new securities altogether would clearly be industrial suicide. Therefore to destroy half of the machinery for handling them and to leave the other half of it alone and free of supervision is extremely dangerous, especially at the present time when financial reconstruction will require new issues to cover many recurring maturities of short-term loans.

Comment: On the contrary, now that the so-called "new era" of the boom days has collapsed, "banks will go back to banking" and borrowers may go back to borrowing for their current needs instead of floating more issues. The private banks and investment houses will be sufficient for the demands of the security business.

(b) The existence of investment banking without commercial bank credit is impossible unless the financial machinery of the country is completely revolutionized. Investment houses depend for profits upon a rapid capital turnover. They must, therefore, operate on large loans against their security collateral. Since they perform a vital function, therefore, any attempt, futile though it may be, to deny them Federal Reserve credit, direct or indirect, must be wrong in principle and undesirable in effect.

Comment: The bill does not outlaw investment banking nor prohibit member banks from lending to investment banks and thus assisting in flotations. They may also invest in securities within the prescribed limitations of section 15. These measures are merely intended to separate the two kinds of banking and not to outlaw investments. Member banks will be able to lend on securities, but they will not be able to increase such loans unduly while borrowing from the Federal Reserve. This will make available ample credit while preventing too rapid expansion.

(c) Long-term financing of industries is a vital function of the business community. During the decade of 1922-31, $74,000,000,000 of new securities were issued, most of them sound, despite a few abuses. In 1924 the average volume of commercial loans was about $8,000,000,000, while new issues that year aggregated less than $4,000,000,000. In 1929 commercial loans had only grown to $9,000,000,000—a growth not commensurate with our commercial and industrial expansion—while new issues that year were $10,000,000,000. Banking legislation must face the fact that this form of financing has grown relatively more important and that reform must look to its regulation rather than to turning back and opposing this trend.

(d) The dangers of the Glass bill are shown by an examination of its effect, had it been then in force, upon some of the emergency municipal and utilities transactions of the past 18 months, by which maturing obligations were converted into securities, thus saving several large cities and utilities from disastrous insolvencies. Among these operations were credits to New York City amounting to $251,000,000, $62,000,000 to three Chicago power and light companies shaken by the Insull crash, $30,000,000 to the city of Detroit, and $27,500,000 to Toledo utilities. (Another earlier but important case in point was the offer of a $230,000,000 bond issue for the Great Northern and Northern Pacific in 1921, in which more than 50 banks and investment houses participated.)

A typical procedure in these cases was the Chicago transaction: A group of banks extend a bank loan to meet the maturing obligations and receive as collateral a new bond issue which they underwrite. When the market is favorable they sell these, and the loans are repaid with the proceeds. The New York transaction, including practically all the clearing-house banks and the large private banks in New York, consisted of a $100,000,000 bond issue, which the banks bought for future resale, and a $151,000,000 revolving fund covered by warrants issued against anticipated tax revenue. Another bond issue to meet further short-term maturities is expected to be handled the same way in April.

Now, if this section of the bill had been in force, member banks could not have underwritten nor bought for resale any of the utilities issues. And purchases for own account would have been limited to 10 percent of any issue and to 15 percent of capital and 25 percent of surplus of the purchasing bank. It is doubtful, however, that the banks would have absorbed these huge issues for their investment accounts.

Some critics interpret the language of section 16 as prohibiting member banks also from underwriting or buying for resale even Federal, State, and municipal issues. They hold that, as the bill now reads, the proviso excepting these securities from its restrictions refers only to purchases for own account and does not tie back to the following prohibition:

The business of dealing in investment securities by the association.

State banks are included by section 5-b—shall be limited to purchasing and selling such securities without recourse, solely upon order, and for the account of customers, and in no case for its own account, and the association shall not underwrite any issue of securities.

A clarifying amendment is suggested, either modifying this passage or making line 17, page 56, to read as follows:

The limitations and prohibitions herein contained as to investment securities shall not apply to obligations of the United States . . .

And so forth.

It is also suggested the obligations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Port of New York Authority, and other such Government agencies be included in these exceptions.

The purchase of these securities for resale to the public would then have been confined to nonmember banks, and it is doubtful that under those circumstances they could have made available sufficient funds to rescue these great corporate organizations from disastrous receiverships.

Moreover, even though the bill is interpreted as allowing member banks to deal in Government securities, this would not justify them in maintaining their present elaborate distributive machinery. Thus facilities for selling Federal, State, and municipal issues would be seriously curtailed.

Comment: The 2 years allowed will be sufficient for investment houses to adjust their sales organizations to the needs of the long-term market they will handle. Member banks, still dealing in Government issues, will be in a position to assist them with loans if necessary.

(e) The limitation of purchases to 10 percent of the issue of one obligor should not be in the bill merely because some bankers overbought during the inflation and subsequently took heavy losses. Frequently a large bank is justified in buying a whole issue, as in the case of a slow loan that had better be converted into a bond issue which may be held until the market justifies its sale. Many corporations may be saved by funding debts that now threaten them with bankruptcy every time they come to maturity.

(f) By section 11 member banks are prohibited under penalty from handling brokers' loans for account of others. In view of the volume of "outside loans" which contributed to the recent inflation, this would appear a wise provision. But outside loans are not necessarily evil and were not a fundamental cause but a result of the excessive volume of money. In the past outside loans have been valuable support in a crisis, as in 1907 and 1920, when they were attracted to the market by the high rates. Moreover, if member banks are not allowed to handle these, when money again appears on the market it will come through other channels anyway.

(g) The National Banking Act prohibits loans to one obligor exceeding 10 percent of the lending bank's capital and surplus. Section 25 amends this by including within this limit all subsidiaries in which the obligor "owns or controls a majority interest." The purpose of this is to prevent the establishment of dummy subsidiaries in order to secure more credit under the law. It will work a hardship, however, upon the many organizations with several legitimate subsidiaries separately capitalized and already enjoying and deserving their own separate lines of credit. If these lines of credit are so discontinued, the subsidiaries will, in view of the present difficulties of establishing new ones, be compelled to seek money for their current needs through long-term financing. And in view of the other limitations in this bill, they will have to go to investment houses for this. This section, therefore, should be so modified that it will only apply to subsidiaries expressly organized to evade the law.

(h) The aggregate effect of these various restrictions upon member banks will be to drive many of them out of the Federal Reserve System in order to preserve their investment business. This would come at a time when it is highly desirable to strengthen the membership and to achieve a more unified control of banking. Strong State nonmember banks with affiliates will have many advantages, among them the ability to afford their customers a complete financial service under one roof; expert advice from their affiliates as to investments and in appraising securities as collateral for loans; source of new business derived from customers of the affiliate. The same advantages largely apply also to banks with highly developed bond departments.

(i) By severing all investment banking from the Federal Reserve we will be cutting it adrift from all control. Investment bankers will be given a monopoly of the kind of financing which, it has been shown, has grown in importance and is to a measure replacing the use of bank loans in financing industry. The consequences of this would be fraught with danger to the investing public, especially as investment houses, lacking the resources of affiliated banks, will never have equal stability in withstanding heavy losses and continuing service to their clients during critical periods.

(j) The objectives of any banking reform should be better regulation and examination of all financial machinery and more courageous control of the money market by the Federal Reserve System. These measures in the Glass bill attack symptoms and not causes. On the other hand, the consensus of opinion among bankers in general and such bodies as the United States Chamber of Commerce—though they are not unanimous on all the points—favors the following general provisions of other parts of the Glass bill: Section 29 providing for the removal of officers for unsound practices, sections 5-b and 26 requiring the examination of security affiliates, the open market committee under section 7 (12-A), and branch banking under section 22. These, it is asserted, are steps in the right direction. The provisions governing the investment business, treated in this chapter, however, are said to offset the other advantages of the bill.

III—FEDERAL BANK DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

A—The provisions of the bill (sec. 8, amending 12-B of Federal Reserve Act)

First. (sub a) A corporation is established for the purpose of liquidating the assets of closed member banks and for insuring, after July 1, 1934, the time and demand deposits of all member banks which shall have become class A stockholders in the corporation.

Second. (sub b) The directors of the corporation shall consist of the Comptroller of the Currency, 1 member of the Federal Reserve Board, and 3 other members chosen by the governors of the 12 Federal Reserve banks.

Third. (sub c-e) The corporation shall be financed as follows: The sum of $150,000,000 (approximately the amount paid into the Treasury by the Federal Reserve banks as a franchise tax) shall be appropriated for subscription to class A stock in the corporation; prior to July 1, 1934, all member banks shall subscribe to class A stock in the amount of one half of 1 percent of their net time and demand deposits, one half of this subscription being payable at once, the balance subject to call; member banks newly organized shall initially subscribe 5 percent of their paid-in capital and surplus, but at the end of 12 months their subscription shall be readjusted to equal one half of 1 percent of their deposits; the 12 Federal Reserve banks shall subscribe to class B stock in the amount of one half of their surplus, one half of such subscription being payable at once, the balance upon 90 days' notice. Class A stockholders shall be entitled to an annual dividend of 6 percent or 30 percent of net earnings of the corporation, whichever shall be greater. No dividends are payable on B stock. Stock subscription to class A by member banks shall not be accepted without certification by the appropriate examining authority as to the sufficiency of their assets to meet their liabilities. National banks that have failed to make such subscription by July 1, 1934, shall be liquidated; State member banks shall lose their charters.

Note, according to recent figures in the Federal Reserve Bulletin, these subscriptions would be as follows:

From U.S. Treasury, subscription to class A stock	$150,000,000
Member banks, one half of 1 percent of $25,000,000,000 total net deposits	125,000,000
Federal Reserve banks, one half of $279,599,000 surplus	139,000,000

Total insurance fund.....$414,000,000

Note further, as indicated in subhead 5 below, nonmember banks applying for membership and mutual savings banks may subscribe to class A stock under certain conditions, as well as the Morris Plan banks made eligible for membership under section 5-a. Mutual savings banks have aggregate deposits of about $10,000,000,000, so that if they availed of the opportunity they would subscribe $50,000,000 and raise the initial fund to $464,000,000.

Fourth. (sub h-i) Class A stock held by member banks shall be readjusted annually as deposits in the stockholding banks increase or decrease, these changes to maintain their holdings at one half of 1 percent of deposits. In the case of the failure of a member bank, its stock will be surrendered and the amount of its paid subscription will be applied to its liabilities.

Fifth. (sub f-g) Nonmember banks and mutual savings banks applying for membership in the Federal Reserve System may subscribe to this stock and enjoy the benefits of the corporation, provided that if membership be not granted or, being granted, is not acted upon promptly, they shall surrender their stock. Provision is made for depositing funds with the corporation instead if State laws prohibit such stock subscription.

Sixth. The "insured deposit liabilities", under this bill, are defined as follows (sub 1): 100 percent of net individual deposits up to $10,000, 75 percent of net individual deposits $10,000 to $50,000, 50 percent of net individual deposits exceeding $50,000. Whenever a national bank shall have been closed subsequent to July 1, 1934, the corporation shall organize a new national bank to assume its insured deposit liabilities and to take over certain banking functions temporarily, including the receiving of new deposits. To this new bank shall be made available by the corporation an amount equal to the insured-deposit liabilities of the closed bank as defined above. The corporation shall receive all dividends realized upon the assets of the closed bank until they aggregate an amount equal to the sum made available to the new national bank, after which further dividends shall be payable to the depositors. Acting as receiver, the corporation shall wind up the affairs of the closed bank as rapidly as consistent with local credit conditions and shall enforce the double liability upon the shareholders of the closed bank. The corporation shall keep a deposit-insurance account to which shall be debited the excess of sums paid out to cover insured-deposit liabilities over amounts realized on the assets of the bank. Whenever the debit balance of this account falls below one fourth of 1 percent of the aggregate deposits of member bank stockholders, they shall be assessed one fourth of 1 percent of their deposits, the same to be credited to the deposit-insurance account. The provisions regarding the liquidation of State member banks are similar, except that provision is made for conforming with State banking laws where these conflict. In their case, also, a new national bank is organized. These new national banks shall be operated by the corporation until such a time as it deems suitable to offer for sale capital stock in them and to turn them over to the new stockholders, under the regulations governing national banks. Failing such subscription to stock in the new bank, the business may be sold to another bank or the new bank placed in voluntary liquidation.

Seventh (sub m-n). The corporation may make loans to closed member banks or enter negotiations to secure their reopening, and it may purchase the assets of closed member banks and liquidate them under present regulations.

Eighth (sub o). The corporation may issue its tax-exempt bonds, debentures, or other obligations to the amount of double its capital. Subsections j, k, p-x are administrative provisions of no controversial significance.

In giving the points in favor of this measure the general ones will be briefly noted first, reserving several others as comments in rebuttal of negative arguments. Naturally a large part of the case must be defensive, in response assertions that the general idea of deposit insurance is unsound or unworkable. In this chapter the terms "guaranty" and "insurance" are used interchangeably because no clear distinction has been made heretofore, and because neither of them appear absolutely accurate in this application. The negative points are given from the general to the particular.

B. Arguments favoring the deposit-insurance section

First. Nine tenths of the money of the Nation is in the form of bank credit. The effects of the recent great number of bank failures have shown that it is essential to the economic health of the country to establish confidence in bank deposits. To this end banking reform is necessary, and most desirable is the safety of bank deposits so that deposit slips will be as safe as Government bonds.

Second. As the result of the banking crisis of the past several years, an aggregate of $2,500,000,000 in deposits was estimated tied up in closed banks. There are more than $2,715,000,000 in deposits in banks which have not yet been licensed to operate under the recent Emergency Banking Act, according to the Federal Reserve Bulletin for April. Although a considerable portion of this will eventually be recovered, it would otherwise be withdrawn from the uses of business during the 4½-year average period of bank liquidation. Under the terms of this bill the banks could be taken over or reopened by the corporation and the recoverable funds made available. Moreover, when the insurance provision becomes operative, such a deflationary situation will not recur.

Comment: The Federal liquidating corporation provided by the early Glass bills, and by the Beedy and Luce bills, would have served the same purpose of releasing the recoverable funds in closed banks. The present measure, however, does not require subscription to class A stock until July 1, 1934, and therefore will be inoperative in affording immediate relief to the depositors of closed banks.

Comment further: A fund of $414,000,000 would not be sufficient in any case to afford prompt relief to depositors with claims of two and a half billions.

Third. In January the estimated hoarded currency amounted to $1,500,000,000. This was due to lack of confidence in the security of bank deposits. As a result, the Nation's commerce, industry, and agriculture were deprived of cash which would have been a conservative base for $15,000,000,000 of bank credit. Under a deposit-insurance plan such a situation would not have been possible, and the disastrous effect of the present deflation would have been mitigated, with higher price levels and better credit conditions.

Fourth. A guaranty of bank deposits would relieve banks of the fear of runs which causes a constriction of credit. In 1932 it was estimated that our banks had eligible paper available aggregating $10,000,000,000. This possible reservoir of credit was not used because banks feared unfavorable consequences of being known to be borrowing heavily. Credit was tightened in the desire to remain as liquid as possible to meet the emergencies of runs. Such an aggravation of deflation and tightening of credit would not have occurred if this bill has been in effect, as banks would have been relieved of the consequences of depositors' fears. Moreover, many banks would not have been forced to close and to liquidate at serious losses to depositors and to the business community.

Fifth. At present the depositor is at the mercy of his fellow depositors, over whom he has no control, and of the management of the bank, about which he is not usually in a position to be well informed. The depositor takes the risks, and the banks take the profits. It is only just, therefore, that his funds be made secure against panic psychology or dishonest banking, against which every precaution must be taken in the future. Such an assessment upon banks as that in this bill would simply be a tax on a privilege—that of lending other people's money.

Sixth. Insurance is based upon a universally accepted principle of distribution of risks for the protection of all. Fire and life insurance are not unsound merely because there are cases of incendiarism and suicide. Neither should deposit insurance be unsound because there are dishonest bankers or because localized economic conditions may injure local banks. It is objected that similar guaranty plans have failed in the States that have tried it. This may be partly attributed to defects in the guaranty laws, but is principally the result of localization of risks—as though a single town insured itself against fire and was then wiped out. As in the case of branch banking, Nation-wide diversification of insurance risks would secure banking against any eventuality except such a national calamity as would destroy the Government itself.

Comment: For refutation of this specious analogy of insurance, see subhead C-1.

Seventh. In 1932 there was more than $700,000,000 on deposit on which the equivalent of an insurance premium was paid. These funds were in the Postal Savings banks, which pay only 1½ percent on savings, as compared with about 4 percent in savings banks. The rapid increase in these savings accounts, which doubled twice in 2 years, indicated a lack of confidence in our banks and a willingness to forego 2½ percent annually for the safety of Government credit.

Comment: Other deposit-insurance plans have been proposed by which depositors could secure this optional protection by paying a premium. Such plans would avoid the grave dangers of the present measures for assessing good banks for the protection of the bad.

Eighth. The assertion is frequently made that a guaranty of deposits would encourage "wildcat" banking by relieving depositors of the necessity of discriminating between banks that were soundly run and those that offered the highest interest rates or the greatest convenience; a reputation for high character would be cheapened and recklessness would be encouraged. This criticism is not valid because it assumes that a deposit guaranty would invite mismanagement. No such thing is likely, especially as the Glass bill prohibits the payment of interest upon demand deposits and authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to limit interest to be paid on time deposits—I understand that the Steagall committee amendment eliminates these limitations. Thus is eliminated the danger of competition in offering attractive rates to bring deposits to the wildcat bank. As a matter of fact, it is the stockholders in a bank that are responsible for its management, and this bill does not relieve them of their double liability. Only a guaranty of stock, not of deposits, would reduce the insistence upon sound management. To make the insurance of deposits occasion for unsound practices would be like burning down your uninsured warehouse in order to destroy the insured goods of your customers stored in it.

Ninth. The common objection that deposit guaranty removes the need for care in placing deposits is further inapplicable to the Glass bill. The small depositor is not usually in a position to know much about the condition and policies of a bank, and the large depositors with deposits exceeding $50,000 or even $10,000 are only partially protected. The large depositor—as I understand this section—is even discriminated against to the extent that he does not receive a pro rata share of the funds realized from assets but only receives over and above 50 or 75 percent, as the case may be, his share of what is left after all “insured deposit liabilities” have been met. This will leave every incentive to caution in the selection of a depository.

Tenth. As with branch banking, which is authorized in this bill, deposit insurance will tend to stop the flow of money from small places into the great metropolitan banks and to keep it in the place of its origin, for the uses of local business. It is fear of the instability of the local bank that drives the money to the larger ones. Thus this measure will assist the decentralization of industry.

Eleventh. The banking community, when its risks are shared under this measure, will insist upon the highest standards of inspection and regulation. Good bankers will have a direct interest in the ethics of other banks in order to minimize the possibilities of losses to them. The laxities in bank examination recently revealed will not be tolerated nor will they be expedient, as the fear of bank runs upon news of dishonesties will be eliminated. This is further refutation to the wildcat assertion.

Twelfth. Before the deposit-insurance section of this bill becomes effective, the other measures for stricter regulation will have been in force. Many of the abuses of the past will have been corrected, so that failures within the Federal Reserve System will be cut to the irreducible minimum caused by contingencies beyond the control of banking regulation. Under these circumstances the risks of deposit insurance will be small, and the benefits great, as it will close the gap between better regulation and absolute safety.

Thirteenth. The following table will show a trend away from the Federal Reserve System which deposit insurance will correct:

	National banks converted into State banks		State banks that took national charters
	Number	Authorized capital	Number	Authorized capital
1922.....	77	$12,590,000	129	$13,815,800
1931.....	135	28,945,000	6	700,000
1922-31.....	1,029	293,048,700	457	101,608,300

This progressive weakening of the Federal Reserve System was a movement away from strict banking supervision to the greater freedom, or laxity, of State banking laws. That this would be reflected in the bank failures of the future is shown by the fact that between 1865 and 1931 the ratio of State banks to National was as 2.24 is to 1, but the ratio of State bank failures to National bank failures was as 4.9 is to 1. From this it is evident that any measure to strengthen the national-bank system is highly desirable.

The guaranty of member-bank deposits will eventually probably bring all State banking institutions into the Federal Reserve System. On the other hand, it will not destroy those that do not join, as it leaves them free to offer higher interest rates on deposits.

Fourteenth. At the time that the Federal Reserve Act was under consideration its most strenuous opponents were those who are now its staunchest supporters—the conservative bankers. This has been the usual case with bank-reform legislation, and rightly so, as bankers are expected to be conservative. But this indicates that predictions of ruin, if this measure is passed, need not be heeded even though they come from high authority. For many years distinguished economists and occupants of public office have advocated some form of deposit guaranty. Among them was Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams who, in his 1917 report, advocated a measure similar to this section of the Glass bill.

C. Arguments in the negative

First. The term “insurance” is here misapplied to bank deposits, and the analogy insisted upon by the guaranteeists (see B-6 of this chapter) is false. In these provisions there is only a superficial resemblance to insurance, and no comparison may be made as to soundness of principle. The following points are to be noted: (1) In the case of insurance the buyer, having risks in common with others, seeks protection and pays a premium for it. Under this bill, however, such banks as are confident of their own soundness and are therefore not subject to risks are compelled to pay for the errors of their competitors; (2) the insurance underwriter selects his risks and charges premiums according to degree. Here, however, no attempt is made to classify risks as between strong and weak banks, and no differentiation is made in the amount of the premiums; (3) while insurance practice estimates probabilities within a negligible margin of error, no such estimation has been made as to the laws governing bank mortalities, which do not follow a curve that may be accurately determined. For example, in the 3-year period 1930-32, deposits involved in bank failures exceeded $3,000,000,000, a total in excess of deposits in all failed banks during the 65 years preceding. In other words, any scientifically operated insurance scheme that would have been about twenty-two-fold inadequate during 1930-32. No fire-insurance company, for example, could have survived a 3-year period of fire losses at a rate 22 times the normal. It may be objected that these figures were deposits and not net losses which would have been borne by a deposit insurance fund. But in this case the evidence against such a plan is even more condemning; for, while losses to depositors in closed receiverships have been only about 30 percent, it is estimated that they will be much greater in the case of failures subsequent to 1929, probably as high as 50 percent.

Second. Guaranteeists—Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. SHALLENBERGER, and others—often cite the figures of only $85,000,000 lost in national-bank failures until 1930, and assert that a sum so small would have put no strain upon a guaranty fund, had one been in existence since 1865. Ex-Senator Owen asserts that only $55,000,000 was lost in national-bank-closed receiverships up until 1929, while national banks during that period handled $400,000,000,000 in deposits. He declares, therefore, that a fund of one sixtieth of 1 percent would have covered them. This does not reflect the actual facts, however, as far the greater proportion of deposits were in still active receiverships. In fact in C-15 of this chapter will be shown that a similar guaranty plan would probably have collapsed in 1907, and would certainly have collapsed during the recent banking crisis. It is futile to recommend an insurance fund on the basis of experience when losses were least when such a fund is designed to meet conditions when losses are great.

Third. Guaranteeists discount the experience of States that have tried similar plans. They attribute the losses to defects in the laws, to the fact that all banks were not included, to the failure of crops, and so forth. If the laws were defective, then so is the present proposal, for it is similar in purpose and operation. Five out of the eight States that established deposit guaranties made membership compulsory, as does the present bill. As to crop failures, not all the collapses of guaranty funds may be traced to them. Moreover, a local crop failure is not unlike a national economic depression which any permanent insurance fund would have to be sufficient to meet. The disaster which has overtaken every guaranty plan may rather, be traced to the fundamental fallacies of the idea and to the impossibility of estimating the risks on a scientific insurance basis.

Our experience with such plans is as follows: New York State adopted a safety fund banking law in 1829. The fund became bankrupt in 1837, and the law was repealed. Eight States adopted guaranty laws between 1907 and 1917: Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Mississippi, South Dakota, North Dakota, and Washington. In each case the fund went bankrupt and the laws were repealed between 1923 and 1930. In several instances the deficits of the fund exceeded the total capitalization of the insured banks. The aggregate deficit of the eight amounted to about $110,000,000. Bank failures increased in the States during the period that the guaranty funds were in force, although this was before the height of the depression. In Kansas, for example, 134 guaranteed banks failed, and of these the depositors of 5 were paid in full out of the banks' assets, depositors in 29 were paid in full out of the guaranty fund, those in 2 were partly paid out of the fund, and by that time the guaranty law was repealed with a large deficit. In Nebraska an assessment has been levied against the banks for the next 10 years to make up the deficit in the guaranty fund, and so forth.

Comment: It is noteworthy that the strongest proponents of deposit guaranty are legislators or officials from these States where guaranty laws were tried. Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, for example, inserted in the RECORD for May 12, 1933, an article on the Texas bank guaranty in which it is asserted that there was no deficit in the guaranty fund that was discontinued in 1926, that all depositors were paid in full, at small cost to the member banks, that capital, surplus, and profits of the guaranteed banks increased rapidly, that the percentage of surplus and undivided profits increased, during the period, from 18.3 percent to 38.5 percent; and so forth.

Fourth. An insurance of deposits is the equivalent of a guaranty of loans, an endorsement of borrowers' notes, for payment to depositors is conditioned upon the collectibility of loans. Considered in this light it is economically fallacious. The repayment of loans is conditioned generally by influences beyond the control of the Federal Reserve System, floods, droughts, world economic conditions, foreign wars affecting trade, and so forth. In a sense, then the system would be placing itself at the mercy of external eventualities.

Fifth. At a time when strenuous efforts are made to balance the Budget this bill proposes to take from the Treasury $150,000,000 to relieve depositors who make the error of placing their money in unsound institutions. It would be no less reasonable to appropriate money for the compensation of investors who have lost on defaulted securities. Banking reform should be directed at correcting past abuses, not subsidizing them.

Sixth. It is asserted that by preventing bank runs deposit insurance will prevent the failure of sound but insufficiently liquid banks. It has frequently occurred, however, that banks which have been closed have reopened again without being liquidated through cooperation between depositors and stockholders. Under a guaranty plan the depositors would have no personal interest in the reopening of a closed bank, with the result that whenever for any reason a bank closes it will be taken over by the Corporation, regardless of its actual condition, and liquidated. Liquidation is undoubtedly more wasteful and harmful to the business community than the restoration of impaired capital. Section 11 of the recent Luce bill authorizes the liquidating corporation therein established—similar to the previous Glass bill—to underwrite new issues of preferred capital stock in national banks whose capital shall have become impaired and fallen below 10 percent of deposits. A similar preventive of unnecessary bank liquidations would be a sound measure in preference to deposit guaranty.

Seventh. The National Banking Act already provides as much protection for bank deposits as is consistent with sound principles: The capital, surplus, and undivided profits of the bank; the stock of and the reserves in the Federal Reserve banks; the assets of the bank; the double liability of the stockholders; the regulations and examinations designed to assure liquidity and sound management.

Comment: The experience of the recent years indicates that these are insufficient and that they do not protect or preserve confidence in banks which possess these necessities to an adequate degree. As for the double liability law, it is negligible insofar as dividends to the depositors are concerned. Since 1865 the stockholders in suspended national banks have been assessed 66.79 percent of their liability and of this only 47.54 percent has been collected, or about 32 percent of the stockholders' total liability. Estimating deposits at 10 times as great as capital stock, this would mean a return of only 3.2 cents on the dollar. (Mr. STEAGALL in several places gives the rate of collection from stockholders as only 16 percent. I can find no authority for this. The above figures are taken from the 1931 Report of the Comptroller of the Currency.)

Eighth. Although the fear of bank runs tends, when it is acute, to have a deflationary effect through the desire to maintain great liquidity, the total absence of it promised by guarantists would, on the other hand, tempt banks to become less liquid than they should. Without the healthy anticipation of having to meet unusual withdrawals upon short notice—which might arise not through panic but as the result of local conditions—a bank might permit its assets to become frozen beyond the danger point.

Ninth. Past experience shows that whenever deposits are guaranteed, irresponsible banking ensues. Such measures remove the need for conservative operation in behalf of the depositors and substitutes speculative action for the profit of the stockholders. Externally, the sound and the speculative bankers are put on an equal basis and the value of character is cheapened. Within the banks, however, the conservative banker is at a disadvantage, for he will instinctively observe a caution no longer required by his moral obligations toward the depositors. Deposit guaranty is undoubtedly a guaranty of reckless banking, it is usually followed by increasing bank failures, and this in turn accelerates the depletion of the guaranty fund and its ultimate bankruptcy. Safety for the depositor can best be achieved by a unified branch banking system under competent bankers, strict examination and supervision, limitations as to interest rates and dividends until large surpluses are created, and responsibility placed where it belongs—on the officers and directors of the individual banks. A guaranty fund does not supplement but defeats these purposes.

Comment: For rebuttal of this "wildcat" point, see paragraph B-8 of this chapter.

Tenth. Not only would this measure force good banks to shoulder the burdens of the bad, but geographically it would force certain States to pay for the losses in others. For example, in 1924-5, 80 percent of the bank failures were in 15 agricultural States. But 6 industrial States would have had to bear nearly 65 percent of the losses, as the following excerpt from a table showing percentage of bank deposits by States will prove:

(Source: Celler extension of remarks, RECORD, May 25, 1932.)

Percentage of Nation's bank deposits
New York.....	31.3
Pennsylvania.....	9.9
California.....	8.0
Illinois.....	6.9
Ohio.....	4.9
Michigan.....	3.8

Percentage of deposits in 6 States..... 64.8

Eleventh. The compulsory conversion of liquid assets equal to one half of 1 percent of deposits into a completely and permanently frozen asset will work a hardship upon member banks and will tend to have a deflationary effect. This assessment upon member banks would be about equivalent to 2 percent of aggregate capital, surplus, and undivided profits, and more than 6 percent of the aggregate reserves of member banks. Banks whose capital and surplus bear a higher ratio to deposits than the average will contribute proportionately a smaller portion of them, while banks that can least afford the assessment, those whose weakness is evidenced by a ratio of capital and surplus to deposits lower than the average, will have to pay a proportionately higher amount.

Twelfth. The initial assessment of one half of 1 percent of deposits will probably be followed periodically by others in order to maintain, as required, the insurance fund at one fourth of 1 percent of aggregate deposits. Under present unfavorable conditions this drain upon member banks will be such that net additions to profits would be wiped out. The following is an excerpt from a table supplied by the Comptroller of the Currency at House deposit-guaranty hearings, 1932: Earnings and dividends of member banks, 1923-1931—I have not the figures for 1932—

	1923	1929, peak	1931
National banks.....	$194,382,000	$291,384,000	¹ $55,054,000
State member banks.....	142,504,000	265,130,000	68,553,000
All member banks.....	336,886,000	556,514,000	13,499,000

¹ Loss.

Obviously, with a net addition to profit of only $13,499,000 in 1931, these member banks cannot well afford to pay $125,000,000 to the fund plus further assessment of unknown extent.

The effect of assessments, under this bill, upon small member banks may be shown by using again the table given on page 6 of this report consisting of a hypothetical income and expense account of a bank with $100,000 capital and $1,000,000 deposits, according to an article published in Fortune:

Earnings:
Discounts and interest on investments.....	$56,000
From various other sources and services.....	6,000
	$62,000
Expenses:
Interest on deposits ¹	$28,000
Taxes.....	3,000
Other running expenses.....	7,000
Losses from bad loans.....	6,000
Dividends at 6 percent.....	6,000
	50,000
Left for salaries and reserves.....	12,000

The initial assessment upon a bank of this size would be $5,000, with the probability of others to follow. Thus, with only $7,000 left out of a year's earnings to cover salaries, such a bank would have nothing with which to build up its reserves. As a consequence it is much more likely to fail under slightly adverse conditions.

Thirteenth. The guaranty fund would compel member banks to build up two reserves, one of which would be controlled by another agency. Liabilities would be materially increased without any addition to assets. This would tend to unsettle banking conditions and to render the insurance fund self-destructive.

Fourteenth. Such a deposit guaranty would afford only a false sense of security, likely to be shattered whenever an economic crisis occurs. With deposits of more than $25,000,000 in the Federal Reserve System, and with an insurance fund of $414,000,000, we actually have $1 in the fund to insure $60 on deposit.

Fifteenth. The most casual examination shows that this so-called "insurance fund", arbitrarily established without adequate analysis of bank risks and losses, would not be sufficient to meet a major banking crisis without large additional assessments at a time when sound banks could least afford to meet them. (In this connection it should be borne in mind that the portion of the fund derived from the Treasury and from the surplus of the Federal Reserve banks is not replenishable from the same sources. Additional funds in the future would come from the member banks.) For example, in 1907, bank deposits aggregated $15,358,215,000. In the banks that failed that year there were $226,453,000 on deposit. An insurance fund of one half of 1 percent of deposits at that time would have amounted to only $76,790,000, or only 34 percent of the deposit liabilities to be taken over. It follows, therefore, that heavy assessments upon banks would have been necessary at the time when they could least afford it. The deposits in failed banks in 1907 amounted to 15 percent of the aggregate capital stock of all banks at that time.

The inadequacy of the fund provided by this bill becomes especially striking when we consider what would have happened had it been in existence in 1921 and during the ensuing years. Approximately $5,000,000,000 in deposits were involved in bank suspensions during the period—for the present purpose we may assume that practically all banks in the country would have been forced by the guaranty into the Federal Reserve System. A large portion of these failures was, as shown in chapter I, among smaller banks, in which deposits of more than $10,000 to a single account were probably rare. We may, therefore, conservatively put the "insured-deposit liabilities" that would have been taken over at about $3,000,000,000, or an amount exceeding the capitalization of all existing banks in 1921 and nearly equal to their present capitalization. Recently reported estimates fix the probable loss upon deposits in banks recently closed at about 50 percent. Mr. STEAGALL is quoted as predicting that losses to be sustained by such a fund would probably be only 25 percent of deposits in closed banks. On several occasions he has interpreted the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency as indicating losses to depositors in closed national banks as far below 20 percent. The American Bankers' Association puts it at less than 10 percent, and the Bankers' Monthly, February 1932, puts the loss at 11.6 percent in closed receiverships.

I cannot reconcile these figures, however, with the report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1931. Probably they include secured and preferred liabilities. The Comptroller's figures are: Deposits at date of failure, $314,854,705; dividends, $220,382,118. This would indicate a loss to unsecured depositors of 30 percent. And it is generally conceded that losses in banks still in active receiverships will be much higher. It may consequently be asserted that had this fund been in operation during the past few years many of the banks that have survived would have been taxed out of existence and would have dragged down with them many still stronger banks. It must be remembered that the deposits in banks that failed during a single year, 1931, about equalled one third of the capital stock of all the banks in the country. A guaranty fund would have destroyed the survivors.

Sixteenth. The bill requires the annual readjustment of stock subscriptions to keep pace with the increase or decrease of deposits. This manifestly is the reverse of what would appear desirable. Periods of increasing deposits and prosperity are those when bank failures are least likely to occur. Yet the funds are then increased. When deposits are falling, on the other hand, bank failures become more frequent; yet, paradoxically, this is the time when the deposit insurance corporation is required to retire its stock and reduce its funds.

Seventeenth. If banks are compelled to subscribe to stock in the corporation, exchanging liquid assets for a frozen one, they should at least be entitled to representation upon the governing board of the corporation, and they should have priority in dividends and in the event of the corporation's liquidation. The authors of the bill take $150,000,000 out of the Treasury, asserting that it originated in the Federal Reserve System and should be recaptured. Yet they propose to give the Treasury more in dividends on this subscription than the member banks will receive on their compulsory investment.

Eighteenth. Advocates of this measure assert that it will bring nonmember State banks into the Federal Reserve System. It is more probable, however, that, in the interval between its passage and the taking effect of the insurance provision in 1934, it will achieve the destruction of nonmember banks, with the consequent economic distress in every part of the country. There are 7,000 of them licensed to operate under the emergency banking legislation and 4,000 more that are still closed, according to the Federal Reserve Bulletin for April. A large number of these are ineligible for membership in the Federal Reserve System or could not afford to meet the requirements. As soon as guaranty legislation covering member banks is passed, depositors throughout the country will withdraw their funds from State nonmember banks. This, of course, will mean the rapid contraction of credit and liquidation of loans.

Nineteenth. Another probable effect of the legislation is that, while weak banks will be striving to join the System, strong banks, unwilling to bear the burden of the insurance fund, and sure of their own stability, will be leaving the System.

Twentieth. Comptroller Pole, testifying before the House Banking and Currency Committee at hearings on the Steagall bill for deposit guaranty, expressed himself as follows:

This bill presupposes that our system of country banking stands in urgent need of a pronounced reform. With that diagnosis I am in complete accord. This bill also raises an implication of unification of our country banking system under Federal supervision and control. I am in favor of that in principle. But as to the method proposed by the bill to accomplish these results, namely, a guaranty of deposits in banks, I am unequivocally and unalterably opposed.

In my opinion the enactment of this bill would destroy the Federal Reserve System by driving the strong banks from it. It would lead to the closing of thousands of small State banks which cannot qualify as members of the Federal Reserve System. It would put a premium on incompetency and irresponsibility by rendering no longer necessary for the country banker to be concerned for the safety of his depositors.

I should say that to guarantee the deposits of 7,500 banks with the possible closing of 13,700 banks would by no means be a remedy for the present banking situation.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the passage of this bill to insure bank deposits is the result of a contest which has been waged for two decades. When the Federal Reserve Bank Act was written into law by a Democratic administration in 1913, 20 years ago, a provision to guarantee bank deposits was sponsored by John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, for many years a leading Member of this body, and at that time a Member of the Senate, but his efforts were defeated in the Republican Senate by the machinations of a powerful lobby of eastern bankers. It has been said that this outcome was so disappointing to John Sharp Williams that he voluntarily gave up his seat in the Senate and retired from political life to his plantation in the Southland, where he spent a beautiful old age with his books and legion of friends.

However, a few years later a young Congressman, also from the South, the present able and distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], took up the fight and has labored unceasingly during all the years since and in every session of Congress for the enactment of legislation to secure and safeguard the deposits of the people in the banks of the United States. Chairman STEAGALL and his committee colleagues are entitled to all the credit and honor which can be bestowed upon them for the consummation of this great reform.

The act as finally passed today amply protects the State banks and the sections to which some Members objected have been stricken or modified, although we did not succeed in limiting the salaries of the officials of the Federal Reserve banks, which I should like to have seen done. However, lawmaking is not an exact science, and every law leaves something to be desired and to be the subject of future consideration.

When we passed the Bank Emergency Relief Act on March 9, 1933, at the opening of this special session, I said:

Mr. Speaker, we must have a Federal guaranty of bank deposits law, so that the savings of our citizens and the money of our merchants and business men in all the communities of our land will be safe and secure. Not until such a Federal statute is passed and in force will complete confidence in our banking system be restored, nor the funds of the American people placed on deposit in the banks and enable the bankers to make loans to finance the transactions of business and industry in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and gratified and take pride in the fact that in less than 3 months from the day on which I made this expression of the wishes and hopes of the people everywhere such a law protecting their bank deposits has been passed by a Democratic House of Representatives, and will be passed by a Democratic Senate and be signed by a Democratic President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who is leading America into a new, a better, and a happier day.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, it is a much-indulged habit of lawmakers to include several subjects in one bill, evidently with the idea in mind that a majority of the Members will be so determined to get one provision enacted that they will vote for all. That is the way the veterans of this country were crucified in a body on the cross of economy early in this session. We all know that injustices prevail in that some men draw unwarranted compensation, but those evils can be corrected, and the veterans are willing and anxious to correct them. Congress knows that, too, so I am fortified in asserting that the provisions of the economy bill, emasculating the veterans in general, would never have become law if those provisions had been put up independently.

Now we are confronted with a like condition in this bill which provides for the guarantee of bank deposits. The primary object of the bill is to guarantee bank deposits, but in it we find many amendments to the Federal Reserve law, none of which are germane to the primary subject of the bill and many of which are beneficial only to big banks, dividend dividers, coupon clippers, and tax dodgers. However, the bill comes on for consideration before the House under a different rule than the economy bill did, and I have faith that this House will, through the process of amendments and eliminations, cure the faults which are found in these collateral subjects.

SOME OF THE FAULTS OF THE BILL

Section 3 of this bill, which has no relation to the guarantee of bank deposits, is an attempt to divert, after all of the expense of the Federal Reserve System has been paid and after the stockholders have received an annual cumulative dividend of 6 percent, all of the balance of the earnings of this System have gone into private hands, without paying the Government a penny for its right to operate.

The subscribed and actual paid-in capital stock of the Federal Reserve System is $150,217,000. That is its entire invested capital. And it shows a gross earning since 1913, when the System was begun, of $1,020,000,000. This earning is set up by an item of expenditures of $472,000,000, which includes the Federal Reserve bank buildings, all of which have become an asset of the System, and a second item of $548,000,000 as net return. This item of net return is disposed of by $120,000,000 paid-in dividends, $279,000,000 transferred to the surplus account, and $149,000,000 paid the Government as a franchise tax. The total of these amounts balances the $1,020,000,000 gross earnings. The two items of dividends and surplus total $399,000,000, all of which goes to the stockholders under the present program, and it equals 13.3 percent annual income on the investment of $150,217,000. This percentage of income is surely adequate. Then why should we now permit this huge private banking system, fostered and protected by the Government in its earnings of over 13 percent, to escape that franchise tax?

If we are to measure the future by the ratio of the past 19 years that this system has been in existence, then that franchise tax will average $7,842,105 per annum in the future, and if the law requiring its payment is repealed this money is then directed to the private stockholders, and it would make the earnings of this private banking system increase from 13.3 percent to 18.52 percent, and the Government would be receiving nothing for this amazingly valuable franchise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this section 3 is kept in this bill, it will surely defeat the bill in its entirety, for this Congress undoubtedly will not deprive the people of this country of hundreds of millions of dollars in the future by giving to the bankers of this land this fabulously valuable franchise upon which the Government is entitled to this legitimate franchise tax.

ATTEMPT TO ELIMINATE DOUBLE LIABILITY ON BANK STOCK

Section 24 repeals the double liability of stockholders of national banks. This section by all means should be eliminated. The double liability of stockholders of national banks as provided by the present law should not be disturbed. A large number of States have double-liability laws for State banks, and the repeal of such law as to national banks would be an unfair discrimination against State banks. I anticipate the argument in favor of this repeal will be that the States can and should repeal their laws on double liability for State banks. But the State legislatures will not do so. The people are not for such repeal. The people of my State would not stand for it. The Governor of my State would not stand for it, and should the legislature in an unguarded moment pass such a law he would promptly veto it. Let us not create such a palpable discrimination between national and State banks.

ATTEMPT TO GIVE PRIVATE CORPORATION FREE USE OF MAIL

Section 305, page 57 of the bill, gives the deposit insurance corporation, which is to be set up under the guaranty provisions of the bill, the free use of the United States mails. Now this corporation, according to this bill, is not a Government corporation, it is a private corporation to be operated under the direction of the Government, and therefore it is no more entitled to the free use of the mails than is the Federal Reserve or any other private corporation. I hope we will not make the mistake of leading the people to believe that this is a Government corporation, and particularly let us not lead them to believe that to be a fact by giving this corporation the franking privilege of the mail. The people have already suffered a deception by having been led to believe that the Federal Reserve System is a governmental institution instead of a private system made of and for private bankers. The proposed deposit insurance corporation is to be a dividend-paying concern, and certainly should not have the free use of the mails. The mailing privilege should be paid before dividends are paid. The money paid for the mailing privilege is a part of the item of $472,000,000 listed as expenditures of the Federal Reserve.

It is reported that last year the Federal Reserve paid over $1,500,000 for postage, and it is not beyond a reasonable anticipation that this deposit-insurance corporation will in time reach that annual amount. Now, the question occurs, Shall such a Government donation be made to a dividend-paying private corporation? I do not believe this House will do so. It is not right and our postal treasury can ill afford it. There was a postal deficit last year of approximately $200,000,000. This section 305 must be eliminated. Our Government could never permit dividend checks of private corporations to be mailed to stockholders in franked envelopes.

NECESSITY OF BANK-DEPOSIT GUARANTY

There can be no resumption of normal banking in this country without the guaranty of deposits. It is an undisputed fact that at least 90 percent of the business of the country is conducted with bank credit and with checks used as the medium of exchange.

The use of bank credit has declined to such a degree that it has about reached the vanishing point. The public is afraid to deposit its money in banks, and the banks operating along legitimate lines are afraid to use their deposits in the extension of bank credit for the support of business and trade; hence we stand on the zero point in this line of business, which affects all industries of this land. Bank credit must be resumed if we are to find our way out of our present difficulties. Credit cannot be extended again until confidence on all sides is restored. Confidence cannot be restored until, first, the people know that their money is safe when deposited in a bank, and second, until they believe their money is safe when invested. Various States have tried various plans for guaranteeing bank deposits, but they have all failed, and the people will not have confidence in banks until the strong arm of the Government, either directly or indirectly, is back of the deposits. An absolute demonstration of this fact is revealed by a glance at the footings of the Postal Savings System.

The Postal Savings deposits of America on January 1, 1932, were $597,000,000. On January 1, 1933, 1 year later, these deposits had increased to $900,000,000, which increase amounted to $25,250,000 per month for the calendar year 1932. These Postal Savings deposits had increased to $1,157,000,000 on April 30, 1933, 4 months later, which means an increase of $64,250,000 for each of these last 4 months. These figures were furnished me today by the Postal Savings Department, and they reflect a monthly increase for these last 4 months in excess of 250 percent over the monthly increase for the year 1932. The reason for this increase is "guaranty of deposit" on the part of the Postal Department and lack of that "guaranty" on the part of the banks.

This is conclusive evidence of what the people demand and what they must have if banking is to be revived. The sudden increase of postal deposits is justified under existing laws, or lack of laws, present-day conditions, and physical examples confronting us. A considerable percentage of bank deposits, and particularly in the agricultural districts, represents borrowings of the depositors. In a large percentage of such cases, if the bank closes, the borrower and depositor, who is one and the same person, loses 100 percent. To the casual observer or the person not familiar with the conditions, that statement seems absurd and impossible, for you will say the deposit will offset the loan, but I have seen quite the contrary happen many, many times. Here is one instance where it always happens: The borrower, a farmer, goes to the bank and borrows $5,000, giving his note secured by his farm mortgage. He leaves the money in the bank to be checked out in payment of his debts and for operating expenses; the bank immediately sells the note and assigns the mortgage to a mortgage company or an insurance company; the bank closes before the checks have cleared.

The borrower thinks his account is balanced in the closed bank, thinks that his deposit will offset his note, but not so. He does not owe the bank. His note and mortgage are in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value. He must pay the note or his mortgage will be foreclosed, and he has already lost his deposit. One could hardly expect that borrower-depositor-loser to go through that same process again, but he does. A new bank is organized, the community is reported to be back of it, and he is loyal to his institutions and he is loyal to his community, and he tries it again, with the same result as before. Indeed, I have seen them try it as many as three times out in my country. They have been gamblers. But now they have decided that they have the wrong deck; they have entirely lost faith; they will not play longer. They have been hit from in front and kicked from behind, and we must not expect them to deposit their money in a bank again, for they have been repeatedly powder burned and now they are gun-shy. Oh, they must have a guaranty before they will make deposits any more, and it must not be a "make-believe" guaranty either.

GUARANTY MUST EXTEND TO SMALL BANKS

The Government must either make the guaranty itself or set up the machinery for it and stand back of such machinery and wield its strong arm in directing it, before public confidence will or can be restored, and such guaranty must extend to the small bank and the State bank as well as the big bank and the national bank.

Mr. Speaker, that the guaranty law must apply to the small bank and the State bank is absolutely necessary if we survive this dilemma. Since this bill has been introduced I have had dozens of letters and telegrams from my

State on the subject, cautioning against discrimination, and I shall transgress upon the time of the House to read just one letter which is typical of the others.

BASIN STATE BANK,
Stanford, Mont., May 19, 1933.

Hon. ROY E. AYERS,

Member of Congress, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR JUDGE AYERS: Will you please send me copy of proposed Steagall bank bill, also proposed Glas bank bill? From press reports, if either of these bills is enacted in its present form it will put the little banks out of the running. If Senator GLASS has his way, deposit insurance will only extend to national banks and Federal Reserve members complying with the National Banking Act, which provides a minimum capital of $50,000 in cities of less than 6,000 population. Now, with such a minimum, that would eliminate us unless we increased our capital to $50,000, and who in this country would desire to invest in bank stock at this time?

I feel that the guaranty of deposits or the insurance of deposits is a good thing, but I do not feel that we should be eliminated from the provisions of the law simply because of our small capital when we are in all other respects qualified. I feel that there should be provisions so that the small banks could get in on the deposit-guaranty provisions under proper examination and without having to increase their capital to $50,000.

In this State my information is that there are 56 banks capitalized at over $50,000, and 92 banks capitalized at under that amount.

We have been hard hit for the past 13 years, and I sincerely hope that a law will be enacted that will help the little country bank as well as the larger banks. With sincere good wishes, I am,

Yours very truly,

N. B. MATTHEWS, Cashier.

Mr. Speaker, I have been pleased to advise this constituent that the Steagall bill included banks like the Basin State Bank, of Stanford, Mont., and that the press reports had been misleading.

PROVISIONS OF STEAGALL BILL

This bill first reforms our banking laws by restricting banks and bankers in making loans for speculative purposes and in the investment of bank funds. It then makes provision for insuring deposits both in national and State banks, regardless of size, which insurance it is believed will provide absolute indemnity against loss for depositors in banks insured. The bill does not provide that the Government shall guarantee the payment of the deposits, but it does provide and require that banks shall mutually guarantee the deposits of each other through the medium of a Government-controlled instrumentality designed for that purpose, to be known as the "Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation."

The banks shall make such contributions to the insurance fund provided for, from time to time, as may be necessary to provide for the payment of all deposits in banks which may be closed; and that such contributions shall be made by the banks in proportion to the amount of their deposits. This seems to be an equitable adjustment for the maintenance of the fund.

It is claimed by the parents of this bill that the guaranty of bank deposits against loss provided by it is absolute in making the protection of the deposits complete, and, to see that this guaranty is continuously maintained, the Government has complete supervision and control of the machinery of guaranty.

The bill provides that the deposit-insurance corporation shall insure all deposits of all banks, regardless of size, joining it and complying with the conditions prescribed, and they do not have to have Federal Reserve membership.

If this bill is passed it will, on going into effect, automatically close every bank that does not join. No person will leave his deposit in a bank not guaranteed when he can place it in a bank that is guaranteed; hence the law must be safeguarded so as to include all banks that can qualify, whether they be large or small, State or National, and also whether they be members of the Federal Reserve or not. It is also absolutely necessary that the order of approval going out under this law be issued for all banks of a town, city, county, locality, or State, as the case may be, at one and the same time, for if this were not done it would greatly mitigate in favor of the bank getting the first order of approval, and it would probably wreck the other banks of that particular town, city, or locality.

This bill proposes to guarantee all deposits to the extent of 100 percent for the first $10,000, 75 percent of the next $50,000, and 50 percent of the amount of all additional deposits. Provision is made that when a bank is closed the amount of the deposits insured shall be immediately available to the depositors.

The Deposit Insurance Corporation provided by this act is to have a capital stock to start with which is contributed by the Federal Reserve banks to the extent of one half of their surplus on January 1, 1933, which will amount to a little less than $150,000,000, while each member bank is required to subscribe to the stock of the Corporation to the extent of one half of 1 percent of its total deposit liabilities. This will allow an additional sum of approximately $150,000,000, in addition to which the Government shall subscribe $150,000,000 for stock of the Deposit Insurance Corporation, thus providing about $450,000,000 of original capital for it; further provision is made that it may issue notes, bonds, debentures, and other similar obligations in an amount aggregating not more than three times the amount of its capital.

This makes a starting reserve and credit of $1,350,000,000 for the Deposit Insurance Corporation; then it is to be maintained by the mutual assessment which I have mentioned and, in addition to that, it is provided that whenever a bank increases its time and demand deposits it shall subscribe at the beginning of each calendar year for an additional amount of the capital stock of the Deposit Insurance Corporation, equal to one half of 1 percent of such increase in deposits. This is an adjustment to reach the increased deposits of the big banks.

I trust that when this bill has run the gantlet of the House and Senate the objectionable features will be eliminated so that it will be a bona-fide measure which can be identified as a law requiring the insuring and guaranteeing of deposits of all banks qualifying under it.

VALLEY FORGE

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by me on May 21 at Valley Forge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am inserting an address I delivered at Valley Forge, Pa., on Sunday, May 21, 1933, as follows:

The State Sundays in the Washington Memorial Chapel, erected at Valley Forge as a memorial to George Washington and the patriots of the Revolution, are commendable and should be inspiring. This is Mississippi Sunday, and in response to the invitation of the Rev. Dr. W. Herbert Burk, the originator, the builder, and the rector of the chapel, to Gov. Sennett Conner, I am honored to represent on this auspicious occasion both the Governor and the State of Mississippi.

We are descendants of pioneers. Many of the brightest and most promising young men of the Original Thirteen States sought fortune and fame in the other 35 States as they were organized as Territories or admitted into the Union as States. We are Americans. We are citizens of the Republic. We speak the same language. We have common creeds.

Many Pennsylvanians settled in Mississippi. They traveled down the Ohio and the Mississippi Rivers to Vicksburg and to Natchez, and thence frequently into the interior of the State. Some became eminent at the bar and renowned as statesmen. Others were leaders in education and planting. Christopher Rankin, a native of Pennsylvania, died while a Member of Congress from Mississippi and is buried in the Congressional Cemetery in Washington, D.C. A native of Pennsylvania, Robert J. Walker, as a Senator from Mississippi, was one of the outstanding statesmen of his time. He was a leading contender for the Presidency of the United States. As Secretary of the Treasury in the administration of James K. Polk, he was the author of the Tariff Act of 1846, known as "the Walker Tariff Act", probably the most satisfactory and successful tariff act ever passed by Congress.

Mississippi therefore gladly joins today with Pennsylvania in perpetuating the heroism of the patriots of Valley Forge. I believe in memorials and monuments. They encourage sacrifice. They stimulate patriotism. A nation without memorials, monuments, or anniversaries is a land without liberty and without freedom. The savage has no hero, nor has he any Fourth of July.

We are on holy ground today. We are on the most famous spot in the United States. Valley Forge is the Mecca of the American patriot. As long as men love liberty, so long will the sons of freedom make their pilgrimage to Valley Forge to renew their devotion to freedom and their loyalty to country.

In this valley and among these hills was the most celebrated encampment in the history of the human race. The 6 months at Valley Forge, from December 19, 1777, to June 19, 1778, marked the turning point not only in the War for Independence but in the contest for liberty throughout the world. As Salamis prepared for Marathon, so Valley Forge prepared for Yorktown. No bloody battle was fought here, but the poverty, the privations, the sufferings, the sacrifices, and the training placed the soldiers of Washington at Valley Forge among the immortals of all time. The legions of Caesar and the followers of Cromwell won no battle comparable to the victory of Valley Forge. The fate of the War for Independence rested here. The winter quarters at Valley Forge was the pivotal bloodless battle of the Revolution. It marked the end of short-term enlistments and secured enlistments for the duration of the war. It marked the end of State control of troops and saw the centralization of authority in the Commander in Chief.

THE COMMANDER

It takes loyal and trained soldiers, and a great general, for the success of any army. George Washington was the commander. He not only led the Army, but he led the people. There were Governors and there was a Continental Congress, but Washington typified the spirit of the War for Independence.

When the idolators and the debunkers are forgotten, Washington will continue the ideal American and the national hero. He came from English stock. He was from among the first families of the Colonies. Without college or university education, largely self-educated, Washington possessed a well-trained mind. His profession of surveyor or civil engineer stood him in good stead in his mission to the Northwest. He was prepared for leadership. He was trained in both war and government. He was a great administrator, for he was familiar with large affairs and was probably the wealthiest man of his time. He saved the survivors of Braddock's army and won fame in the French and Indian War. As colonel of the Virginia militia, he was the best-known soldier in all the Colonies. It was while serving as an aide to General Braddock that he made the statement, "My inclinations are strongly bent to arms."

He did not know the meaning of fear. After the fatal wounding of General Braddock, with two horses shot beneath him and four bullets through his coat, the young Virginia colonel took command and saved the remnant of the brilliant English army.

He was widely experienced in government. Although defeated when first a candidate, he was a member of the Virginia House of Burgesses for 15 years. He was in the Continental Congress when chosen Commander in Chief of the Revolutionary Army.

King George III was not an Englishman at heart. He was of German blood and third in descent from the House of Hanover. He asserted and exercised the divine right of kings. Washington knew the tyranny of King George. The petitions of the colonists for redress were heard over and over again. The protests against the tyranny of the English King constantly rang in Washington's ears. He was familiar with the debates, the petitions, and the protests. His personality and his character largely shaped and controlled the policies of the Colonies. Patrick Henry, on being asked to name the greatest man in the Continental Congress, replied: "If you speak of eloquence, Mr. Rutledge, of South Carolina, is by far the greatest orator, but if you speak of solid information and solid judgment, Colonel Washington is unquestionably the greatest man on the floor."

In the Virginia convention, when the British closed the port of Boston, Washington said: "I will raise 1,000 men, subsist them at my own expense, and march myself at their head for the relief of Boston." He knew that war was inevitable. He realized that only bloodshed could preserve the rights for which Jamestown was settled and Plymouth was founded.

Washington was elected Commander in Chief of the Revolutionary Army on June 15, 1775. He served for 8 years without compensation and stipulated that he would expect only reimbursement for his actual expenses. He was 43 years of age, and his heart and soul were in the cause. For 6 years, although frequently within a comparatively short distance of his beloved Mount Vernon, he never visited his home. Like all great men, Washington was humble. In accepting the appointment as Commander in Chief, he said: "I beg it may be remembered by every gentleman in the room that I this day declare, with the utmost sincerity, I do not think myself equal to the command I am honored with."

The War of Independence was not popular in England. It was in reality waged by King George III. Many of the leading English statesmen protested against the tyranny and injustice to the Colonies. There were no conscriptions in the English Army, and volunteers were lacking to fight their relatives across the seas. The English armies were made up largely of alien troops. There were many Hessians from the German provinces. It was the English policy to conscript only to repel invasion.

Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill were followed by defeat at Long Island. The British frequently defeated the Continental Army, but they never defeated George Washington. The campaign of Washington across New Jersey excited the praise of the great Frederick of Prussia and would have done credit to Napoleon. The Trenton-Princeton campaign marked Washington as a military genius of the highest order. It is studied in the military schools of Europe.

There were enemies within as well as without. Enlistments were few. The army was dwindling. When Washington crossed the ice-filled Delaware on a dark and stormy night in Christmas 1776 and captured 1,000 hated Hessians at Trenton, after marching 9 miles in sleet and snow, new hope was inspired in the Colonies. The Hessians had plundered and pillaged in the British marches through New Jersey. They had become as Attila to the colonists. The brutalities and the ravages of the civilian population by the foreign Hessians brought defenders to Washington's cause. The success at Trenton and at Princeton brought renewed hope to the cause of independence.

The British had planned to separate New England from the South. At Stony Point and Kings Mountain the Continentals were braver than the bravest of the British. Ticonderoga had fallen and Burgoyne had surrendered at Saratoga. The British campaign in the Mohawk and Hudson Valleys in 1777 had failed. Lord Howe decided to abandon New York City and take possession of Philadelphia, the cradle of liberty and the capitol of the Colonies. He sailed from New York. Washington prepared to check his advance. The attacks of Washington at Brandywine and Germantown were defeats for the Continental Army. It was the darkest day of the Revolution when Lord Howe, with 15,000 trained British troops, took possession of Philadelphia in December 1777. Benjamin Franklin, then in Paris, when he heard that Howe had taken possession of Philadelphia, remarked: "No; Philadelphia has taken Howe." There were many Tories in Philadelphia as well as in the Colonies.

There have been greater generals and there have been greater statesmen, but no greater character than George Washington. The contemporaries of George Washington appreciated and admired his patriotism, justice, honesty, patience, courage, unselfishness, and tenacity. John Adams said: "I know him to be only an exemplification of the American character." Thomas Jefferson expressed the estimate of his day when he said: "It may truly be said that never did nature and fortune combine more perfectly to make a great man and to place him in the same constellation with whatever worthies have merited everlasting remembrance."

There was a great leader at Valley Forge. Never was leadership so imperative. The final victory was due to the great commander. If Washington had despaired at Valley Forge, not only the Colonies but humanity would have lost. Of his leadership and skill, Von Moltke said in Berlin in 1874: "You have in American history one of the great captains of all times. It might be said of him as it was of William the Silent, that he seldom won a battle but he never lost a campaign."

THE CONGRESS

There was no central authority. The States were supreme. They were jealous of their rights and of one another. Rivalry among the States and statesmen was the order of the day. The Government was as a rope of sand. The soldiers acknowledged allegiance only to the States. The operations of the commissary departments were worse than failures. The lack of transportation was tragic. The crops in the country were abundant and the supplies were ample. There were blankets and there was clothing, but they did not reach the Army.

The Continental Congress was the only semblance of a central government. The able men had left Congress for service in the States. Hancock had resigned. Samuel Adams was in Massachusetts. Jefferson and Henry were in Virginia. The Congress was without money and without credit. Coin found its way to Philadelphia and New York, both of which were in possession of the British. The Congress issued paper currency. It depreciated so much in value that it took $2,000 in continental currency to buy an ordinary suit of clothes. Hence the origin of the expression, "not worth a continental."

Moreover, the Government was in flight. At one time Congress went to Baltimore, and then to Lancaster and finally to York. Quorums were frequently lacking. When there were sessions the Congress was either impotent or indifferent. The commissary department had utterly broken down. The statesmen frequently undertook to direct the Army. Failure always resulted. There were intrigues in the Congress and cabals in the Army. The Continental Army was handicapped by a vacillating, meddlesome, and inefficient Congress. The British Army was supported by a strong central government. There were both money and resources. Trained officers and trained soldiers were sent across the seas to vanquish Washington. They received much help at the hands of the loyal Tories.

THE ARMY

Thomas Paine, secretary of the Congressional Committee on Foreign Affairs, whose pamphlet Common Sense was thought to have influenced the Declaration of Independence, said, while Washington was in the winter quarters at Morristown, N.J., in 1776 and 1777, "These are the times that try men's souls." But conditions were worse in the winter quarters at Valley Forge in 1777 and 1778. On December 23, 1777, with 11,089 troops, Washington informed Congress that he had 2,898 men "unfit for duty because they are barefoot and otherwise naked", and he further said, "For want of blankets, many feign to sit up all night by the fires instead of taking comfortable rest." Again Washington wrote, "Naked and starving as they are, we cannot sufficiently admire the incomparable patience and fidelity of the soldiery."

Chief Justice John Marshall afterward wrote, "At no period of the war had the American Army been reduced to a situation of greater peril than during the winter at Valley Forge. More than once they were absolutely without food. In February, 3,989 men in camp were unfit for duty for want of clothes. Of this number scarcely a man had a pair of shoes. Although the total of the Army exceeded 17,000 men, the present effective rank and file amounted to only 5,012 men." No better description of the miseries and sufferings of the winter can be found than in the words of Washington himself: "Without arrogance or the smallest deviation from truth, it may be said that no history now extant can furnish an instance of an army's suffering such uncommon hardships as ours has done, and bearing them with the same patience and fortitude. To see men without clothes to cover their nakedness, without blankets to lie on (for the want of which their marches might be traced from the blood from their feet), and almost as often without provisions as with them, marching through the frost and snow, and at Christmas taking up their winter quarters within a day's march of the enemy, without a house or a hut to cover them until they could be built, and submitting without a murmur, is a proof of patience and obedience which in my opinion can scarce be paralleled."

Valley Forge is known in every American home because of the red footprints of its soldiers. Years after the encampment, Washington told Dr. Gordon: "Through the want of shoes and stockings, and the hard-frozen ground, you might have tracked the men from White Marsh to Valley Forge by the blood of their feet." As he rode in the rear of his army toward Valley Forge, Washington demanded of the first officer he met, "How comes it, sir, that I have tracked the march of your troops by the bloodstains of their feet upon the frozen ground? Were there no shoes in the commissary's stores?"

The soldiers lacked not only food but clothes. Lafayette wrote: "They had neither coats, hats, shirts, nor shoes." Baron Steuben said: "The men were literally naked, some of them in the fullest extent of the word."

With Spartan spirit the soldiers built mud huts and log cabins for their winter quarters. Disease followed exposure. Of the 11,089 men who were encamped at Valley Forge on December 19, it is said that 3,000 died from exposure and from disease. None know the place of their burial. When it is recalled that in the 26 important engagements in the War of Independence only 9,000 lost their lives, the fatalities at Valley Forge can be fully realized. There is but a single monument to mark any of the graves of the heroes who perished. Only one simple stone is to be found to mark the burial place of the probable 3,000 who died here. There is a small stone to the memory of John Waterman, of Rhode Island. Deaths were so frequent that funeral services were finally abandoned.

It took more heroism to withstand the privations and sacrifices of the fierce snows and winds of winter at Valley Forge than to face bullets and bayonets. There was no attack. There was no march or countermarch, but only grips with disease, hunger, and poverty. It was worse than the trench or the dug-out of the World War, for it was 6 months and not 48 hours at Valley Forge. It was the proud boast of the single survivor of the soldiers of Leonidas that he was at Thermopylae. So it was the boast of Washington's patriots that they were at Valley Forge.

Suffering and sacrifice make kindred spirits. The soldiers from all the Colonies at Valley Forge drank from the same canteen. There is no bond comparable to the fellowship of soldiers.

"There are bonds of all sorts in this world of ours;
Fetters of friendship and ties of flowers,
And true lovers' knots, I ween;
The boy and girl are bound by a kiss,
But there never was a bond, my friends, like this;
We have drunk from the same canteen."

It was here the Continental Army first learned the meaning of the word "comrade." There were months of patient endurance and days of active drilling. There was no fighting, but there was martial faith and dauntless courage.

During the winter at Valley Forge the scheme to replace Washington with Gates, known as the "Conway Cabal", came to naught. Washington endured criticism and complaint with patience. From every contest and over every obstacle he emerged a greater and a nobler figure.

A majority of the newly assembled troops at Valley Forge were without training and organization. During the winter of 1777-78 Washington changed all this before 6 months had elapsed.

To add to the difficulties the Tories were active. Desertions were encouraged. The British troops in Philadelphia, watched by Washington, were being wine and dined by the loyal Tories. They spent the winter in ease and luxury, while gaunt hunger and dreaded disease brought deaths every day and night at Valley Forge.

The Liberty Bell in Philadelphia on July 4, 1776, proclaimed: "Liberty throughout the land and to the inhabitants thereof." The farmers of Massachusetts on the Commons at Lexington, April 19, 1775, "fired the shot that was heard round the world", but there were despair and gloom at Valley Forge. The troops were passing through the darkest nights of the Revolution. Lord North offered conciliation. His proposals for conciliation were made early in 1778, but Washington urged Congress not to be misled by them. He asserted: "Nothing short of independence, it appears to me, can possibly do." His soldiers caught his spirit and determined to die but never to surrender.

Winter quarters at Valley Forge did not mean idleness. Howe was kept in Philadelphia. The country was protected by the army at Valley Forge. Washington was constantly watching the British. Deaths and desertions were more than made up by enlistments. The army was increased from 11,000 to 17,000. Long-term enlistments were inaugurated. There were daily drills. There was discipline. Washington was familiar with the English system. The dependence was upon the officer in the battle. The soldier was not emphasized. His training was overlooked. Washington capitalized the weakness of the British system. The conquering army must be a trained army.

As every cloud has a silver lining, so there were rays of hope at Valley Forge. Baron Steuben, of Prussia, with a decoration at the hands of the great Frederick, joined Washington at Valley Forge. He was a skilled soldier and a strict disciplinarian. He came to the Colonies in their hour of direst need. Washington appointed him major general and inspector of the Army. Discipline took possession of the entire encampment. He transformed volunteers into a trained army. It will not be forgotten that Frederick of Prussia was in sympathy with Washington in the Revolution. He forbade the Hessians crossing the borders of Prussia as they enlisted in the English Army for service in America.

To Valley Forge there came the gallant Lafayette, at 20 years of age. He had left the vine-clad hills of his native France to join Washington in the contest for liberty. He brought strength to a despairing cause and hope to a despondent army. The admiration of Lafayette and Washington was mutual. The friendship, begun when Washington was 46 and Lafayette was 20, continued until death.

In war as in peace the statesman and the diplomat have their place. The Army must always be supported by the people and by the Government. Benjamin Franklin, the greatest of American philosophers and the greatest of American diplomats, was in France while Washington was at Valley Forge. On February 6, 1778, the alliance with France was concluded at Versailles. The news brought rejoicing to the Army at Valley Forge. It brought inspiration to soldier and commander.

In the ranks there were great men. John Marshall was there, and he became the great Chief Justice. James Monroe, a future President of the United States, was among the soldiers at Valley Forge. There were conspicuous leaders among the officers. Steuben, from Prussia, and Lafayette, from France, have been mentioned. Washington's chief engineer was Brig. Gen. Louis du Portail, of France. Alexander Hamilton was the aide de camp of Washington. Nathaniel Greene, Anthony Wayne, John Laurens, and Richard Henry Lee, of cavalry fame, known as "Light Horse Harry", were among his trusted lieutenants.

Martha Washington and the wives of the officers were a benediction to the Army. Washington had forbidden dice and cards among the men. There were but few diversions. There were more important things to do. The women sewed, knitted, and nursed. There was no American Red Cross, and there was no Knights of Columbus. There was no Young Men's Christian Association. There were no movies, but Martha Washington and the wives of the officers were angels of mercy as they ministered to the sick and nursed the dying. There were the hardest of hardships. It was like the darkness before the dawn.

Reverence was encouraged. Washington was always interested in his chaplains. Both Army and commander put their confidence in God. It may be tradition, but I like to think of it as fact rather than fiction. It is said that Isaac Potts, at whose house Washington was quartered, one day while the soldiers were in camp at Valley Forge, strolled up the creek and when not far from his dam he heard a solemn voice. He walked quietly in the direction of it. He saw General Washington's horse tied to a sapling. In a thicket nearby was the beloved Commander in Chief upon his knees in prayer, his cheeks suffused with tears. Small wonder is it that Chatham, the English statesman, said, "You cannot conquer America."

It takes a great commander and great soldiers to make a great army. Training and discipline made armies then as now. Preparation is always essential to victory.

When the British evacuated Philadelphia in June 1778 Washington left Valley Forge in pursuit of Clinton, who had succeeded Howe. There were now 17,000 soldiers. They were well-trained and disciplined. Clinton was overtaken and defeated at Monmouth, notwithstanding the perfidy, if not the treason, of Charles Lee. Lafayette said of Washington at Monmouth, "I never beheld so superb a man."

THE MEANING

Nations have their Valley Forge in peace as well as war. The United States has been in the dark valleys of another Valley Forge for the past 3 years. As leadership snatched victory from the very jaws of defeat in 1778, so is leadership imperative in the world today. The world needs leadership of the Washington mold. Other leaders with passing fame vanish like bubbles that burst on the great ocean of time, but Washington is like the rock that borders the ocean, against which the billows roll and break, without injuring the rock. Of Washington it has been justly said, "He changed mankind's ideas of political greatness." The great commander at Valley Forge became the great President of the Nation.

The road to success always traverses the hills and valleys of suffering and of sacrifice. There must be sacrifice before victory. The valley ever leads to the hills. The cross always precedes the crown.

The forces of destruction are never idle. There are those today that would destroy. The evil tree ever grows by the side of the good tree. The forces of wickedness are always arrayed against the forces of righteousness. There are intrigues today that would destroy liberty.

It is not enough to win liberty. It is just as important to maintain freedom as it is to fight for it. The oppressor is always selfish. As our forefathers fought for liberty, we must fight to make that liberty secure. As Goethe said: "In this world it is necessary that man should not only fight for his liberty; he must fight again and again to keep his liberty. He must be vigilant for liberty."

Amid hunger and suffering the patriots did not despair. They chose the hard way. Morale is as essential in the people as morale is important in the army. Napoleon said: "Morale is to the physical as 4 to 1." The spirit of defeatism would be as dangerous today as it was at Valley Forge. As Washington and his patriots did not despair, so Americans must carry on.

Other nations were not indifferent to the cause of the Colonies. Kosciusko came from Poland, Steuben from Prussia, and Lafayette from France. Without France, Yorktown would have been long delayed if not impossible. Today no nation can live unto itself. The good neighbor is honored among nations as among people. France, England, Germany, and the United States must be friends or civilization is in danger.

There was preparedness. We know that the best way to promote peace is to be prepared for war. Oliver Cromwell expressed the thought when he said, "Trust in God, but keep your powder dry." Washington was right when he said, "To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

There were courage, faith, and confidence at Valley Forge. The need of our day and of our age is not more education, not more learning, but more courage and more faith. The world cries today for the justice that was exemplified in George Washington and for the faith and courage of Valley Forge.

Six months at Valley Forge not only created an army but made a Nation. The need for central government and authority was fully demonstrated here. The Union was born in the huts of Valley Forge. Valley Forge is responsible, in the language of Webster, for that "unity of government which constitutes us one people." The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is fortunate in having within its borders Valley Forge, where the Union was born, and Gettysburg, where the Union was saved.

THE GLORY

Valley Forge has a glory all its own. It little matters whether we know the places of burial of the heroes who fell here. Who knows where Caesar's legions are buried? Who knows where the soldiers of Assyria are buried?

The heroism of the patriots of Valley Forge is celebrated in song and story. The memories of the winter quarters here are cherished in every household in the land. The best monument that America can erect to the heroes of Valley Forge is to exemplify in peace as well as war the courage and the faith of Washington and his army. If Washington could speak to America today, he would say again, "Well done, my patriotic Americans. The fire that stirred your fathers to high deeds for a high cause lives on in you. In you the same soul that made this country flames on to keep it safe."

Washington and the patriots looked beyond the valley and over the hills at Valley Forge to see the greatest nation in human history. We must look beyond the valleys of the depression and the hills of economic difficulty to the victory that will bring prosperity not only to the average and forgotten man of the United States but of the world.

The importance of the individual soldier was emphasized at Valley Forge. We are emphasizing today the opportunities and responsibilities of the individual citizen. Patriotism is as imperative in peace as in war. America needs today the spirit of the heroes of Valley Forge. There is the trumpet call on every hand to the life of hardship, discipline, and denial. We can find anew in this foremost shrine in the western world our spirit and our soul.

As the soldiers of the American Revolution were at their best at Valley Forge so should the citizens of the United States be at their best in distress and depression. It will be so if we have the spirit of Valley Forge.

There is a painting entitled "The Spirit of '76." Three figures are conspicuous. An old man, with white hair, with figure erect and eye aglow, is keeping step to the sound of his drum, which he is beating with all his might. On the right there is a middle-aged man, blowing his trumpet with all the force at his command and keeping step with the aged drummer at his right. On the left is a youthful drummer looking with admiration toward the old man, and evidently he is getting inspiration from the courage of the aged hero. The color bearers with the flag are behind the three. Following the flag there is a company of patriots marching with steady step and with the same high spirit that characterizes their leaders. In the extreme right corner of the picture there is still another figure. By the side of the broken wheel of a cannon there is a mortally wounded soldier, and as he lies there he waves his cap enthusiastically as his comrades advance to meet the enemy. In the picture, youth, middle age, and old age are animated by love of country. The spirit of patriotism is perpetuated in the celebrated painting. It is symbolic of the spirit of Valley Forge. As was said by the English historian, John Richard Greene, "The camp at Valley Forge is the noblest of Washington's triumphs." His troops never lost a battle after Valley Forge. As confidence in country and faith in God were victorious at Valley Forge, so will courage, faith, and confidence conquer today. Righteousness ever exalts a nation. In this historic shrine we renew our faith in America and in the God of our fathers. We believe with Washington, "Standeth God within the shadows keeping watch above His own." If we commit ourselves and our common country to the keeping of the Almighty, who holds the fate of nations in the hollow of His hand, our destiny will be secure unto the remotest generations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mrs. NORTON (at the request of Mr. BYRNS), for 1 week, on account of illness; and

To Mr. BRUNNER, for 2 days, on account of important business.

A PROTEST AGAINST HITLER'S PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a short address on the persecution of the Jews.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Speaker, the cause of liberty, freedom, and justice, three of the most important parts of modern civilization, has received its most recent blow at the hands of Adolph Hitler and his Nazi dictatorship in the German Republic, and subsequent persecution of the Jews.

In this day of enlightenment the atrocities perpetrated on the Jewish people in Germany recall the Dark Ages at a time when a troubled world is endeavoring to cultivate good will and cooperation among all nations and races. No man or woman, be they Christian or Jew, who is an American can be indifferent to this menace to civilization. The pages of history record the fact that religious discrimination does not confine its attacks to one people or creed; all have at one time or another been the victims of its blind abuse.

The world looks to America for leadership. Americans everywhere recognize the right of every human being to worship God as they please; we are a God-fearing people. Such action as that of Hitler against any group of people in the world is revolting to our sense of justice. The successful culmination of our efforts for world peace depends on our ability to disperse the forces of fear and hate; we must banish intolerance and persecution if we are to draw the nations of the world together in brotherhood and fellowship; otherwise civilization will fail.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McGUGIN. I object.

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman insists on that objection, we will have to stay here 1 hour longer tomorrow, because it is the purpose of the House to act on this bill tomorrow. I hope the gentleman, in deference not only to this side of the House but to the other side of the House, will agree that we shall meet at 11 o'clock.

Mr. McGUGIN. I insist on my objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn, with notice that we will stay here until we finish this bill tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 33 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 23, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1933

(Legislative day of Monday, May 15, 1933)

The Senate sitting as a court for the trial of articles of impeachment against Harold Louderback, judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, met at 10 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The respondent, Harold Louderback, with his counsel, Walter H. Linforth, Esq., and James M. Hanley, Esq., appeared in the seats assigned to them.

PROCLAMATION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will proclaim the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment in session.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

THE JOURNAL

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment for the calendar day of Monday, May 22, when, on motion of Mr. ASHURST and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION OF G. H. GILBERT

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are counsel prepared to call another witness?

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, the witness Gilbert was still under cross-examination when the court took a recess yesterday afternoon. I should like the cross-examination to be completed before I call the last witness for the respondent, so that we may know what, if anything, we may have to meet in that testimony.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the witness.

G. H. Gilbert, having been previously sworn, was further cross-examined as follows:

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Mr. Gilbert, will you state to the court the exact time when you got information of your appointment as receiver in the Faegol Motors Co. case?—A. To the best of my recollection it was at 1:30 or 2 o'clock p.m.; around 2 o'clock p.m.

Q. Where were you when you received that information?—A. At home; I think I was at home.

Q. How often were you paid compensation for your receivership services?—A. In the Faegol case I was paid only one time; at the termination of the receivership, about a month later than the termination.

Q. Can you indicate the exact date of that payment?—A. No; I cannot give you the exact date; it was sometime in August of 1932; about a month, possibly a little over a month, after the termination of the receivership.

Q. Mr. Gilbert, who notified you that you were to be appointed in the Faegol Motors Co. case?—A. I received a telephone call. I did not ask who was speaking, but I assumed it was Judge Louderback's secretary, Miss Berger; it was a lady talking.

Q. What did she say to you, briefly?—A. She said that I had been appointed receiver in the Faegol matter and to report to the judge's chambers.

Q. How long before that time, if at all, had you discussed receivership appointments with Judge Louderback?—A. I do not recall having any discussion with the judge on receivership matters since the Prudential Holding Co. case. That was a case I was previously in, the last case prior to the Faegol case. That is the only time I recall having any discussion with the judge on such matters.

Q. There is one matter that is not quite clear—in my mind, at least—and that is just how you came to choose Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel instead of John Douglas Short, who, you indicated, was your preference?—A. In the Sonora case, do you refer to?

Q. That is right. The first case you had Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel as attorneys.—A. Well, the circumstances were substantially as follows: I reported to Judge Louderback's chamber and I met Mr. Dinkelspiel in Miss Berger's office, the first time I met Mr. Dinkelspiel, and he said that he was representing the Irving Trust Co. and was already in the case.

Q. Are you sure he said he was representing the Irving Trust Co.?—A. Yes, sir; I am.

Q. You cannot be mistaken about that?—A. No; I do not see how I could possibly be mistaken in that.

Q. Did you find out afterward whether, as a matter of fact, he was representing the Irving Trust Co.?—A. Yes, sir; he was. His firm had filed the petition, I believe, for the ancillary receivership at the instigation of the Irving Trust Co. I went to Mr. Dinkelspiel and qualified, and later, after a conversation with Judge Louderback, who told me that he could see no need for any additional counsel, that Mr. Dinkelspiel was already in the case. I accepted Mr. Dinkelspiel and signed the petition to the court for him to be my counsel.

Q. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, to refresh your memory, that Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel represented three persons who—A. Creditors.

Q. Yes; three creditors who sought to have this ancillary receivership established in that court; and that the attorneys who sent down the claims were in opposition to the attitude of the Irving Trust Co. in regard to the matter?—A. I believe that is correct, on second thought. Mr. Dinkelspiel was already identified with the case. However, I was willing to accept him on the judge's suggestion that he was already identified with the case, and he did not see any need for any additional expense of counsel in the matter.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

Further redirect examination by Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Mr. Gilbert, in the 8 years that Judge Louderback was judge of the State court and the 5 years that he was judge of the Federal court, in how many matters were you appointed receiver?—A. One in a State matter and four in the Federal.

Mr. LINFORTH. That is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness will be excused.

CALIFORNIA CODE—ESTABLISHMENT OF RESIDENCE

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, we now offer in evidence subdivisions 2 and 7 of section 52 of the political code of the State of California, bearing on the question of residence. I desire to read those two subdivisions.

2. There can only be one residence.

7. The residence can be changed only by the union of act and intent.

EXAMINATION OF THE RESPONDENT, HAROLD LOUDERBACK

Mr. LINFORTH. Please call the respondent, Harold Louderback.

The respondent, Harold Louderback, was duly sworn by the Vice President.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	McGill	Sheppard
Austin	Gore	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bachman	Hale	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Black	Hastings	Murphy	Trammell
Bratton	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Brown	Keyes	Patterson	Van Nuys
Capper	King	Pope	Wagner
Clark	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.	White
Frazier	Logan	Russell

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I wish to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators and Mr. CAREY answered to his name when called.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. DUFFY, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. HEBERT, Mr. NYE, Mr. DALE, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. SMITH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to compel the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that the following-named Senators are necessarily detained on official business in a hearing before the Committee on Banking and Currency: Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. COUZENS, Mr. STEIWER, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. McADOO, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. REYNOLDS, Mr. COSTIGAN, Mr. BULKLEY, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. DICKINSON, and Mr. STEPHENS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Do Senators desire to dispense with the further execution of the last order made by the Senate?

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the order just made, compelling the attendance of absent Senators, may be vacated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Counsel will proceed.

The respondent, Harold Louderback, having been sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. You are the respondent in this proceeding?—A. I am.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am 52 years old.

Q. Where were you born?—A. I was born in San Francisco, Calif.

Q. Who were your parents?—A. My father was Davis Louderback. He was born in Philadelphia, Pa.

Q. And your mother?—A. Frances Caroline Smith Louderback. She was born in San Francisco, Calif.

Q. Are they what we term pioneers of the State of California?—A. My mother was of pioneer stock, her parents being pioneers. My father was brought as a small boy to California, and arrived in San Francisco September 15, 1849; so he was of pioneer stock.

Q. Where were you educated?—A. I was educated in the public schools in the city of San Francisco up to the grammar grade, and began my course at the high school in San Francisco, when my affliction of asthma, which I have had a chronic condition of since I was about 4 years old, caused me to be sent away into the mountains. I went to Reno, Nev., where I graduated from the high school, attended the University of Nevada, and in 1905 graduated from that institution with the degree of bachelor of arts.

Q. Did you then follow any further line of education?—A. I then attended the Harvard Law School of the Harvard University, and graduated from that institution in 1908 with the degree of bachelor of laws.

Q. Subsequently to that were you admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor at law?—A. I was. I was first admitted to the Sussex County bar of Massachusetts in 1908; and the same year, in September, I was admitted to the Supreme Court of the State of California.

Q. Where did you practice your profession?—A. In San Francisco, Calif.

Q. Did you practice your profession continuously from the time of your admission to the Supreme Court of the State of California down to the time of your election as one of the judges of the Superior Court of the State of California?—A. I did, excepting for the period of the war. The day after war was declared I volunteered my services, attended the first officers' training camp, received a commission, and remained in the service until December 1918, at which time I was discharged, a captain of artillery. I did not get across, but I was in an overseas outfit, the Fortieth Artillery. I commanded Battery F. We got as far as Camp Upton, and were within 3 days of embarking from Hoboken when the armistice was declared.

Q. During the time that you were engaged in the practice of the law, with what firms were you connected?—A. I was connected with the firm of Mastick & Partridge, which firm has furnished three United States district judges for the northern district of California—Mr. Van Fleet, Mr. John Partridge, and myself.

Q. When were you elected one of the judges of the Superior Court of the State of California?—A. In November 1920 I was elected a judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. I went into office the first Monday in January of the year succeeding.

Q. And that was for a term of how long?—A. For a term of 6 years.

Q. Were you then reelected at the end of that term?—A. Yes. In November 1926 I was elected for a further term of 6 years.

Q. How long did you serve under that term?—A. I served until April 30, 1928, when I qualified as judge of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California.

Q. Have you been occupying that position ever since?—A. I have.

Q. Briefly, can you state what judges, if any, recommended you to that appointment?—A. Chief—

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I do not know the purpose of this testimony. The counsel for the respondent is now asking by whom he was recommended as proper material to be Federal judge of the northern district of California.

Mr. LINFORTH. May I add just a word, Mr. President? I want to be very brief. I just want the witness to state, for the information of the trial court, those who sponsored him who were judges at the time of his appointment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not occur to the Chair that the Senate is particularly interested about who recommended the judge. The important fact is that he was appointed and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. LINFORTH. Then I withdraw the question.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Would you please state, in your own way, but briefly, your relations with W. S. Leake from the time you first became acquainted with him down to the 21st of September 1929?—A. I heard my father and others speak of Mr. W. S. Leake prior to 1918, but I met Mr. Leake in that year. My aunt, who lived at the Fairmont Hotel from 1914 until her death, in 1929, made her residence at the Fairmont Hotel. I visited her in 1918, and through her was introduced to Mr. W. S. Leake. I had a casual, friendly acquaintance with Mr. Leake from that time up to about 1926, at which time I was a candidate for a second term for the position of judge of the superior court. At that time our friendship became more close. He gave me many helpful suggestions in connection with my campaign at that time. The following year I was selected by my associated judges, there being 16 departments of the superior court in San Francisco, as the presiding judge of that court, and during that year that I was presiding judge I gave Mr. W. S. Leake six or seven small receiverships. The total amount of fees which I gave, and the judges in whose departments the cases afterward went gave, was less than $1,000. I also gave him two appraiserships, one an appraisership in connection with a homestead, in which he received $5, and another appraisership which was the estate of Brickell, which I recall very well, as it was a contest over a will, and the estate amounted to over $1,000,000, and I believe Mr. Leake received a fee, or, rather, received compensation of $500 in that case.

Q. Would you state, in your own way, briefly, how you came to reside at the Fairmont Hotel, and the manner in which your bills at that hotel were paid?—A. Due to certain domestic difficulties, on September 21, 1929, I left my home at 666 Post Street, and I went up to the Fairmont Hotel with the intention of securing a room there. When I arrived at the hotel I came in contact with Mr. W. S. Leake. I told him of my difficulties, and I did not care to have my domestic affairs to become notorious at that time, and said that I was afraid that when I registered the newspapers would come out with a statement that Judge Louderback was registered at the Fairmont Hotel and his wife was still living at the family home. He said that he had a room in the Fairmont Hotel, a cheap room, in the bachelors' section, which he had been using on occasions to rest during the illness of his wife, which had been going on for some time, and he suggested that I could take that room if I wished, which was in his name; that he could arrange with the hotel authorities in that way, and that I would not, therefore, have that registration in my name. He left me and went over to the desk, and later came back with a bell boy, and told me he had arranged it, and my baggage was taken down to room 26, a room in the Fairmont which I have been—which I have had the use of ever since that time to the present day.

Q. Have you stated the full circumstances under which you started to occupy room 26?—A. I believe I have.

Q. What is the rent of room 26?—A. The rent of room 26 for me was $75 a month. I arranged with Mr. Leake that monthly I would pay that rent to him, plus any additional amounts which were charged against the room. In other words, if I ate in the dining room, I would sign the tag in my own name for room 26. That would be charged against the room. Any washing or any other—tailoring and such matters, would be charged against the room, and I would pay for that, with the $75, at the end of each month, as Mr. Leake requested.

Q. Did you, during your entire stay there, following the inception of that arrangement, monthly pay the full bills charged to that room?—A. I have.

Q. Did you make those payments in cash, or by check?—A. Except in a few instances, I think probably 7 or 8 during this entire time, I paid them by check, which was made out in the name of Mr. W. S. Leake for the amount charged against the room. I have the checks with me. I have 34 of them.

Q. Would you please produce those checks?

(The witness produced several checks and handed them to counsel.)

Q. Do these checks show upon the back of them the stamp of the Fairmont Hotel?—A. I think that all but three show the stamp of the Fairmont Hotel.

Mr. LINFORTH. We offer the checks as part of the testimony of the witness, but we do not insist upon them being printed in the record.

Mr. HANLEY. Photostat copies have already been furnished the managers.

The WITNESS. I might reply, in reply to the statement Mr. Hanley just made, that at the time I gave those checks to the House committee, I had not found among my papers all of those checks. I think I only gave the House committee 20, and I subsequently found the others.

(The checks referred to were handed by counsel to Senator ROBINSON of Arkansas and Senator MCKELLAR.)

Mr. LINFORTH. Senators, do you wish me to suspend while you examine the checks?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Oh, no.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Did you at any time determine to acquire a residence in a place other than San Francisco?—A. I did.

Q. When did you determine to acquire such a residence?—A. About the 1st of April 1930, I having been separated for a number of months from Mrs. Louderback, I decided that the separation probably would be permanent. I had my residence then at 666 Post Street, and from that point I was voting in San Francisco. On the 6th of April of the same year I was invited by my brother and his wife to come over to their home, at 107 Ardmore Road, Kensington district, Contra Costa County, for the purpose of participating in a dinner upon the event of the anniversary of my brother's birthday. I went over that day, and when I arrived at their home my brother had not come back from the university. I spoke to my sister-in-law, Mrs. Clara Louderback, and asked her if it would be agreeable, did she think, to her and my brother, if I again made my home with them, I having made my home with them for 3 years in the city of Reno, Nev., when I was living up in the mountains. She told me she was sure that my brother would be pleased, and that she would be delighted to have me make my home with them.

Later in the day my brother returned, and we three took up the matter of my making my home and residence with them. My brother said it would be most pleasing indeed if I would do so. They took me into the room, one of the rooms in their home, and asked me if it would be satisfactory and suggested certain changes in there so as to be suitable for me. They also gave me a key to the house.

A few days later I sent over from San Francisco the bulk of my possessions that I had, consisting of two trunks, with personal effects. On the 17th of April I went to the registrar of voters in San Francisco, and I canceled my registration there. On the 18th I came over with an automobile trunk and some hand baggage, went over to Martinez, which is the county seat of Contra Costa County, and registered as a voter in that county at 107 Ardmore Road, Kensington district, Contra Costa County.

I returned to the home. That night I slept at my brother's home, which was then my home. During the night there came upon me a very, very severe attack of asthma, and in the morning I went to my work, went across the bay in a very bad condition. The next night I returned, and this time I had a more severe attack of asthma, so much so that for a number of days I was not able to free myself from it, and my work was sadly impaired during that period because of my condition. It followed me through my work in the daytime and even through the night, so that I did not return after that second day to the home at that time.

I thought perhaps if I could get rid of the asthma and perhaps go there in a better condition that maybe I would be able to sleep there, and about the first week or so of May I again returned and again I had this paroxysm of asthma. In the morning I remember my sister-in-law had made a breakfast especially for me, but I was not able to eat because of the condition. I then remained away for a number of days and tried it again, and again the asthma came upon me and I was unable to sleep, and I went away with the asthma upon me.

Since that time I have never slept at my brother's residence, but on a number of times I have gone over there with the intention of staying overnight, and before midnight the asthma has come upon me with such force that I have been compelled to go across the bay to San Francisco so that I would not augment the condition that I was in.

Q. Is the home of your brother surrounded by flowers and plants?—A. My brother has quite an extensive garden on one side of his home and in the rear.

Q. And are there also house plants in the house?—A. He has. He has house plants in several rooms of the house.

Q. Is there a pet cat there?—A. There is.

Q. When you went to your brother's home with the intention of making that your residence did you do that in the utmost good faith?—A. I did.

Q. Did you then and there determine to fix that place as the place of your residence?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we do not object to reasonable limitations—

Mr. LINFORTH. The question is withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is withdrawn.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. What was your intention in going to your brother's home?—A. To make a fixed place of abode.

Q. Of whom did your brother's family consist at that time?—A. My brother's family consisted of his wife and himself.

Q. Have you at all times since had your personal effects at the home of your brother?—A. I have.

Q. Have you on occasion, since you went to the home of your brother, registered in Contra Costa County?—A. I believe I did register a second time.

Q. I ask permission to withdraw the question. Have you voted in that county?—A. I have.

Q. On how many occasions have you voted in the county since that registration?—A. I can recall five instances.

Q. And what is the latest instance in which you have voted there?—A. The last general election. I might state that I always vote; I never recall missing an election.

Q. During the time that you have been at your brother's home, subsequent to the making of the arrangement you have referred to, have you retained the room in the Fairmont Hotel?—A. I have.

Q. And for what purpose?—A. Well, because when I first went across the bay and had the asthma I retained it to see whether it would be necessary to have a room of that kind where I could go, where I would not be subject to the asthma, and I also have retained it because not being able to sleep at home, I wanted a place where I could sleep.

Q. When you canceled your registration as a voter in San Francisco, did you do that with the utmost good faith?—A. I did.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We object to that, Mr. President. We suggest that counsel knows better than to ask that character of question, with all respect.

Mr. LINFORTH. I want to add, in reply to that remark, that counsel does not know better. The charge made here is that the judge willfully and fraudulently brought about the cancellation of this registration and the new registration in the county of Contra Costa. His good faith is attacked by the charge made, and I submit to you, Mr. President and the honorable Senate, that where his good faith is an issue the question is proper.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We suggest, Mr. President, that we have not charged any cancellation of the residence of this defendant in Contra Costa County, because we think he never had a residence there.

We submit further that in the relationship of this respondent to this investigation he ought not to be led by counsel for the respondent, regardless of the circumstances.

Mr. LINFORTH. Just one word in reply. The article of impeachment charges the respondent with acquiring a false registration in Contra Costa County as the result of a conspiracy entered into by him and Mr. W. S. Leake. We say that includes a charge of bad faith which we have a right to meet.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Oh, yes; we charge an absence of good faith insofar as the Contra Costa residence is concerned.

Mr. LINFORTH. I submit the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems to the Chair that he is a very capable witness. Counsel may merely ask him to state the facts, and the Senate will draw their own deduction as to whether his action was in good faith or not.

Mr. LINFORTH. We will gladly follow the suggestion of the Presiding Officer.

We offer at this time as a part of the examination of the witness a certified copy of the cancellation of the registration of the witness in San Francisco, and ask that it may be marked as an exhibit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be made a part of the record.

The exhibit admitted in evidence is as follows:

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Will you please state, in your own way, the circumstances concerning the appointment of Addison G. Strong as receiver and the circumstances concerning his removal?—

A. On March 11, Tuesday—formerly I thought it was Monday, the 10th, but on reflection I believe it was on Tuesday—there came to my chambers Mr. Max Thelen and Mr. Marrin, attorneys representing the petitioner; Mr. Brown, representing the firm of De Lancey Smith & Brown, representing the defendant; Mr. Lloyd Dinkelspiel, of the firm of Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe, the attorneys for the stock exchange; and Mr. Addison Strong. They presented to me a petition in equity requesting the appointment of a receiver and also an answer admitting the facts set up in the petition. I read the papers and they urged at that time that a receivership be undertaken, and recommended Mr. Addison Strong as receiver in the matter.

I stated to Mr. Strong, "If I should appoint you, you will be the representative of the court; you will not be the representative of any particular person; and although you are being proposed by these gentlemen you will be a court officer, and I expect you to confer with me and accept my advice." I asked him, "Are any of the attorneys present your attorneys?" He said, "No." "Have you an attorney?" He said he had not. I said, "Will you consult with me in the selection of attorneys?" He said he would. I said, "Then I am inclined to make the appointment."

At this time I do not know who brought it to my attention, but the information was brought to me that there was another petition filed in this matter, and I had it sent for and brought to me. I discovered that this petition was similar in the body of it to the petition which was in my department; that it preceded in number, being an earlier assignment than the petition in my department, and was assigned to Judge St. Sure. I then said to the gentlemen, "I am not willing to appoint in my department, inasmuch as this petition, preceding mine, is in Judge St. Sure's, and I will take it up with Judge St. Sure." Judge St. Sure at that time was at Sacramento, and I said that I could take it up with him by using the telephone. They then tried to urge me to act on my own petition, but I said, "If you wish me to act upon my petition, then it will be necessary to dismiss the petition in Judge St. Sure's department." They said they would then dismiss it.

Then I told them that I wanted a bond in the amount of $50,000 running from the plaintiff in favor of any creditor who might be injured by the appointment of a receiver in this case. I also wanted a bond of $50,000 on the part of the receiver to guarantee his acts while receiver. It was either at that time or a short time subsequent—and I do not know who took the matter up with me—that they urged me to reduce this bond to a lower figure, as it was impossible for them to secure a bond in that size, and I consented and agreed to have the plaintiff's bond reduced to $10,000.

After I had agreed to appoint Mr. Strong they left my chambers, and that afternoon, some time after 4 o'clock—I do not know who came to my chambers to advise me, whether it was one of the attorneys in this matter or whether I got the information from the clerk's office or my secretary—but I was advised that they had had difficulty in securing the bond and that they would not be able to qualify Mr. Strong until after the usual hour of the clerk's office, which is until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and did I want the clerk's office kept open? I sent word by whomever it was that came to me to the clerk's office that I desired the clerk's office to remain open. Some time about 5 o'clock that afternoon Mr. Strong returned with some of the attorneys—I think all of them were there, but I am not positive—and I signed the order for the appointment of the receiver. I signed the approval of the two bonds, the plaintiff's bond and the receiver's bond, and as Mr. Strong left to go to the clerk's office for the purpose of taking the oath which qualified him as receiver I told him, "As soon as you have qualified, return here." I remained in my chambers, keeping my secretary and crier there with me until 6 o'clock, and Mr. Strong had not returned. I then sent my crier out to find out what became of him, and I was advised that the clerk's office at that time was closed; everybody was gone. I directed my secretary to call up the office of Mr. Strong at that time. She did, but got no reply.

Mr. LINFORTH. Judge, let me interrupt at this point. Was that the first instance during the time you were Federal judge where you knew of a double filing?

The WITNESS. It was the first instance I had ever heard of.

Q. Did you know personally Addison G. Strong, the receiver?—A. I did not.

Q. Did they at that time make any statement to you as to what his connection was or had been with the Russell-Colvin Co. and with the San Francisco Stock Exchange?—A. Yes; at the first conversation that I had on Tuesday they stated that Mr. Strong was the auditor, as I recall, for the stock exchange and had acted in his line of business in connection with the Russell-Colvin Co.

Q. Have you now stated, as briefly but as fully as you can, the details of the first day relating to the Russell-Colvin matter?—A. I believe I have.

Q. Will you please now state to the Presiding Officer and the members of the court what happened on the second day, Wednesday, the 12th of March?—A. On the next day I directed my secretary to call again Mr. Strong. She informed me that he was not at his office, but that she had left word that I wanted to see him. My recollection is that the first person I saw in this connection was Mr. Jerome White. It may be possible, as to the sequence, whether I saw White before I saw Mr. Strong, I may be in error, and it may be I saw Mr. Strong on two instances that day before I saw Mr. White; but my recollection is that Mr. White was at my office in the morning first.

Q. Who was Mr. White?—A. Mr. White was one of the partners of the firm of Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe, the attorneys for the stock exchange.

Q. May I interrupt and ask you up to that time had your relations with that firm always been friendly?—A. As far as I know, they were. So far as I am personally concerned they were.

Q. Please continue with your conversation with Mr. White.—A. Mr. White stated that he had in a brief case which he was carrying a petition requesting the appointment of his firm as attorneys for Addison G. Strong as receiver. I told Mr. White that Mr. Strong had been instructed by me the night before to return as soon as he qualified, and that he had not returned and I had not had an opportunity to see him. I also told him that I had instructed Mr. Strong that before he petitioned for any attorney he was to consult with me. He said, "Surely you would not question the standing of our firm?" I said, "I am not questioning the standing of your firm, but I am unwilling to take this matter up with you until I have taken up the matter with Mr. Strong and settled it."

Q. Was that the substance of your talk with Mr. White?—A. It was.

Q. Did you then on that day have an interview with Mr. Strong?—A. Mr. Strong came in in the morning before court, and I asked him why he had not returned the preceding evening. He told me that he did not fully understand that I wanted him to return; that after qualifying he had gone away with some attorneys, and while he was walking to his office it came to him that he ought to have an attorney, and it also occurred to him that the firm of Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe was a very desirable firm; so he went to their office and he found there Mr. McAuliffe, and he took up the matter with Mr. McAuliffe and told him about his receivership. He asked Mr. McAuliffe if he would act for him, his firm, and he said he would.

I then said to Mr. Strong, "That is just what I feared would happen," and if he had only returned the preceding evening this embarrassing situation would not have arisen. I told him that before I appointed him I had told him that he was an officer of the court and he must follow my instructions, and that I had received from him his assurance that he would consult with me before he would select an attorney, and he had not done it. Furthermore, that he had selected as his attorneys the firm of Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe, which were the attorneys for the stock exchange, and he was the auditor for the stock exchange. I said, "It looks too much like one family, and I am not willing to approve of that selection."

He urged me to permit him to have that selection, saying that he had unusual confidence in that firm and he thought the receiver should have the right to have the man as his attorney that he had confidence in, and he thought that firm was the best qualified firm for the particular kind of business which this receiver would be in.

Having reached an impasse in that way, Mr. Strong finally said to me, "Well, who do you suggest?" I said, "I suggest Mr. Strong, of Keyes & Erskine." He said, "I never heard of such a firm."

Q. Just a moment. You said "Mr. Strong." Did you mean that?—A. I meant Mr. Short—pardon me—John Douglas Short. He said, "I never heard of such a firm." He said, "There are very few lawyers that are capable of handling this type of case." "Oh", I said, "I do not think they are so limited as you think. I think there are quite a number of lawyers who are capable of handling it, and, besides that, the responsibility rests upon me." I said then, "Well, I will suggest first the firm of Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro." He said he did not wish to have them as his attorneys. I said, "What about the firm of Sullivan, Sullivan & Roche?" "No; they would not do." "What about Cushing & Cushing?" "No; he would not have anyone but that one firm, which he felt he had such confidence in and which he felt he was entitled to select."

Q. Let me interrupt at this point. Were the three firms that you have mentioned reputable, outstanding firms practicing in San Francisco?—A. I felt when I named them that they were not to be excelled by any other firm in San Francisco.

Q. Was one of the firms you mentioned the firm of which Senator Johnson is a partner?—A. He is now a partner of the firm of Sullivan, Sullivan & Roche, under a different name. I believe it is Sullivan, Roche, Johnson & Barry.

Q. Please proceed in your own way to state the rest of the conversation.—A. Mr. Strong next requested that he be given permission to think the matter over, and I told him that he could, and he went away. Sometime later in the morning Mr. Strong returned and again took the same position as before. He urged that he had a right to select his attorney, and that he had a right to have one that he had confidence in. But we reached the same position at that conference that we had in the preceding one, and he again went away, and he did not return that day.

Q. In that connection, did you say anything to him in the way of forbidding him to consult counsel?—A. In the first meeting I had with him—no; I did not; but I may state that I left out something. In the first meeting I had with him I said to him this, he having stood firmly on the matter of his counsel. I said, "Mr. Strong, have you yet taken into your possession any of the property of the estate?" He said, "I have not." I said, "Then until this matter is settled I do not wish you to do so." I said, "I do not want you to go any farther with the employing of this firm." That is the only thing I referred to in regard to the attorney. I did not forbid him taking up the matter of the issue he was having with me.

Q. Did he at any time before you removed him as receiver suggest the name of Lloyd Ackerman or ask you if Lloyd Ackerman would be satisfactory?—A. He did not.

Q. Did you at any time say to him in words or substance, "Do you realize what a plum you have taken; that the fees will be between $10,000 and $80,000"?—A. I did not.

Q. When you left the courthouse on the evening of Wednesday, the 12th of March, did you have any talk with Mr. W. S. Leake about this matter; and if so, where did the talk take place?—A. I did. The talk took place in the lobby of the Fairmont Hotel.

Q. Would you please state briefly the conversation you had with Mr. Leake at that time?—A. When Mr. Strong did not return on that Wednesday afternoon I went up to the Fairmont Hotel and I met there in the lobby Mr. W. S. Leake. I talked to him about what had transpired in this case. I said to Mr. Leake, "Could you suggest to me someone who is qualified to occupy a receivership of this kind?" He said, "I cannot think of anybody at this time. How soon do you have to know?" I said, "By tomorrow morning would undoubtedly do."

Just about that time, or just at that time, Mr. Hunter—whom I afterward knew as Mr. Hunter—passed through the lobby and stopped at the desk at the hotel. Mr. Leake said, "There is a man that would suit. He has already acted as receiver in some matter across the bay. He is the head man at Cavalier & Co." I said, "Is that the H. B. Hunter that was in the Security receivership?" He said, "Yes." I said, "If that is the man, I think that would be the type of man that would do." So he crossed over and stood and talked with Mr. Hunter for something like 10 or 15 minutes and came back and said, "Mr. Hunter said that he would be willing to receive such an appointment if it was open to him, but before he could definitely state he would have to take it up with his firm, with Mr. Cavalier, and that he would do so the following morning, and that he would let me know."

Q. Is that the substance of your talk with Mr. Leake on that occasion?—A. It is as far as I recall now.

Q. Was that talk had by you after the work of the day was over and after you had gone to the Fairmont Hotel?—A. That is correct, in the evening somewhere around 5 o'clock.

Q. The next day, the 13th of March 1930, did you have any talk with Mr. Strong or with any of the attorneys that you have mentioned?—A. I did.

Q. Would you please go on in your own way and state what the conversations were and with whom they were?—A. When I arrived in the morning at my chambers, about 9 o'clock, I asked Miss Berger if she had heard anything from Mr. Strong and she said, "No; Mr. Strong was not there." I then made up my mind that the probability was that I would have to remove Mr. Strong. I said, "Notify Messrs. Thelen & Marrin and Mr. Brown so that they can be here at my chambers this morning." In the morning, somewhere in the latter part of the morning, Mr. Marrin, Mr. Thelen, and Mr. Brown appeared at my chambers.

Q. Let me interrupt at this point. What was your object in desiring to see them?—A. Inasmuch as I had appointed Mr. Strong upon their recommendation and suggestion I wanted to tell them the situation that had arisen between me and Mr. Strong and why it was probable that I would have to remove him. I thought in fairness to them that I would give them the information and see what they would have to say.

Q. Now, please proceed with the conversation.—A. I also, I might state, at the same time notified my secretary to tell Mr. Strong to come at a subsequent appointment to my chambers. I related to these attorneys my difficulties that I had had with Mr. Strong. I told them of his failure to return, and I told them of his insistence upon retaining the firm of Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe, the attorneys for the stock exchange. I said that I had offered him other counsel, and he had refused to accept other counsel; and I said that even the signing of the petition by Strong was an affront to me.

Q. What petition did you then refer to, when you said the signing of the petition was an affront to you?—A. The petition for the employment of an attorney.

Q. What attorney?—A. The firm of Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe.

Q. Please proceed now with the conversation.—A. I told them that in the event that I retained my present attitude at that time—which I felt that I would remove Mr. Strong—that I was considering a man by the name of H. B. Hunter. They immediately stated that they had never heard of H. B. Hunter. I then advised them that Mr. H. B. Hunter, I understood, was the head man of Cavalier & Co. He was also a man that had had experience as a receiver in a case that involved transactions of a similar type. I also told them that Mr. Hunter at one time had been the assistant to the president of the stock exchange, Mr. Sidney L. Schwartz, and I felt if they referred to Mr. Schwartz that he would recommend Mr. Hunter.

Mr. Brown took upon himself the major part of urging me to retain Mr. Strong. He felt that Mr. Strong was unusually adapted for this work, inasmuch as he had familiarity in connection with the Russell-Colvin case, already having gone through their accounts; but I told him that I was unwilling to do so—that it was too much of a family affair.

I then said that I would give them an opportunity, if they wished, to dismiss the case, if it was embarrassing to them. I said it was embarrassing to me under the circumstances that had arisen. They said that they could not do that; they wanted to go ahead. I said, "Well, then, look into the standing and the qualifications of Mr. Hunter; and I will give you until 4 o'clock in the afternoon to make that investigation. If you find anything about Mr. Hunter which would disqualify him for this position, let me know"; and they went away.

Q. Let me ask you at this point, did you then or at any time tell them or any of them that Mr. Schwartz had recommended Mr. Hunter?—A. I did not. The only reference to Mr. Schwartz was as I said, and was for the purpose of indicating to them certain sources or places where they could secure information concerning Mr. H. B. Hunter, of whom they expressed an ignorance.

Q. After your interview with them, did you then see Mr. Strong?—A. I did. Immediately upon their retirement Mr. Strong came into my chambers. I asked him, "Mr. Strong, what is the situation now?" He said, "I am determined to nominate these attorneys as my attorneys." I said, "Under those circumstances, Mr. Strong, you should resign." He said, "I have been advised by Mr. McAuliffe not to resign. I have been advised by him that you cannot remove me unless for cause, and I am going to take his advice in all matters in connection with the receivership, and not your advice." I said, "Under those circumstances, Mr. Strong, I have no further use for you, and I am going to remove you at this time"; and I took from my desk an order which I had already prepared, anticipating its possible use, signed it, walked out of my chambers into the secretary's room, in which was sitting my secretary and the crier, and said to the crier, "Place this order of record removing Mr. Strong as receiver."

Q. Did you take him by the arm at all?—A. I did not.

Q. Was there any anger displayed during that interview by you?—A. There was not.

Q. Did you at that time tell him, "You are fired" or "You are canned"?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I think in the circumstances it would be well for the witness to detail what occurred.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, it has been testified that the witness upon the stand used the expressions, "You are fired", "You are canned." We surely have a right to repeat that testimony and show whether or not any such expressions were used.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the managers on the part of the House object only to the leading of the witness by counsel for the respondent; but the Chair repeats that this is a very intelligent witness, and the Chair is sure he can give the facts without being led by counsel. Counsel will refrain from leading the witness.

Mr. LINFORTH. Forgive me for my offense, Mr. President, and I will try in the future to avoid it.

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Was any reference made by you at that time in which the word "fired" or "canned" was used?—A. There was not.

Q. After you had signed the order for the removal of Mr. Strong did you have any communication with Thelen & Marrin's office or Smith & Brown's office?—A. I did.

Q. Will you please state what it was?—A. I had my secretary call up both those gentlemen, and I spoke over the phone with Mr. Thelen—I believe it was Mr. Thelen and not Mr. Marrin, but it was one of the two—and I spoke with Mr. Brown. They told me that they had made an investigation relative to Mr. Hunter and they had found nothing which would disqualify him from receiving the position of receiver, although Mr. Brown stated that he was unwilling to take the attitude of approving anyone else but Mr. Strong.

Q. Did you that day receive any word from Mr. Leake bearing on the subject of Mr. Hunter?—A. I did. I received word from Mr. Leake to the effect that Mr. Hunter was available.

Q. What, if any, word or message did you give to him in regard to seeing Mr. Hunter?—A. I requested him to tell Mr. Hunter to come out to my chambers, so that I might take up with him the matter of his appointment. I also told him at the same time that I had removed Mr. Addison Strong.

Q. Did you later that day see Mr. Hunter?—A. I did. He came out.

Q. When did you see him?—A. In the latter part of that afternoon. He came out accompanied, as I recall it, by a man from some bonding company; and I made the order, approved the bond, and Mr. Hunter qualified, I understand, that afternoon.

Q. In the selection and appointment of Mr. Hunter, were you influenced in any way or by any person other than you have testified to?—A. I was not.

Q. Did Mr. W. S. Leake demand of you the appointment of Mr. Hunter?—A. He did not.

Q. In the allowance of fees to Mr. Hunter as receiver, and in the allowance of fees to the attorneys, were you influenced in any way or to any extent except by the record made in open court, the papers on file, and the testimony which you heard?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you participate to the extent of a single cent in any allowance made to Mr. Hunter or to his attorneys?—A. Decidedly not.

Q. How long had you known John Douglas Short and the firm of Keyes & Erskine?—A. I knew the firm of Keyes & Erskine almost from the time that I started to practice law. I knew Mr. Keyes quite well. I knew Mr. Herbert Erskine casually. I did not know Mr. Morse Erskine at all until the Russell-Colvin matter. Mr. Short I became acquainted with after I had taken up room 26 at the Fairmont. Mr. Short I saw on several occasions, and was introduced to him. His father-in-law, Mr. Hathaway, was a resident of the Fairmont Hotel with whom I was acquainted.

Q. Did you examine the work done by those lawyers, as shown by the records of your court?—A. I had.

Q. State whether or not it met with your approval.—A. It did.

Q. Do you know G. H. Gilbert?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him for over 12 years.

Q. Will you please state as briefly as possible the extent of your relationship with him?—A. I met Mr. Gilbert at the Scottish Rite Auditorium, of which bodies he and I are both members. I also know that he was interested in my campaigns to the extent that when I met him at these fraternal meetings he would ask me for election cards that he might distribute them among his friends; but my acquaintanceship was most casual. It was not social. I had never been to his home. He had never been to mine. I had never had a meal with him anywhere, and I had never gone about with him or met him anywhere except in that fraternal way that I speak of.

Q. In the 8 years that you were on the trial bench, the superior court bench of San Francisco, and the 5 years that you were on the Federal bench in how many receiverships did you appoint him?—A. I appointed him in four receiverships.

Q. Did you appoint him in any while you were on the trial bench of the superior court?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you recall his appointment as one of the appraisers in the Brickell estate?—A. I do.

Q. Did you make any order for his compensation in that matter except the order settling the final account?—A. I did not, unless you allude to the order appointing him originally.

Mr. LINFORTH. We offer at this time, if the court please, a certified copy of the first and final account of the Crocker First Federal Trust Co., special administrator of the estate of Howard Brickell, deceased, and a certified copy of the order of the court settling that account; and we call attention to the following items on page 9 under date of December 1, 1927:

Paid the following for services in appraising the estate of Howard Brickell, deceased:

R. F. Morgan, $750.

W. S. Leake, $500.

G. H. Gilbert, $500.

(The certified copy of the first and final account above referred to was marked "U.S.S. Exhibit S.")

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. May we see that?

Mr. LINFORTH. Certainly.

(The paper was handed to Mr. Manager SUMNERS.)

By Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Upon whose testimony did you settle that account?—

A. Upon the testimony of the trust officer of the First Federal Trust Co., which was associated with the Crocker National Bank.

Q. Briefly, in a word, what was his testimony as to the correctness of that account?—A. His testimony was to the effect that it was true and correct.

Q. Did you believe and rely upon that testimony?—A. I did.

Q. Was there any opposition made by anyone to it?—A. There was not.

Q. At that time did you know or did you have any information at all on the subject of what service had been rendered by any one of the three appraisers?—A. I did not. The circumstance was merely this: That in those probate accounts they are properly noticed, they come before the court, you look over the account in a casual way, and where there is no opposition, and the man who goes upon the stand to verify them testifies to their truth, it is more or less a formality.

Q. Did you participate to the extent of a single cent in any fees Mr. Gilbert received in any matters in which you had appointed him?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you familiar, from the records and files of your court, with the services he rendered as receiver in the four cases to which you have referred?—A. I am.

Q. Did those services meet with your approval?—A. They did.

Q. Will you please state how long you have known the firm of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel?—A. I knew Mr. Dinkelspiel, the father, casually from the time I started to practice law, but I never knew his sons, either John Walton Dinkelspiel or Martin Dinkelspiel, until the time of the Sonora Phonograph case.

Q. Has either one of them ever been a political friend of yours?—A. He has not.

Q. Do you know, and did you know at the time you appointed them as attorneys for receivers, their standing at the bar of California?—A. I knew their reputation as being one of the firms most fitted for work in regard to bankruptcy and receiverships.

Q. In how many cases during the 13 years you were on the bench did you appoint them as attorneys in any matters?—A. Four times.

Q. Can you state what the four cases were?—A. The Sonora Phonograph Co., the Prudential Holding Co., the Golden State Asparagus Co., and the Fageol Motors Co.

Q. Are you familiar with the work they did in those matters as shown by the files of your court?—A. I am.

Q. Did that work so done by them meet with your approval?—A. It did.

Q. Did you participate to the extent of a single dime in any fees allowed to them in any matters?—A. Not to the extent of a cent.

Q. Calling your attention to the Prudential Holding Co. case, so-called, will you state under what circumstances you appointed the receiver in that case?—A. There came to my chambers a Mr. Kearsley, an attorney from Los Angeles, and Mr. J. H. Stephens. They presented to me a petition requesting the appointment of a receiver. I went over the petition and read it and asked Mr. Kearsley concerning it, and he told me such facts as he had concerning the matter. He introduced Mr. J. H. Stephens as the vice president of the defendant company, and I said to Mr. Stephens, "Are you acquainted with the facts set forth in this petition?" He said, "Yes." I said, "Are they true?" He said, "They are." "Well", I said, "what do you feel about it?" He said, "I think something ought to be done." I said, "Well, do you approve of this receivership going upon your company?" He said, "Yes; I think it ought to be done."

At that time I thought it was a friendly suit in which the plaintiff and defendant were agreeable and willing to have the receivership entered into.

Q. When you made that order did you have any knowledge or information in regard to Mr. Stephens' connection with the company other than what you have narrated?—A. I did not.

Q. Were any fees ever allowed by you to either attorney or receiver in that matter?—A. They were not. My order precluded that.

Q. How long have you known Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr.?—A. I have known him for about 12 years in a very casual way.

Q. While you were State judge, during the period of 8 years, did you make any appointment to him of any kind?—A. I did not.

Q. In the 5 years you have been Federal judge in how many cases has he received appointments from you?—A. In two instances.

Q. What two?—A. In Blanchard v. Lane and in Lay v. The Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association.

Q. Will you please state how he happened to be appointed by you in those two cases?—A. In both instances the parties litigant, in writing, requested his appointment.

Q. Did you consider him competent to act as receiver in each case?—A. I did.

Q. Did you fix his compensation in either case?—A. Yes; in one case.

Q. Which?—A. Lay v. The Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association.

Q. At what amount did you fix his compensation?—A. With the approval and consent of the plaintiff and defendant in the action, I fixed his compensation on account at $6,000—$3,000 in two instances, making six.

Q. Did you at that time honestly believe such amount to be the reasonable value of the service rendered?—A. I did.

Q. Did you receive one dime of the compensation received by Samuel M. Shortridge, Jr.?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you fix his fee in the Lane case, so-called?—A. I did not.

Q. You have in mind the order which has been offered in evidence of date December 15, 1931, which contains the proviso order, so-called?—A. I have.

Q. Was that order made by you after the settlement of the final account of the receiver, Mr. Shortridge?—A. It was.

Q. What order did you make or announce orally in court, if any, upon the submission of that matter?—A. There were something like 52 objections to the account as prepared and presented by the receiver. I do not recall my rulings on the various 52 propositions. I know in some instances I decided in favor of the opposition, but my final order was to the effect that the funds and properties of the estate should be turned over as directed in the mandate of the circuit court, and I settled the account on the objections.

Q. Just diverting a minute from that case, heretofore I have asked you whether or not you received any money out of any of these fees. May I ask you, in one general question, did you receive any compensation, no matter in what form, out of any of these fees which have been referred to here?—A. I have not.

Q. Would you state to the Presiding Officer and the members of the court the circumstances under which you signed that order as of December 15 in the Lay case containing the proviso order or condition?—A. The formal order in the Lay case settling the accounts was brought to me by Mr. Marshall Woodworth. I read it over and came to that part of the order which consisted of the proviso, and I asked him why that proviso appeared in the order. He told me that he had been negotiating with Mr. Guereña for some time relative to a bond which would be furnished by Mr. Guereña's client at the time the funds were turned over by the receiver to his client.

We discussed the question. I asked him if there was going to be an appeal, in his opinion, and he seemed to be in doubt as to that point, and I got the impression he thought there would not be. But he said that pending this settlement about the bond, because they had come to the conclusion there should be a bond, but not as to the amount, he would like to have this proviso in effect.

I signed the order, and after Mr. Woodworth had gone away, it occurred to me what was the purpose of the order, and I felt that that order was erroneous, and I sent for Mr. Woodworth and I said to Mr. Woodworth, "I believe that that proviso is erroneous and should be stricken from the order." He said, "Judge, I am willing to do anything you say if you feel that way, although I do not agree with you." I said, "However, since an appeal has been taken, I have grave doubts if I have authority to modify the order by striking out that proviso. Can you not arrange a stipulation for that purpose which I will approve?" He said he thought he could, and he went away, and he came back with a stipulation on the part of all parties, as I have suggested, setting aside the proviso, and I signed my order in conformity to that stipulation which he secured. I think the order was erroneous, and I at that time thought so, when I spoke to Mr. Woodworth.

Q. In the making of that order of December 15, did you have any thought or intention of defying the mandate of the court of appeals?—A. I did not.

Q. How long have you known Mr. Marshall Woodworth, and what has been the extent of your acquaintanceship with him?—A. I had heard of Mr. Woodworth prior to my selection as United States judge. In fact, I understood he was one of the candidates for the very position that I now occupy, but I never met Mr. Woodworth until after I was sworn in as United States district judge. I had only seen Mr. Woodworth as an attorney in and about the courts. He has a great deal of Federal court business in San Francisco, and I observed that he handled it in a very good manner.

Q. In how many matters have you made any appointment in his favor during the 8 years you were on the State bench and the 5 years you were on the Federal bench?—

A. Were it not for the testimony of Mr. Woodworth at this hearing, which I have not verified, in connection with the Pioneer Fruit Co., I would have said that I only appointed him in one instance, but he said that I appointed him attorney for the receiver in the Pioneer Fruit Co. case. I knew I did not appoint the receiver, and I did not think I appointed the attorney, but Mr. Woodworth probably is correct. In that event I appointed him in two cases.

Q. Did you receive or have you received, directly or indirectly, any part of any compensation that has been awarded to him in the two matters that you have referred to?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you know Mr. William C. Crook, who has been a witness here?—A. I do.

Q. Did you have any talk with him on the subject of his appointment as receiver in the Fageol case, so-called?—A. I did.

Q. When and where did that conversation take place and what was it?—A. One or two days before the petition in the Fageol case was presented to me, Mr. Crook called upon me at my chambers. I had known him from the year 1919, at which time I had met him in the Mechanics Mercantile Institute and had played draughts or checkers with him. He told me that a company in which he was employed as an accountant, that is, the Fageol Motors Co., he believed was going into an equity suit. He said that he was the choice of a Mr. Bill, the president, and, in fact, of all parties to the suit, and he wanted to know if this case came before me if I would appoint him receiver. I told him that I would make no promises in advance, but the fact of my acquaintanceship, of course, would not militate against him.

Q. Was his name presented when the application was filed and presented to you?—A. It was not, as far as I know, referred to; and I say that because the information I got was from my secretary, who advised me as to who was wanted by the various parties.

Q. Did you see him subsequently to the appointment of the receiver in that case?—A. I did.

Q. Did you at that time, in words or substance, say to him, "They double-crossed you, and I double-crossed them"?—A. I did not. The circumstances were as follows: I met him a day or so after the appointment in the corridor of the post-office building. He said to me, "What happened, Judge; what happened?" I said, "Step into my chambers, and I will talk to you." He said, "Why did you not appoint me receiver?" I said, "Mr. Crook, you were not even suggested by the parties for receiver." "Why", he said, "under those circumstances I have been double-crossed", and I said, "Apparently you have, from what you have told me."

Q. You have already said that you know Mr. Marrin. Did you at any time ever say to him, in words or substance, "These receiverships are the 'plums and sugar' in that business"?—A. I did not.

Q. Just a final question, Judge. In the discharge of your duties as judge of the superior court and in the discharge of your duties as judge of the Federal court, have you, at all times, to the extent of your ability, obeyed the oath of office which you took in each instance?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS rose.

The WITNESS. I have.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Wait a minute; we do not think that testimony is permissible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness has answered the question.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Very well; let it go.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will determine whether they want to take it into consideration.

Mr. LINFORTH. I asked the question because the Judge's good faith has been attacked.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We will let it go.

Mr. LINFORTH. You may take the witness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The managers on the part of the House will proceed with the cross-examination.

RECESS

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. Manager SUMNERS, will you pardon me for a moment? The judge has been on his feet for 2 hours. Would it be out of order, Mr. Vice President, to suggest a recess of about 5 minutes?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment take a recess for 5 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senate will stand in recess for 5 minutes.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 7 minutes p.m.) the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment took a recess for 5 minutes. At the expiration of the recess the Senate sitting as a court reassembled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Counsel for managers on the part of the House will proceed.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Judge Louderback, directing your attention first to the matter concerning which you testified at the conclusion of your direct examination, and that is in the State court, the Superior Court of the State of California, in the matter of the Brickell estate, who suggested, if anybody, Messrs. Leake and Gilbert?—A. No one suggested them. I acted on my own initiative.

Q. Did you believe that Mr. Gilbert was a proper man and qualified to act as an appraiser of that estate?—A. I did.

Q. Upon what did you base your opinion?—A. Because I thought from talking with him that he was a man of good judgment.

Q. Did you believe him to be a man of good information with regard to matters of that sort?—A. I thought so. I know that I, myself, when I was a young attorney, was appointed by Judge Coffey in the appraisership of real property and other property.

Q. Did you regard yourself as well qualified for that service?—A. I think I performed my services to the satisfaction of the court.

Q. How do you think Mr. Gilbert performed his services in this matter, or have you any information about it?—A. Since he has made the statement that he did as he did, as I understand he did not view the property, I would not approve of him doing such a limited amount of service, but accepting the recommendation of somebody else. I think the chances are, if I had known he had not done that, he probably would not have received any further appointments from me.

Q. Do you think it would have done any good if he had gone out and looked at the property?—A. I do not know that it is necessary—it is not always necessary to go and see the property, although I have as an appraiser done so, but I do think it is necessary to make a thorough investigation.

Q. The point I am getting at is: In your judgment, if Mr. Gilbert had looked at the property, in view of his testimony and in view of the known fact that he had spent his life operating telegraph instruments and supervising those who did, how did you conclude him to be a good man and a competent man to determine the value of real estate?—A. I think any man of intelligence can find out what the value of real estate is. Whether he is acquainted with values in any particular locality or not, he can make the proper inquiries.

Q. I want to get your notion. If you had wanted to purchase some real estate and to know the value of your contemplated purchase, would you have sought a man of Mr. Gilbert's information?—A. Not unless he had made investigation for that purpose and had reached a conclusion.

Q. Judge Louderback, do you not know, as a matter of fact, that at the time you appointed him he did not have any qualifications to discharge duties of that kind?—A. I did not know any such thing. I had met him and he impressed me as a young man of intelligence. I think the work which he has done as receiver verifies that.

Q. We will come to that a little later on. I want to get your notion about this appointment. Where do you live?—A. I live at 107—if you mean by living that that is my residence—107 Ardmore Road, Kensington district, Contra Costa County, Calif.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have lived there from on or about the 17th—perhaps it is better to say the 6th of April 1930.

Q. Where do you reside, to draw a distinction between where you live and where you reside?—A. If you mean where I sleep, I sleep frequently at the Fairmont Hotel.

Q. When you are not sleeping at your brother's home and not sleeping at the Fairmont Hotel, except in those instances where you go away on vacation or hold court out of San Francisco, where do you sleep?—A. I have no regular place of sleeping except the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco.

Q. I am not talking about a regular place of sleeping. I want to know where do you sleep?—A. I do not know what you mean.

Q. I mean when you go to sleep, when you shut your eyes, or snore, or something?—A. I have slept at the Hotel Fairmont and I do not know anything else you refer to.

Q. Did you stay at any other hotel in San Francisco?—A. I have. I have stayed at the Stewart Hotel on occasions.

Q. Was that during the time you were paying rent on room 26 in the Fairmont Hotel?—A. That is since I went over to Contra Costa County to make my home there.

Q. That is not my question. Was that since you were paying rent on room 26 in the Fairmont Hotel?—A. I believe so.

Q. Does anybody except yourself occupy room 26 in the Fairmont Hotel?—A. No. I do not know of anybody ever sleeping there except myself since the 21st day of September 1929.

Q. What was the reason or was there any reason other than those you have detailed as to why you went to room 26?—A. There was no other reason at the time I took room 26 other than I have expressed.

Q. Have you had any reason since you have been there for remaining there and remaining in a room registered in the name of Mr. Sam Leake?—A. There is no other reason for remaining in the room, but I presume what you are alluding to is some testimony I gave with regard to being registered at the hotel.

Q. No; I am just alluding to the fact.—A. I may state I presume you allude to some testimony I gave before the committee when I said that after I had secured my home in Contra Costa County I asked Mr. Leake if I could remain on in the room, using the room, without the necessity of changing the conditions where I was not registered; that I did not want to be registered there and—

Q. What rent do you pay for your room in Contra Costa County?—A. I pay nothing. My brother has never exacted anything from me.

Q. The only place where you pay anything for the privilege of living is in room 26 in the Fairmont Hotel?—A. May I have the question read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question will be read.
The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. The only place where you pay anything for the privilege of living is in room 26 in the Fairmont Hotel?

The WITNESS. That is correct so far as rent goes.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. What else do you pay other than rent? What do you mean by "so far as rent goes"?—A. I mean that is the only place I pay rent.

Q. I thought so.—A. I never have paid rent at my father's home nor do I pay rent at my brother's home and my home.

Q. You do not pay rent at your brother's home, because as a matter of honest-to-goodness fact you do not live over there, do you?—A. That is not true. If you mean by living over there, that is my domicile or my home.

Q. You have stayed there 4 nights in about 3 or 4 years, have you not?—A. Everything I have stated here regarding my presence there is true.

Q. Do you go there any more frequently now than you used to?—A. I go there once or twice a week on an average right straight along. It is necessary for me to do so because I have to go there, for instance, if I am going to use a tuxedo. My tuxedo is over there. If I wish to go away on a trip or in the summer, all my clothes are there.

Q. Why do you not keep your tuxedo where you live? It would be handier, would it not?—A. The reason why I keep my property there is because I look upon it as my home, and I have always hoped that I would be able to go over there and not have asthma. I may say very candidly I do not know what occasions my asthma at my brother's home. It may be the plants around there or it may be the fact that the hair and odor and dandruff of the cat cause it, because I know that that does cause asthmatics to have asthma.

Q. Have you discussed in your brother's family that maybe you or the cat, one or the other, cannot live there?—A. I certainly have, and the regrettable feature of it is that I do not like to change my brother's ways. The cat is a cat he has had something like 14 years, and is over there today and has the run of the house. At one time my sister-in-law thought perhaps if they had a vacuum system in the house that I would not be subject then to an asthma attack; but after they had gone to that trouble, on an evening I went there with the hope of staying overnight, asthma came on in the latter part of the evening and I went back to San Francisco.

Q. Is it not a fact, having tested the matter out over there, it was determined you could not live over there?—A. Under present conditions, apparently, I cannot.

Q. And do not?—A. I have not slept there, if you mean that. I have not slept in that place. I consider it my home. It is the only place I have to go back to; and in the event, for instance, as an example, that I was not able to pay rent at the hotel, there is the place I would go and live. I would have to whether I had asthma or not.

Q. As a judge passing on the question, would you hold it to be the home of a person who could not live at that place?—A. I understand residence once acquired remains with the person who acquires it until he acquires a new residence. In this case I did not transfer residence from the Fairmont Hotel—

Q. You do not think the tuxedo could change your residence?—A. Just a moment. I did not transfer my residence from the Fairmont Hotel to Ardmore Road. I transferred it from 666 Post Street, although I had been living more than 5 months at the Fairmont Hotel at the time.

Q. You stated the only reason you have for not registering at this hotel in the room which you occupy is because of a suit?—A. May I have the question read?

Q. May I reframe the question and ask another question? I think I will not pursue the question further. I will let it go.

Judge Louderback, is it not a fact, when you testified before the committee on the occasion that you came to Washington, you gave as one of the reasons for this arrangement and for not registering in this hotel "because registration is an element upon which to predicate residence, and I wanted to maintain residence in Contra Costa County, and I assure you gentlemen I believe that one reason why that suit was not instituted was because I have that residence, because it could have been transferred to Contra Costa County on account of the California laws"?—A. I recognize the fact that if any suit was instituted it could be transferred to Contra Costa County, and I gave the testimony—I do not know that it is exactly as you read it, but in substance along that line.

Q. In other words, if when you stopped at the Fairmont Hotel the register had shown the absolute fact, that probably could have been used to predicate a suit against you in San Francisco? Is that the fact?—A. I do not know about a suit against me, but that might have been an element on which to consider the matter of residence.

Q. And you avoided the possibility of the fact of your occupancy of room 26 becoming evidence from the hotel register, did you not?—A. The value of that thought did not become of any importance at the time I went to the Fairmont. As of that time I had no idea that the separation which had occurred would possibly become permanent, and it was for that reason that I went to the Fairmont and did not want to be registered, because I did not want undesirable notoriety.

Q. When did it become evident that the separation would probably become permanent? Did you not testify about that, too?—A. I realized about the 1st of April that that was likely to become permanent and it was necessary, instead of having a temporary home, to have a permanent one, and I thought it would be very nice indeed. Then I reached the point where, if there was any publicity to happen, it would just have to happen.

Q. That was about April of the year?—A. That is correct, 1930.

Q. After it became apparent that publicity would come, if it had to come, why did you not register this fact on the register of the hotel?—A. I think I have already explained that. I said it cannot proceed as it is. I had no reason to change. I happened to make the statement to Mr. Leake after I had made the transfer over and had the asthma and was still staying on in the room. I told him that registration was an element on which to found residence. I said that.

Q. The only value of registration—and the only object of a registration—is to show where a person is sleeping, is it not—what room he is occupying? Is there any other reason than that?—A. I can only say that that seems to be an element which is used sometimes by lawyers in connection with cases.

Q. Put it this way, Judge: I do not want to press it too far. If, in the trial of the contemplated lawsuit, evidence should be offered that you were registered at that hotel on the nights when you stayed there, you would feel that there would be a better chance to have the lawsuit tried in San Francisco than in Contra Costa County, would you not?—A. Well, not for one night.

Q. No; I did not ask you that. If the register should show, during all the nights you occupied room 26, that you were actually in room 26, that fact would give you a poorer chance, to put it that way?—A. Well, I might say this: It might be introduced as an element; but I think that the failure to register—the deliberate not registering—shows a bona-fide intent on the part of the person not to claim any place as his home but the place in which he is registered, and which he looks at as his home.

Q. And you wanted to be in a position, in the contemplated lawsuit, to be able to claim that you lived in Contra Costa County, and that there was no register in any hotel that showed that you lived anywhere else. That is what you wanted, is it not?—A. Yes; if there was a suit, I would feel inclined to look at it that way, that it ought to be in Contra Costa County. The publicity in Martinez, a little town of that county, would not be commensurate with the publicity which you would get in a city like San Francisco for one occupying my position. But if you mean by that that I made this change and established my home primarily and solely and exclusively with that in view you are mistaken. It was the intention to make a legitimate home.

Q. And you stated to the committee, I believe, that you considered that if the possible plaintiff would have to go to Contra Costa County instead of suing you in San Francisco that suit might not be brought. Did you make that statement?—A. I believe I stated that I thought the suit had not been brought because of the discovery of the fact that I was a resident other than of San Francisco County; but I am not fearing any suit at the present time.

Q. Did you make this statement:

I assure you, gentlemen, I believe the only reason why that suit was not instituted was because I had that residence; because it could have been transferred to Contra Costa County on account of the California law.

The WITNESS. That is true. I was there stating the state of mind of another person—my conclusions.

Q. You had known Mr. Leake for a good while, I believe?—A. I met Mr. Leake in 1918, when I was in the service of the United States.

Q. And Mr. Leake was active in your behalf in your second campaign for the State judgeship?—A. He was. He gave me some helpful suggestions.

Q. Mr. Leake has had for a long time an interest in politics in California?—A. I am so informed.

Q. Did you not testify on your appearance before the committee that Mr. Leake had been active in politics in San Francisco and that section of the country in California and spent a great deal of time around the legislature?—A. I did; but all those transactions that I referred to there were information that I had received to the effect that he had been so active. It was before I knew him.

Q. Had he been a lobbyist in the legislature, or what had he been doing?—A. I did not know that he was a lobbyist—only, perhaps, in his activities in defeating Dan Burns for the United States Senate. I understood he had represented the Spreckels' interests at that time.

Q. He represented the Spreckels' interests before the legislature in the defeat of this candidate for the Senate at the time when the legislature elected Senators?—A. That is correct. That is correct as far as my information is concerned. That was long before I knew him or knew about the facts that you speak of.

Q. Have you been a patient of Mr. Leake?—A. I never have.

Q. Did you ever make any contribution to Mr. Leake?—A. I have not.

Q. Did you ever loan him money?—A. I have.

Q. Was it paid back?—A. I think he has.

Q. Do you not know he has not?—A. No; I think he has.

Q. Has he paid it all back?—A. I think so.

Q. When did you make these loans, Judge?—A. Several times during the course of my acquaintance with Mr. Leake—I do not know just exactly the dates—he has asked me if he could borrow from me a certain amount of money, a couple of hundred dollars, and I have let him have it; and then in a certain amount of time he has paid it back.

Q. What is the largest amount you have loaned him?—A. I think the largest amount I ever loaned Mr. Leake was $350, which was when I was a State judge.

Q. Will you be good enough to examine those? (Handing papers to witness.) I think those are your returns. I will state to counsel that I am now offering for the inspection of—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Counsel cannot be heard by the Senate. He is not talking into the microphone, or raising his voice.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is true. I forget about the microphone. I am now offering for the inspection of the respondent his tax returns for 1930, 1931, and 1932. I do not know whether the one in hand is for 1929 or not.

Mr. Manager BROWNING. Yes; it is.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, if there is any purpose or intent of offering any tax return of the witness upon the stand, we want to make the objection that that is confidential and not a matter of court inquiry.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We do not offer any suggestions as to counsel's observation, but insist that there is not anything in his observation.

Mr. LINFORTH. But you cannot do indirectly that which you cannot do directly. If they cannot offer the individual tax return of a citizen, they surely cannot examine that citizen on the contents of the paper; and for that reason we object to the question.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We offer these papers at the moment—we do not preclude ourselves from offering them in a different way—for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness, and saving time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recalls that the witness was testifying as to the number of borrowings and amounts of money borrowed by Mr. Leake from the witness.

The Chair understands that the managers on the part of the House are offering these papers to the witness to refresh his memory, in order that he may answer accurately the questions asked by the managers of the House. If that is correct, they are admissible to the witness for that purpose.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we do not offer them for that purpose. We offer them to refresh the memory of the witness, to ask the witness to what tribunal he rendered his taxes for the years 1929, 1930, 1931, and 1932, as bearing upon the question of this witness's residence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As bearing upon what?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We asked the witness where he rendered his taxes—what place in the rendition of his taxes he indicated his residence to be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What taxes?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. His personal taxes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. For the purpose of showing his residence?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks they are admissible for that purpose.

The WITNESS. I have viewed the four tax returns that you have shown me, and I note there is a printed statement above my oath as to how much property I own to the effect that I live in the city and county of San Francisco. I might state, regarding those returns, that I signed them without appreciating the fact that there was any statement of residence before them; and if you have the one for this year, you will find where I corrected that very point with the assessor, and wrote in—and he questioned whether I should do that—and wrote in the fact that I lived on Ardmore Road. I did not recall the fact that the affidavit appeared that way.

Why I pay my personal taxes in San Francisco is because the property which I have in Contra Costa County is exempt property. The automobile is registered to me in Contra Costa County; but I have the privilege, inasmuch as I use it now chiefly in San Francisco County, to pay it where the automobile is, or where the automobile is registered. This year it happened I paid my bill for my automobile in Contra Costa County because I found that in Contra Costa County the assessment was a valuation of $100, and in San Francisco $150. I took advantage of that situation.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. The personal tax is lower in San Francisco than in Contra Costa County?—A. It was until this year. However, the personal property which is set forth there is not the personal property which I have in my trunk and in my room. It is the furnishings of what formerly was my home at 666 Post Street, which I own, where Mrs. Louderback makes her residence; and in San Francisco they assess that particular property to some real property which my brother and I own jointly. That is the reason why it is assessed in connection with the real property; and as far as the reading of that affidavit goes, I will say candidly that I did not recall it when I signed the oath, and had no intention of making such a representation.

Q. May I ask you this question? You are a lawyer, of course, and it will save a lot of investigation, possibly. Under the laws of the State of California are not personal taxes paid at the place of residence of the payor?—A. I understand they can be, or they can be paid in the place where they actually are existing.

Q. Where the personal property happens to be?—A. Yes. At least, that is what the assessor, Mr. Walden, told me. I know that I had a controversy about that very thing the last time that I made my statement. He said to me, "You can pay for your automobile either in San Francisco County or in Contra Costa County"; and you will notice that my tax bills state, on the rear, "Registration from 107 Ardmore Road, Kensington District, Contra Costa", referring to my Buick automobile. This is the one of 1931.

Q. Where are the others?—A. And the one of 1932 says: "Buick automobile registered in Contra Costa County, but car is now in San Francisco County all the time, and wishes to have it assessed there." That appears upon those documents you have presented.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair designates the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] as the Presiding Officer for the day.

Thereupon Mr. BLACK took the chair as Presiding Officer for the day.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. How much cheaper is it to register in San Francisco than in Contra Costa County?—A. In the case of my Buick, the assessed value in Contra Costa is $100, and the assessed value at San Francisco is $150.

Q. With regard to the Russell-Colvin Co. matter, they were members of the San Francisco Stock Exchange, were they not?—A. I was so advised.

Q. Does the San Francisco Stock Exchange bear any reputation; or did you have any information to make you believe that it would be dangerous to the interests of the creditors for the attorney employed by the stock exchange to act as the attorney for the administrator in that matter?—A. I was not operating on any general reputation of the stock exchange. I was depending upon this fact, that there might be conflicting interests. The stock-exchange rules provide that any member that has a seat there must pay off his fellow members first before any sale can be made of it and the balance given to the estate. I did not know what conflicts besides that might exist between the stock exchange and these parties, and I was impressed by the fact of the vital interest expressed by the stock-exchange attorneys in presenting this matter to me, and their endeavor, of these various attorneys, to secure the control of the receiver and his attorney.

Q. Did you not understand, Judge Louderback, that the interests of the stock exchange behind the whole matter were to bring about an equitable receivership, a cheap receivership, to save all they could to the creditors, and the plan hit upon was to get their attorney, who was familiar with the facts in the case, and the man who had been auditor for the concern?—A. I know that is their allegation, and I believe that they were interested in their own membership; but in an estate like this, there are other creditors who are not stock-exchange members.

Q. But was not the interest of the stock exchange apparent in getting for the other creditors and preserving thereby the good name of the exchange—was not the interest apparent to get for them the very most that could be gotten through an economical administration of its affairs?—A. I did not know, and I did not care to hazard the estate in that way. I was not prepared to have the stock exchange substitute its judgment for mine in the selection of the officials of the court.

Q. When you came to select the officials, as a matter of fact did you not take a man for receiver who then was what you call the headman of an important stock-exchange concern that was contributing one member to the board of control of the stock exchange?—A. I took a man who had knowledge of the stock-exchange business—

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President—

The WITNESS. I took a man—

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President—

The WITNESS. Who had had experience before, but I do not—

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I should like to have the witness answer my question if he can.

Mr. LINFORTH. I maintain, Mr. President, that he is answering the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think he was answering the question.

Mr. LINFORTH. I beg your pardon.

The WITNESS. Read the question, Mr. Reporter.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. When you came to select the officials, as a matter of fact did you not take a man for receiver who then was what you call the head man of an important stock-exchange concern that was contributing one member to the board of control of the stock exchange?

The WITNESS. That may be true, but I did not consider that he was any official of the governing board of the exchange.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Do you not consider that a member of the board of governors has to do with governing the stock exchange—A. I felt that Mr. Hunter would do his duty.

Q. And that Cavalier was the employer of this Mr. Hunter and also a member of the stock exchange?—A. While he was a member, I did not know he was on the governing body, and I did not think Mr. Hunter was under any such control.

Q. Did you ask Mr. Leake to find you somebody to take the place of Strong, who was connected with the stock exchange?—A. I asked him to suggest somebody who had the qualifications necessary to handle a matter of this kind.

Q. Did he know what you were talking about when you said that?—A. I have every reason to believe he did.

Q. Is not this what you asked him, and did you not so testify when you were before the managers?—

I said, "Mr. Leake, do you know anybody who has these qualifications? I must have someone who is associated with the stock exchange in some way."

A. I think that that was erroneous in the reading, because I did not mean stock exchange—in the stock business. It may so appear, but I meant the stock business.

Q. Stock-market business?—A. No; acquainted with the stock business.

Q. How would he be appointed? How does it come about that a person gets to be an expert in that sort of thing without being connected in some sort of mercantile way with stocks and bonds?—A. I imagine a man might study up the subject and become just as acquainted with it as the person who participates in it.

Q. When Mr. Hunter was suggested to you by Mr. Leake, you concluded immediately that he was such a person?—

A. I did, because I knew if he was the same Hunter who had handled the matter across in Berkeley he had had problems of a similar type he would meet with in this case, and I knew Mr. Hunter had made a good receiver in that case, although I had not appointed him in that case.

Q. What did he have to do over there in a peculiar sort of way that fitted him for this appointment?—A. He was dealing with stocks and bonds of a company which was a sort of a finance company.

Q. Was he not dealing primarily with the assets of a ranching concern?—A. He was also dealing with other questions. The reason why I particularly know it was that my mother had invested money in the company, and had bought bonds of it, and was receiving compensation from the bonds, or the interest from the bonds. My brother had interests in it, and there was very little recovered from that company because it was so mishandled, but I know Mr. Hunter's service and his conduct of it was beyond question.

Q. The point I ask is, were they not handling ranches, ranch property?—A. I presume they had that sort of property also, but there were also bonding issues.

Q. Were not those issues merely issues of bonds on these ranch properties, just ordinary ranch property about over the country?—A. I understood it was a finance and bonding company that did business.

Q. Did you understand, as a matter of fact, that this concern was engaged in buying and selling bonds not connected with the ranches they were operating?—A. I understood they had something else, over and above any ranches they were running.

Q. May I ask you this question? Did you understand that they were engaged in the business of buying and selling stocks and bonds as that business is ordinarily understood?—A. I understood they had stocks and bonds. I do not know whether they were buying and selling them, but I understood they had those issues of bonds, and they had securities in the form of bonds. They did purchase and sell bonds.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I wish the witness would answer this question:

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. These stocks and bonds which you continually refer to—I ask this direct question now—did you understand that they were stocks and bonds such as are traded in on exchanges, or were they not the stocks and bonds secured by the ranches they were operating?—A. I think I understand what you mean. I understood it was a finance and bonding company. I did not understand it was a broker office.

Q. What is the difference?—A. I do not know whether I can explain all the differences.

Q. Is there any?—A. I thought there was some.

Q. How much?—A. Well, I presume that in one case they are operating on an exchange, and in the other case they do not operate on the exchange.

Q. In one case they sell over the counter and in the other case they sell on the exchange. Mr. Short, whom you wanted to be the attorney for this concern, I believe you say was the son-in-law of Mr. Hathaway, who lived also at the Fairmont Hotel?—A. Only one suggestion there. I suggested Mr. Short, but I was not set upon Mr. Short's being attorney. I did suggest him as the first suggestion. [To the Official Reporter:] Read the question, please.

The Official Reporter read the last question.

The WITNESS. I understood that was so.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Was he not the only lawyer you suggested in dead earnest that you wanted?—A. He was not the only one I suggested in dead earnest, but from the way Mr. Strong replied to me, and the objections that he made to Mr. Short, and his determination to hold on to his own selection, I felt that when I did offer him other selections, he was not going to select them, and my expectations were realized, because when I mentioned intentionally—after his saying that he had no knowledge of Mr. Short—I then proceeded to pick some of the finest firms in San Francisco, feeling confident that he would not accept them, but being prepared to give him those firms if he had elected to take them.

Q. Before the full committee, did you not testify:

So I said to him—really, to tell you candidly, I did it to test him out as much as anything—I said, "What about the firm of Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro?"

You did not offer those firms in good faith—I wish I had another word but it does not come to me now—did you offer those firms in good faith or just to test him out, to see whether he would accept them, and have him come to a decision as to whether he would accept them or not?—A. I think the statement I made before the House committee is consistent with what I have said today; and what I have said today is correct, and if you wish me to repeat it, I will. After he had rejected Mr. Short in the manner in which he did, saying that he had never heard of such a person, and so forth, I felt that his attitude was such that he would never select any other attorney, and therefore in a way I offered them feeling confident he would not accept them; but I would have felt bound, having given him the names, had he said, "I will select that firm", to have given it to him.

Q. Putting it this way, if I may do it with some degree of—I shall not say elegance—but is not this about the mental situation? You offered this firm as a bluff; feeling, however, that if he had called your bluff you would have to answer?—A. I would hardly call it a bluff. I felt that I must meet his objection, that he did not wish to have Mr. Short because he felt he was inexperienced. I felt that he was not sincere in his rejection of Mr. Short; that his real reason was that he intended to adhere to his choice, just as he did throughout the entire transaction.

Q. Did he not say that his choice was based upon the fact that he wanted this firm of lawyers, attorneys for the stock exchange, experts in doing the thing that he would be required by the court to do?—A. He did say so.

Q. Why did you not tell Thelen & Marrin and Brown that you had offered Short?—A. I do not know that I did not tell them.

Q. Do you say that, according to the best of your recollection, you did tell them?—A. I do not recall not telling them; I do not recall telling them. The main thing that I took up with them was the fact that he was adhering to this one firm; that it was too much of a family affair; that he had violated his trust to me; that he had not come back to consult me; and instead of that, although he said he had no attorney, he had gone out and secured one, and that he was adhering to that, and that I was not going to allow him to remain in if he did so.

Q. Did you tell either of these three gentlemen whom I have just mentioned that you had offered Short?—A. I cannot say that I told them as to any attorneys, that I had offered Mr. Strong, but I believe that I told the whole story; but I have not a recollection to know at this time.

Q. Mr. Short was an employee in the office of Erskine & Keyes, was he not, at that time?—A. I never heard of that firm.

Q. Keyes & Erskine; I may not be familiar with it.—A. Yes, sir; so I understood, with some sort of special partnership agreement.

Q. When did you understand that?—A. I understood that before I appointed him.

Q. From whom did you learn it?—A. I do not recall; I do not know. I used to talk to his father-in-law, and maybe I secured it from him. I knew Mr. Hathaway quite well.

Q. Well, the firm of Ehrmann & Erskine; is that right?—A. Keyes & Erskine.

Q. Keyes & Erskine.—A. Alexander Keyes and Herbert Erskine.

Q. Keyes is dead, but I believe Erskine & Erskine probably continue the firm.—A. They still retain the firm name despite the death of Mr. Keyes.

Q. Were they engaged as attorneys for members of the San Francisco Stock Exchange?—A. I do not know.

Q. You did not know that fact at the time of the designation of Short, did you?—A. I did not. The only thing I knew about Keyes & Erskine was that they had been attorneys for the Humboldt Savings, which subsequently merged with the Bank of America and handled all those matters in connection with the bankers. Of course, all bankers seem to go into the Stock Exchange or the bonding business to some extent.

Q. What peculiar qualification of Mr. Short attracted you to him as a proper attorney to represent the receiver in this case?—A. He seemed to be a very bright, upright young man. I met him and he impressed me favorably.

Q. I believe you said you met him at the Fairmont Hotel?—A. I did.

Q. In company with his father-in-law?—A. I think his father-in-law introduced me to him. I saw him there, with his wife, and I did not know he had 4 children; I thought he had 2; I saw 2, but it seems that he has 4 children.

Q. Do you know who notified Mr. Short that he was to be designated as attorney in this case?—A. I do not.

Q. You do not know that he was notified by either Mr. Leake or Mr. Hunter?—A. I do not.

Q. When were you first consulted by Mr. Hunter, the receiver, to ascertain whether or not John Douglas Short would be satisfactory to you?—A. It was subsequent to the day of Mr. Hunter's appointment, but I do not know when it was. It was some days later, a day or so later. I think maybe it was the next day. My recollection cannot tell me that.

Q. Do you know whether it was prior to the time that the attorneyship had been offered to Short or afterward? I mean the attorneyship had been offered to Short or afterward.—A. May the reporter read that question?

Q. I will repeat the question, because it was not very clear. Do you know whether or not Short's appointment, to determine whether it was satisfactory to you, was taken up with you prior to the time that Hunter advised Short that he desired him to represent him?—A. It was not taken up with me until the time that the petition was presented in which Keyes & Erskine and John Douglas Short were named as being those approved of by the receiver.

Q. I believe the testimony has been pretty well gone into as to the fees allowed to the receiver and the fees allowed to the attorneys in this case. The hearings proceeded for about 3 days before you under contest at first, did they not?—A. Yes; the contest was led by a man of the name of Scompini, who represented certain creditors; and it went on, as I recall, during 3 days' proceedings.

Q. In the application for compensation, the services rendered by the receiver and the services rendered by the attorney were set out in detail, were they not?—A. Yes; they filed quite a lengthy statement of their activities.

Q. Do you know, on the basis of the compensation allowed, what these gentlemen were allowed per hour or per day for their services?—A. No; I never computed it in that way. I looked over it generally, and I followed that case with a great deal of care, and I had seen the various petitions filed by them, and so forth. Then I listened very attentively to the statements made by the attorneys who were experts in the case as to fees.

Q. Which was the next case, can you tell us, Judge, to save time, with regard to which you were examined?—A. Really I am sorry I cannot help you there. Perhaps Mr. Linforth can.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. SUMNERS, if I may state to you for your information, it was the Lumbermen's case.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That was the next case?

Mr. LINFORTH. Yes; the second one cited in the articles.

Mr. LONG. At this point I desire to submit a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana propounds an inquiry, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Did all the attorneys of interest agree on the fee allowed attorneys and receiver?

The WITNESS. They did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana submits a further question, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. If you answer the foregoing "yes", then please say if you considered you were approving an agreement for fees?

The WITNESS. I considered that not only were the fees within the scope of what was a proper fixing of fees, irrespective of any agreement, but I also felt that I was ratifying at the same time a stipulation on the part of all parties in interest.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Do you know, Judge Louderback, the amount of fees for which the receiver had applied?—A. The receiver, as I recall, although I may be in error—I do not remember the receiver—the receiver's attorneys applied for $65,000 and they were awarded $46,250.

Q. Do you know how much the receiver applied for?—A. I do not recall now.

Q. But those were matters that were under examination 2 or 3 days prior to the time this agreement was entered into?—A. That is correct.

Q. And this agreement was a sort of a compromise among the persons who were proposing and contesting these fees?—A. I do not know the extent of the compromising. The negotiations which resulted in offering the stipulation in open court were not in my presence; but I understand that they negotiated among themselves and then finally presented this in open court, where all creditors who desired to oppose any compensation had been asked to appear; and there was no objection on the part of any person.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to submit an interrogatory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah submits an interrogatory, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Did the creditors agree to the fees allowed in the Russell-Colvin case?

The WITNESS. All creditors represented by attorneys did so, either by speaking in the proceedings or remaining silent upon inquiry by the court if they had objection to the stipulation.

There were many creditors who came into the court there and followed the proceedings from day to day; the court was crowded with creditors of this concern, and no one raised a voice when I said, "Now is the time for anybody who has any objection to this arrangement, which I believe is within the proper scope of my authority, to make objection." I waited to see if there was any objection, but no one objected, and I assumed from that fact, and the fact that no one took an appeal from the order, that everyone was satisfied.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. You were not consulted in your chambers with regard to the fees during the period when the negotiation was in progress?—A. I was not consulted.

Q. I believe you stated in the absence of an agreement you would allow a larger fee, did you not?—A. I never made any such statement.

Q. You did not make any statement of that sort?—A. I did not. I made a statement to the effect that while the amount was not probably that which I would have fixed, still, it being within the proper scope of the testimony given and in the discretion of the court—that is the effect; I cannot give the exact words—that I would allow the stipulation, since everyone was satisfied with it.

Q. In reference to the Fageol Motors Co. case, that concern was engaged, I believe, in assembling and to some degree in manufacturing automobile parts, particularly the bodies for trucks?—A. So I understand, and also had a sales organization, as well, in connection with it.

Q. These sales organizations were scattered over a great deal of territory?—A. Throughout a number of States and, I believe, the Territory of Hawaii.

Q. Do you know what preliminary work had been done by those in interest before the matter was called to your attention?—A. I do not.

Q. You understood when the matter was brought to your attention that the persons who were in the attitude of ownership of this concern, the creditors of the concern, and parties in interest generally, had reached some agreement, did you not?—A. I understood at the time the petition was submitted to me that the plaintiff and defendant and some of the creditors were in favor of a certain amount.

Q. When did this matter first reach your attention?—A. I do not know the day or date, but at the time that petition was filed the first I knew of it was when it was placed upon my desk by my secretary. Do you wish me to proceed?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. If you please; yes, sir.

The WITNESS. She told me that the attorneys for the plaintiff and defendant and one or two gentlemen who were apparently creditors or representing creditors had called at my chambers and left these papers requesting the appointment of a receiver. The papers consisted of the petition and answer showing that the defendant company admitted the allegations in the complaint or petition; that they had suggested some man whose name I do not recall—I have heard it stated as Tuller, but I do not know whether it was Tuller or not—as being a man who had been an automobile man and who was suitable, in their opinion, and a proper person to be selected as receiver in the matter. They left those papers with a blank order to be filled in with the name of the person that I might select, with a request to have him appointed, or submitting his name for appointment.

Q. I did not quite get your answer. You used the expression "person I might select", and mentioned the name of this man Fuller, who you say was suggested.—A. I might state to the managers that the matter of the selection of the receiver and the attorney, who are court officers, is, of course, inherently in the court. Many times attorneys present no names in either case, and the court's selection is done unaided by any suggestion; but every once in a while in the larger receiverships you will find attorneys coming to you endeavoring not only to control one of those positions but both, and they have candidates for both and present them with the hope and expectation possibly of having them appointed by the court.

Q. Judge Louderback, do you know of a single important receivership that has come into your court since you have been Federal judge in which the applicants for the receivership have not also indicated the names they hoped you would include in the petition as receiver?—A. Yes; I know of cases.

Q. What are they?—A. I would have to see the list of my cases and then perhaps I could indicate one or two that were that way.

Q. Important receiverships where there was no suggestion?—A. I have had many cases where the attorney was not suggested—many cases; and I have had a number of cases where receivers were not suggested, since I have been on the Federal bench.

Q. Are they among the important cases which have come to you?—A. I would have to look up and see. I do not know.

Q. Will you be good enough, when you leave the stand, to ascertain that fact? Did you await the determination of the receivership until you could have opportunity to have a conference with the attorneys who filed the petition?—A. I did not. I thought the matter was submitted. I recall that Mr. Crook had said to me and it apparently appeared as if there might be some question about the appointment of a receivership. Instead of notifying them and delaying the receivership by having them give notice so there would be no uncertainty, I considered it would be most appropriate to put in a temporary receiver. The order which had been prepared fortunately provided for a temporary receiver who would go into possession for about 30 days, at which time the entire matter, if there was any objection on the part of anyone, might be taken up and a receiver appointed. If there was no objection, then the receiver who was in office would be continued in his position.

Q. Judge Louderback, were you not informed that the persons who brought the application for a receiver there to your chambers arrived a little before the time for adjournment, were advised by your secretary that you would probably be delayed beyond the usual period of adjournment, came back about 1:30, and were told that you had left the bench earlier than you anticipated? Were you not given that advice by your secretary?—A. I only had the matter presented to me once, and that was on my return from lunch. I understood they had been there.

Q. That they came back again about 2:30?—A. I do not know that excepting from testimony which has been given and my inquiries from my secretary, but I will say that they testified that I passed them in the hall as they were entering my chambers. I did not know the parties. I do not know why they did not speak to me then as I passed through the hall past them.

Q. You had already appointed a receiver anyhow then, had you not?—A. That is true, but I am speaking from the standpoint of the parties themselves, who said I passed them without speaking to them.

Q. Whom did you appoint receiver in that case?—A. I appointed G. H. Gilbert.

Q. Who notified Mr. Gilbert of the appointment?—A. I believe my secretary did.

Q. This is the same G. H. Gilbert whom you testified with reference to having appointed as an appraiser in a case in the State court?—A. It is the same Gilbert I appointed on four occasions in the United States court as receiver, this being the last one, I believe.

Q. What qualifications did Gilbert have to be the receiver of a going automobile concern with branches scattered over the United States?—A. Gilbert had shown that he had executive ability. He had shown he had receivership ability in the Sonora case. He had shown more than ordinary ability, because he had handled a going concern there, having arranged for property to be sent out from the domiciliary receivership so it could be sold in the ancillary receivership. I considered from reports I got and from returns I got in the Sonora case that he was a man safe to appoint in receivership matters.

Q. Do you know whether he had had any experience in the automobile business?—A. I do not know. I did not know.

Q. What was his compensation in that case?—A. I only know by hearsay. I understood he got $4,500, which was awarded to him in the bankruptcy court by Referee Wyman, of Oakland.

Q. Who was his attorney in that matter?—A. His attorney was the firm of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel.

Q. Had they previous to that time represented him?—A. They had. They had represented him in two other matters. They represented him in the Sonora Phonograph case and the Prudential Holding case.

Q. The Sonora Phonograph Co. was a rather large concern, was it not?—A. I considered it one of the large cases.

Q. How did Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel come to be appointed in that case?—A. Mr. Dinkelspiel, Sr., who subsequently has passed away, came with Mr. John Walton Dinkelspiel to my chambers with a petition asking for an ancillary receivership in this case. He requested the appointment of the Irving Trust Co. as receiver and also that a local receiver be appointed, and suggested to me the name of Mr. Holland who had acted in several instances as receiver in other departments of the district court. I told him I would prefer to make my own selection, and he said, "Judge, we are not fixed upon it. We just suggest it in the event you have no choice." So I said I wanted to select Mr. G. H. Gilbert, and he said that was satisfactory.

Then Mr. Dinkelspiel, Sr., turned to me and said, "Of course, inasmuch as they had brought this petition in connection with the creditors and the Irving Trust Co., they would expect to be the attorneys for the Irving Trust Co. as they had been corresponding in the East." I said, of course, naturally I would not interfere with the domiciliary receiver being represented by counsel. He said, "Could it not be possible, to save expense in the case, that the attorneys for the Irving Trust Co. could also be attorneys for the local receiver, Mr. Gilbert?" I said, "Mr. Dinkelspiel, I will take the matter up with Mr. Gilbert and I will suggest that as the solution."

Q. Were you told that Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel were attorneys for the Irving Trust Co.?—A. I understood that they were.

Q. Who told you that?—A. I must have got the impression from Mr. Dinkelspiel, Sr. I believe that he conducted the conversation.

Q. Do you not know as a matter of fact that you have learned since that time that they were not the attorneys for the Irving Trust Co.?—A. I do not know that because I thought they filed the petition asking that the Irving Trust Co. be relieved within a month from that time.

Q. They appeared in your court representing three creditors, did they not?—A. They did on the petition, but as I said, later as a matter of verification I believe that they brought the petition in which the Irving Trust Co. requested to be relieved as being a joint receiver in my district.

Q. But that was after the matter had progressed very considerably, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. I am in some confusion with regard to rule 53 and its interpretation.—A. I think rule 53 is interpreted correctly by the letter of Judge St. Sure, which has been submitted in this case. It is the interpretation of both Judge Kerrigan and myself and Judge St. Sure as reflecting the court rules which we have made.

Q. Judge St. Sure, if I may get your interpretation of this, said:

After full discussion the judges of this court were of opinion that the rule will prove a useful one and it has so proven. It gives the court discretion in the matter of the appointment of attorneys for receiver to the end that no attorney shall be appointed who, for good and sufficient reasons, is deemed disqualified—who has appeared or acted for a party or for any creditor of defendant.

The WITNESS. The only thing is that it is left to our discretion, and in this particular case it was an ancillary proceeding. We were only carrying out as it were the receivership which had been established in New York.

RECESS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate, sitting as a court, take a recess for 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senate, sitting as a court, will stand in recess for 15 minutes.

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess for 15 minutes. At the expiration of the recess, the Senate, sitting as a court, reassembled.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF THE RESPONDENT, HAROLD LOUDERBACK—RESUMED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You may proceed.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Judge Louderback, I do not believe I got an answer to my last question. I am not certain about it. Please consider that question canceled, and I will ask the question again.

In rule 53 I believe you designated this language in explanation, dealing with the limitation upon the appointment of attorneys—

To the end that no attorney shall be appointed who for good and sufficient reasons is deemed disqualified who has appeared for or acts for a party or for any creditor of the defendant (whether intervener or not), or for any other person interested in the cause or the estate.

My question is, how under that rule you came to appoint Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, who appeared in their introduction to you representing three creditors of this estate?—A. The rule gives the discretion in the court, and is a notice to the attorneys that the court is going to require them to present a petition to the court for the purpose of the selection. If, in my discretion, I wish to appoint an attorney, however, who comes under the qualification you speak of, there is no intent to prevent me from doing so.

Q. I want to ask you just one other question in that connection. The explanation is that you have the rule—and I am now quoting—

To the end that no attorney shall be appointed who for good and sufficient reasons is deemed disqualified—who has appeared for or acts for a party or for any creditor of the defendant.

A. Well, I did not think the "good and sufficient reasons" that you speak of existed.

Q. You did think that this attorney appeared for three persons who were the creditors of this estate?—A. Yes. I looked upon it that way; but, of course, in ancillary matters it is a pure formality. It is not a case of original suit. Ancillary proceedings should be allowed if there is property in any district under the original domiciliary receivership. We are simply augmenting that receivership.

Q. What is the difference between the relationship of an attorney who appears in your court representing an ancillary receiver, and who also represents creditors of that receiver, and an attorney who appears in an original suit representing creditors?—A. The difference between the two is that in the first case you must determine whether there should be a receivership primarily. It is looked upon as mere, pure, formality—the allegations—where it is an ancillary matter.

Q. Why?—A. Because that matter has been passed upon in the domiciliary jurisdiction, and you are simply attempting to assist or augment that jurisdiction outside of the district in which it was initiated and allowed.

Q. But when the ancillary receivership—I do not mean to argue—when the ancillary receivership is established, is not the relationship of the attorney for the receiver exactly the same relationship as obtains between the receiver and his attorney and a receivership in chief?—A. I do not view it as the same.

Q. Does the receiver in chief have any control over the ancillary receiver?—A. We look upon the domiciliary—

Q. Wait a minute. Will you answer that question yes or no?

The WITNESS. Read the question, Mr. Reporter.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. Does the receiver in chief have any control over the ancillary receiver?

The WITNESS. He has in an indirect way.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. How; how would he exercise it?—A. He exercises it in this way: That if he has certain goods or property which is in the ancillary district, unless there is a good and sufficient reason for not doing so, we permit him to have the goods or property transferred to him. The only exception to that is that we are supposed to look out and protect the creditors that are existent in our particular district.

Q. Would you permit the transfer of goods away from your jurisdiction to some other jurisdiction that would imperil the status of the creditors in your own jurisdiction?—A. Where proper application is made and the facts warranted that act, I have done so.

Q. What sort of fact would warrant a judge in a district permitting the property to be depleted in his district that would otherwise be distributed among the creditors in his district?—A. Primarily, if the ancillary were closed up, there would be a balance which would go to the domiciliary. There is no other reason.

Q. You mean after all the debts have been paid 100 cents on the dollar?—A. Also a case—

Q. Wait a minute. I would like to have an answer.—A. No. If there are creditors who are being taken care of in the ancillary district, having filed their application in the domiciliary district, they are amply secured in that case. We presume that the court of domiciliary jurisdiction will do the right thing.

Q. Did you have such a situation in this case in which Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel were appointed?—A. We had a situation which was most unusual. We had the domiciliary district sending goods into California for the ancillary to sell, because the better opportunity for sale of those goods existed in California. That is the only case I have ever known of where it was the domiciliary jurisdiction that was sending into the ancillary district. I have in many instances sent goods from the ancillary district into the domiciliary.

Q. Was there any advantage to anybody to have this ancillary administration?—A. Yes; of great advantage to the domiciliary jurisdiction.

Q. You spoke a moment ago of Mr. Hunter having been connected with a concern that was wound up over in Oakland, I believe?—A. In Berkeley.

Q. Do you know how much the creditors got in that case?—A. I do not. I have never studied the case. My knowledge of the case entirely came from the claims of my mother and brother and the explanations I received in connection with it. I have never reviewed the papers.

Q. Did they get more than 5 percent?—A. I am sure they did, but I cannot say positively. I know there was some money that came to me in connection with my mother's claim which my brother divided with me, but I do not recall the amount.

Q. You think now—A. I know that my brother was interested in the creditors of that concern, and I got largely my views from what he told me.

Q. Judge Louderback, do you not know, as a matter of fact, that this gentleman, Mr. Gilbert, had not the slightest experience or training or qualification to be the receiver in a going phonograph and radio concern distributing over that country?—A. I did not. I did not consider him an automobile man, and I do not know if he understood the manufacture; but when a man is appointed receiver of a railroad he does not necessarily know how to run a steam engine.

Q. But you would not appoint a man to run a railroad who had been connected simply as a telegraph operator and managing other telegraph operators, would you?—A. It depends on who the man was and what I thought he knew. It would not be a question of his vocation or—

Q. Or experience?—A. Experience has its value; but I have seen men who were capable of being very desirable receivers who have never had the opportunity to exercise those powers.

Q. Would you try to find out about it by appointing such a man to see whether he made a mess of things?—A. No; but I would rather select a man representing the court, and I believe I have been successful in all the receiverships where I have appointed the receiver. Nobody has ever made a complaint of any receiver that I have ever been given notice of, either in chambers or by petition in court, not one instance.

Q. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that in the Russell-Colvin case, in the Fageol Motors case, and in other cases it became the subject of general controversy and general criticism in the community where you live?—A. If it has, it has been unjust, because if there was any criticism in those cases, the parties or interested persons should have brought the matter to my attention, either in chambers or in court.

Q. Of course, it may have been unjust, but I was not asking you about the matter of justice; I was asking you about the matter of fact. You said you had not been criticized.—A. I said I had not been criticized by any legal proceeding.

Mr. LINFORTH. We submit that this line of cross-examination is not proper. It is not cross-examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is overruled. By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. I should like to ask you, as briefly as I may, with regard to the Prudential Holding Co. Will you state, just as briefly as you can, the character of business in which that concern was engaged?—A. Well, I thought it was a financing corporation, a corporation that would take in other corporations of a like kind. It was sort of a holding company.

Q. Whom did you appoint to be receiver and attorney, respectively, in that case?—A. G. H. Gilbert and Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel. I appointed the attorneys at the request of the receiver.

Q. Gilbert was determined upon by you as a competent man as attorney in the Fageol Motor case and in the Russell-Colvin case. The Prudential Holding Co. case was different from either one of these other two cases, was it not?—A. I cannot understand that question because the Russell-Colvin case did not have, either as attorney or receiver, Mr. Gilbert or Mr. Dinkelspiel.

Q. That is right. The Fageol Motor Co. case had to do with the assembling, manufacturing, and distributing of automobiles and automobile parts, did it not?—A. So I understand.

Q. I will ask you this question, so as to test your attitude, if you please. If you wanted to get somebody to operate a concern like the Prudential Holding Co., which had gotten into difficulty, would you look around the Fageol Motor Co. case or a telegraph company to find him?—A. When I selected Mr. Gilbert, he was my personal selection in that same view. If that had been some business of mine, I would have felt confident that he was the proper person to act. I think he has the judgment, and I think he showed it. I think the conduct of the Fageol case was a good one.

Q. So you think—I do not want to press the matter—that in employing him to run this Prudential Holding Co., which was in distress, in his business as telegraph operator, and receiver in the Fageol Motors Co. case, he persuaded you that he could operate this Prudential Holding Co. case best?—A. No. The Prudential case followed the Sonora. It was his experience in the Sonora case, and the conduct he had in that case, that caused me to believe that in the Prudential case he would make a good receiver.

Q. What assets did the Prudential Holding Co. have?—A. What assets?

Q. Yes.—A. That matter was never brought before me officially. I could only give you what I have heard were its assets.

Q. That is all right.—A. I heard it had none except a few hundred dollars.

Q. You mean, when you say you heard it had none, that it had—A. It had no potential value, that the real property they had was encumbered by second mortgages, and that there was no equity in case the property was sold; but I did not have that matter before me in the Prudential case. It only came before me on a motion to dismiss.

Q. You granted the receivership in that case, did you not?—A. I granted a receivership in the case initially, yes; but I did that upon the statement of counsel and the statement set forth in the petition presented to me at the time of the application.

Q. How long after you granted the petition, granted the receivership in the Prudential Holding Co. case, was it before you found out that there was a serious question as to whether this man Stephens had any right to represent the company?—A. The matter was submitted to me—the matter of Stephens?

Q. Yes.—A. The only issue about Stephens came up subsequent to the dismissal, I believe. In other words, the question was not whether the court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, but whether the case was properly before the court, whether we had jurisdiction in the court. No question about the condition of the company was presented to me. No application to relieve the situation, as far as the receiver was concerned, was presented; only a motion to dismiss, on the ground that we had not venue.

Q. When did the question arise as to whether or not Stephens had any right or authority to represent the company?—A. That question was never litigated before the court.

Q. I mean, when did it come up to you as a judge in equity?—A. It did not come up in equity.

Q. It did not come up at all?—A. It did not.

Q. Then the statements Stephens made had no bearing upon your action in granting this receivership?—A. No; that is not correct. I supposed you meant—I interpreted your question to mean when it came up as a matter of dispute. There never was any dispute about it, as far as the proceedings of the court were concerned. But Mr. Stephens saw me prior to my appointing the receiver, if that is what you mean.

Q. You knew, of course, as a matter of law, and as a lawyer, that this vice president of the Prudential Holding Co. had no authority to represent to you with regard to whether or not a receivership ought to be appointed?—A. I did not know that he did not have authority. The two companies were intermingled in their interests. The stockholders of one were stockholders in the other. When Mr. Kearsley presented the petition, and the vice president of the defendant company was there, thinking that action should be taken, and granting his approval, I thought he was acting in behalf of the defendant company, and I thought it was an uncontested receivership.

Q. You knew, as a matter of law, however, that he could not represent his company without some action upon the part of his company, did you not?—A. I only knew his representation.

Q. Well, will you answer my question, if you please, sir?—A. I knew if he did not have authority, of course, he had no right to make representation, but I did not know he did not have the authority.

Q. The question I am trying to have answered is that the fact that he was vice president of the company did not of itself give him any authority to make the representation to you?—A. I thought it did.

Q. As a matter of law?—A. I thought he, as vice president, had the power to act or he would not be there. Nothing was suggested that Mr. Stephens was not in harmony with his company.

Q. When did you first learn that there was some question as to whether Mr. Stephens represented his company in that matter or not?—A. At the investigation of the congressional committee.

Q. That was the first time you knew about it?—A. That was the first time that any issue was raised regarding the authority of Mr. Stephens.

Q. Did not somebody come in, representing the company, and seek to have the whole proceeding dismissed?—A. On the ground—

Q. Wait a minute.—A. Yes; they did.

Q. When did they do that?—A. It came before me for a hearing about the 29th of August, following the receivership on the 15th of August.

Q. When was the petition filed in your court?—A. I did not know until I looked up the files. We have many files of papers; but I did not know about it until it was presented to me. I understand they made application in 5 days, that is because I have looked up the record. I did not know it at the time.

Q. Does not the record reveal that the petition was filed on the 15th and the papers resisting the petition were filed on Monday?—A. That is my recollection. The papers so disclosed after I reviewed them at the termination of the affair.

Q. How long after you discovered that Mr. Stephens did not have authority to represent this concern did you set aside your action in granting the receivership?—A. I never had anybody represent to me that Mr. Stephens did not have authority.

Q. Your right was based on other grounds?—A. The entire matter went on the question of whether the court had jurisdiction, the right to hear and pass upon this matter.

Q. And that grew out of the question of whether or not there was diversity of citizenship, did it not?—A. It did.

Q. And did not the papers themselves disclose that there was not diversity of citizenship?—A. I so decided, and dismissed the application on October 2.

Q. Was that after or before you granted the application for bankruptcy proceedings?—A. That was subsequent to the application on a petition to appoint a receiver in a bankruptcy matter involving the same company, which was in another department.

Q. And you sat in another department and granted the petition in bankruptcy and appointed the same persons to be receiver and attorney, respectively, did you not?—A. I did. At the time the application was made I had not decided as yet whether the court had jurisdiction. The law is, under the Wage case, that you must allow the bankruptcy court to assume jurisdiction as against the equity court, and, sitting for Judge St. Sure, I had to divest myself of the receivership and grant it to his department upon application. When I did so the applicant, Mr. Kreft, said, "Is there any objection to Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Dinkelspiel staying in office, so that it will not be necessary to have a change of administration?" I told him there was no objection, and therefore, at his request, I made Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Dinkelspiel receiver and attorney, respectively, of the bankruptcy proceeding, thereby divesting myself of right in the receivership.

Q. And did you not grant the application for a receivership in bankruptcy solely upon the ground that you had granted the receivership in equity in the other case?—A. I granted it—

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Wait a moment—

The WITNESS. Well, may the question be read, then?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That question is susceptible of an answer "yes" or "no", and then the witness can explain it.

The WITNESS. May the reporter read the question?

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. And did you not grant the application for a receivership in bankruptcy solely upon the ground that you had granted the receivership in equity in the other case?

The WITNESS. Not in the strict sense. I should like to explain that.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We think the witness has a right to explain.

The WITNESS. The situation is this: It is the law that if there is a receivership in any matter—an equity receivership—and in the same matter a bankruptcy proceeding is filed, and it can be predicated upon a receivership having been granted in any equity action, you must, of necessity, if there is an application made and a receiver appointed in bankruptcy, transfer the right from the equity division to the bankruptcy division. I had not decided whether I had jurisdiction or not. I had assumed jurisdiction believing I did have it, and had appointed a receiver. How could I then refuse to transfer to Judge St. Sure's department until I had actually passed upon the question of whether I had jurisdiction or not?

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. How long was it after the petition in bankruptcy was granted and approved until you dismissed that action sitting in Judge St. Sure's court?—A. The matter had been formally submitted on the 19th of October—

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Wait a moment.

The WITNESS. If you do not want the history—

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. You may answer the question and then give the history.

The WITNESS. I think I could save you two or three questions if I should do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the witness answer the question.

The WITNESS. I ask that the question be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporter will read the question.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. How long was it after the petition in bankruptcy was granted and approved until you dismissed that action sitting in Judge St. Sure's court?

The WITNESS. Two days.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. If you want to make an explanation, you may go ahead.—A. No; I do not.

Q. I ask why did you not demand a creditor's bond in this case as in the Russell-Colvin case?—A. The creditor's bond was demanded in the Russell-Colvin case after I had had disclosed to me that there was a double filing.

Q. What did the fact that there were double filings have to do with your determination to insist upon a creditor's bond?—A. Because I believed that it was possible to have proceeded on the first filing with Judge St. Sure, and I concluded that they did not desire to take the matter before Judge St. Sure, particularly when I suggested that I would get in touch with him in Sacramento, which I did after I learned of the double filing. I then thought I would take all precautions, and, therefore, I suggested, as a precaution, a creditor's bond.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I thought I heard that answer; I was listening to it, but I could not understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the reporter read the answer?

The Official Reporter read as follows:

A. Because I believed that it was possible to have proceeded on the first filing with Judge St. Sure, and I concluded that they did not desire to take the matter before Judge St. Sure, particularly when I suggested that I would get in touch with him in Sacramento, which I did after I learned of the double filing. I then thought I would take all precautions, and, therefore, I suggested, as a precaution, a creditor's bond.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Did the explanation that on account of the fact that your cases come by assignment in some sort of rotation, and they were anxious to get this matter in action because they had a run on the Oriental branch of the Russell-Colvin matter the day before, seem a reasonable explanation, under the peculiar circumstances, for what you call a double filing, though maybe not to be countenanced ordinarily?

The WITNESS. Will you read the question, Mr. Reporter?

The Official Reporter read the question, as follows:

Q. Did the explanation that on account of the fact that your cases come by assignment in some sort of rotation, and they were anxious to get this matter in action because they had a run on the Oriental branch of the Russell-Colvin matter the day before, seem a reasonable explanation, under the peculiar circumstances, for what you call a double filing, though maybe not to be countenanced ordinarily?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. May I add, in that connection, also the fact that the Russell-Colvin Co. had been suspended by the stock exchange?

The WITNESS. I would see no explanation in the explanation that you have offered. I see no logic in it. There is no reason in the absence of any judge for a department being suspended. We always act in the absence of a fellow judge. I have had receivers appointed in my department by Judge Kerrigan in a number of instances. We understand in the absence of a judge that that may be done, and we do it.

Q. If you do not want to answer this question, all right. But what aroused your suspicion? What did you think they were trying to put on you or somebody else or anybody else?—A. I thought they were trying to select a department which they thought they could control. I did not know what the department was, but I am satisfied it was not Judge St. Sure's department because they did not proceed with his division.

Q. Did you think, to put it plainly, that they wanted you because they thought they could control you?—A. I do not know whether they thought so, but they were disappointed if they did.

Q. Did you or did you not think they were trying to control you?—A. I thought they were trying to control the appointment of a receiver and his attorney.

Q. Did you think they took you for an "easier mark" than Judge St. Sure?—A. I had no reason to know. They had suggested Mr. Strong. I had consented to his appointment, with the proviso of being consulted as to the attorney, before the matter of the second filing was brought to my attention, and when it was brought to my attention I was ready to divest myself of the appointment by taking it up with Judge St. Sure. They were not favorable to taking it up with Judge St. Sure, and I concluded at the time it was because I had agreed to select Mr. Strong.

Q. Judge St. Sure, then, was, I believe you said, in Sacramento?—A. He was sitting at that time in his regular term at Sacramento.

Q. How often has it occurred that judges have appointed for each other in receivership matters since you have been on the Federal bench?—A. May I have that question again?

Q. I will repeat it. How often has it occurred that judges have appointed for each other in applications for receiverships since you have been on the Federal bench in equity cases?—A. I really do not know, but I know that Judge Kerrigan has acted at least twice in equity cases involving my department and Judge St. Sure has at least acted once. In the Pioneer Fruit Co. case he appointed Mr. J. Hartley Russell when I was in Sacramento.

Q. Was that an equity case?—A. I am not sure whether that was an equity or bankruptcy case, but it was a receivership case. We do not distinguish in the jurisdiction, as far as what we do for each other is concerned, between equity and bankruptcy. We treat the receivers the same.

Q. Who were the attorney and receiver, respectively, in the Prudential Holding Co. case?—A. The receiver in the Prudential Holding Co. case was Mr. G. H. Gilbert and the attorneys were Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel.

Q. What fees were allowed in that case?—A. There were no fees allowed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, before the manager leaves this point, I have a question which I desire to submit.

The WITNESS. May I finish my answer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may finish his answer.

The WITNESS. The order which I made divesting myself of jurisdiction prohibited any fees from being given.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana propounds an inquiry, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Did you tell Strong in the presence of one of McAuliffe's partners something to indicate that lawyers there at the time were not to be the attorneys, and did Strong agree?

The WITNESS. I did not put it quite in that way. I would be willing to say just exactly what I said. I asked Mr. Strong if any of the attorneys present were his attorneys, indicating the gentlemen who were present at that time, consisting of Mr. Marrin, his partner, Mr. Thelen; Mr. Brown, and Mr. Lloyd Dinkelspiel, who is of the firm of Heller, Ehrmann, White & McAuliffe, the attorneys for the stock exchange. He said that none of them were his attorneys. I asked if he had an attorney. He said he did not. I asked him if he would consult with me in the selection of an attorney, and he said he would. This was in the presence of those gentleman I have just named.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. In the Prudential Holding Co. case you made as a condition some provision in the order of domicile which prohibited the attorneys and receivers from getting fees in that matter, did you not?—A. The order which I made, being a jurisdictional one, by its very nature prevented any fees to be awarded to the attorneys.

Q. But what I am asking is, Did you put any peculiar wording of limitation upon their right to get fees or did their right to get fees?—A. Not in the Prudential Holding case. I made no order with any peculiar wording.

Q. But you made about the only order you could possibly make in that case, and when you say you made an order—A. Yes; under the issues presented. The issues were as to whether the court of the northern district of California had jurisdiction and venue, and I decided that it did not have such, and dismissed the case.

Q. In the Lumbermen's Reciprocal case you made a different sort of order because the circumstances were different, were they not?—A. I made a different order in that case decidedly. It was a different issue.

Q. Is that the case in which you set a condition to the mandate from the circuit court of appeals with reference to the right to appeal?—A. That is the case in which an order was presented to me by Mr. Woodworth with a proviso regarding the turning over of the property.

Q. You examined the order, did you not?—A. I did. I read the order.

Q. That order provided in substance that the mandate of the circuit court of appeals was not to go into effect provided the parties in interest appealed from your order granting compensation?—A. That is correct. As I have stated before, I gave you the representations made by Mr. Woodworth at that time to me, and I signed the order in that case in that form. I decided that it was erroneous and I called in Mr. Woodworth to have it corrected, and he corrected it according to what I directed him to do, and the incident was closed.

Q. How long a time expired between the time when you signed that order and the cancellation of the order?—A. I do not know. I presume the records will show.

Q. Have you any idea?—A. I have not.

Q. Was it anywhere in the neighborhood of a month?—A. I could not tell you. I have not verified the record to that effect, but I am sure that the testimony can be produced or has been produced in this matter.

Q. Is it not a fact that you did not cancel that order until this case was ready to go up on its second appeal?—A. It may be that I did not sign the order confirmatory of the stipulation. It is a fact that I did not sign it until after an appeal had been taken, but not perfected. There was a certain delay, I assume, during the time that the various parties to the litigation were being approached and before they consented to a stipulation. But I know the stipulation was made in accordance with my suggestion and at my request, and that I made it an order as well as a stipulation.

Q. And it was a condition of the order that this estate in litigation might be turned over to the insurance representatives of the estate provided there was no appeal taken from the fees that you had allowed Shortridge and Woodworth?—A. The order was in substance that, with an additional provision that either side might apply to me to change the order. As I told you before, Mr. Woodworth represented that both sides had agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair suggest that we have the question read? You have not answered it fully. If there is any explanation, your counsel may bring it out. I think it has already been answered.

The WITNESS. Mr. SUMNERS does not seem to understand and that is the reason why I was giving an explanation, largely for him.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I do not understand it. I confess I do not understand this matter of attaching a condition to the mandate of the circuit court of appeals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the witness desires, he may explain further.

The WITNESS. I can only explain by repeating what my prior testimony was, that I understood that Mr. Guereña and Mr. Woodworth had reached a point where they had agreed that a bond was the proper thing to have upon the money being turned over, and that this proviso was only to be in effect until the amount of the bond should be determined. Afterwards, upon going over the matter, I realized that it was an erroneous situation and it was an erroneous order, and I corrected the order.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. You arrived at that conclusion, did you not, Judge Louderback, after you saw this case was on the return route to the circuit court of appeals?—A. I do not know that I was actuated by the motive you speak of, or which is inferred, but I believe that I did not act in getting Mr. Woodworth to my office until after the appeal had been noted.

Q. I believe that the laws of California make provision that the mere intention to acquire new residence without the fact of removal avails nothing, nor does the fact of removal without the intention?—A. I do not question that it takes unity of act and intent.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all; you may take the witness.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have the last question and answer read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Official Reporter will read the last question and answer.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Q. I believe that the laws of California make provision that the mere intention to acquire new residence without the fact of removal avails nothing, nor does the fact of removal without the intention?—A. I do not question that it takes unity of act and intent.

Mr. LINFORTH. We have no redirect examination.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I submit the following question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada submits an interrogatory, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. In the Russell-Colvin case was the double filing done by the same attorneys in each instance?

The WITNESS. Yes; the same plaintiff and same defendant and the same petition.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I submit three questions which I desire to propound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho propounds certain interrogatories, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Did you require a plaintiff's bond in any equity receivership case other than the Russell-Colvin Co. case?

The WITNESS. I have not.

The Chief Clerk read further, as follows:

Q. Why would the pendency of other filing of the case necessitate a plaintiff's bond?

The WITNESS. Because I thought that I would take every possible precaution to defend or protect the parties in that case in view of the fact that it looked to me as if there were certain movements to control the estate.

The Chief Clerk read further, as follows:

Q. Why would a plaintiff's bond be necessary after the other filing was withdrawn or dismissed?

The WITNESS. It was only a superprecaution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I submit the following question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas submits an interrogatory, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. Did the stock exchange or any of its members hold the claims against Russell-Colvin Co. of which Mr. Strong was appointed receiver?

The WITNESS. I do not know; but there was a seat there, and what adjustments were made with relation to that seat I do not know. All this transpired before any of these interrelationships might arise. Nothing was brought to my attention during the course of the proceedings that I can recall now regarding that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further questions? If not, the witness may be excused.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, the respondent rests.

TESTIMONY IN REBUTTAL—EXAMINATION OF DANIEL W. MCCORMACK

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we should like to ask that Mr. McCormack be called at this time.

Daniel W. McCormack, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Mr. McCormack, will you be good enough to state your name and place of residence?—A. Daniel W. McCormack; Washington.

Q. What is your business, Mr. McCormack?—A. I am at the present time Commissioner General of Immigration; but, of course, my appearance here is in a purely private capacity.

Q. Have you recently been connected with the Irving Trust Co.?—A. Not since June 1, of 1930, I believe—Yes; 1930.

Q. Were you connected with the Irving Trust Co. at the time it was handling the Sonora Phonograph Co. as receiver?—A. I was.

Q. Are you familiar with the transactions which took place in San Francisco with reference to the ancillary receivership there?—A. I should say not—not with particular transactions in San Francisco. I was familiar with the general plan of the case.

Q. Briefly, what was the nature of the case in chief?

Mr. LINFORTH. One minute. We object to that question as not rebuttal in any sense of the word.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes; it is.

Mr. LINFORTH. Whatever charges they made insofar as this particular matter is concerned were gone into by them in their case in chief. We have met those charges; and we submit that under the guise of rebuttal the House should not be permitted to reopen the case and try it all over again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask the manager to state the reasons for the inquiry?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes, Mr. President.

It will be recalled that in the presentation of the evidence on behalf of the respondent it was testified by the ancillary receiver in this matter, and, I think, the respondent, that Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel represented the Irving Trust Co. in San Francisco in connection with the ancillary receivership. It is our purpose in offering this witness to show that he was in a managerial responsibility for the Irving Trust Co., which was the receiver in chief, and that Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel in no sense represented the Irving Trust Co., but, on the contrary, if we may be permitted to prove it, represented a firm of lawyers there who were insisting upon these ancillary receiverships over the country, to the added expense of that receivership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is overruled.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Will you state the facts with regard to your connection with the ancillary receivership, and the connection of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel with the ancillary receivership in San Francisco insofar as the Irving Trust Co. was concerned?—A. It must be understood that this matter transpired between 3 and 4 years ago, that I have had no connection with the Irving Trust Co. or its receivership department for the last 3 years, and that I cannot pretend to speak with entire accuracy upon what transpired. I will, however, endeavor to give the facts as I remember them; and if I am in any doubt, if I cannot be certain in my recollection, I will tell you.

The Sonora case came to the Irving Trust Co. as primary receiver; and when we first heard of it, a group of attorneys, resident, I believe, for the most part in New York, with among their membership Mr. Max Isaacs—who, as I recollect it, is the publisher of the Bankruptcy Review—appeared and indicated what was being done in connection with the receivership. Petitions were being filed for the primary receivership in New York, and ancillary proceedings were being filed in a number of other jurisdictions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Chair correct in understanding that the object and purpose of this evidence is to dispute evidence which the managers stated had been given by Mr. Dinkelspiel about his representation of the Sonora Phonograph Co.?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes; primarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair suggest that the witness be interrogated as to the point which the managers desire to have answered, and save going over unnecessary ground?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We should be very glad to do it, except we thought that possibly the Senators might like a little broader view of the case; but I will ask the direct questions and attempt to confine the testimony to the limitations indicated by the occupant of the chair.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. When did you first learn of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel in connection with these transactions?—A. I learned not of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, because I do not remember them as a firm, but of the appointment of ancillary receivers and their counsel at the time that the case was first brought to the Irving Trust Co. on the institution of the primary receivership proceedings.

Q. Do you know with whom Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel were associated in connection with litigation affecting this concern?—A. I will perhaps have to answer that question somewhat indirectly.

The group of attorneys who approached us had made or were making arrangements for the appointment of receivers in the ancillary jurisdictions, and doing so through their own correspondents. I believe, although I do not know definitely, that the firm of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel were correspondents of that group.

Q. Did Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel at any time represent the Irving Trust Co.?—A. To the best of my knowledge and belief, never.

Q. Have you had to do, to a considerable degree, with reference to the fees of attorneys for receivers in such proceedings as were had with reference to the Irving Trust Co. with regard to the Sonora Phonograph Co. matter?—A. With reference to the fees in that particular case, I should say not. With reference to receivers' and attorneys' fees generally, a great deal.

Q. What would you say would be a fair fee in the Sonora case, where the records of the attorneys show 60 hours' service?

Mr. LINFORTH. One moment. We object to the question as being, first without foundation, no showing having been made as to what the services were that were rendered during that period, and, further, not in rebuttal in any sense of the word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is sustained.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

Cross-examination by Mr. LINFORTH:

Q. Just a question or two, Mr. McCormack, please. There were certain attorneys looking after the affairs of the Sonora Phonograph Co., were there not?—A. You mean attorneys representing the company itself?

Q. Yes.—A. I assume so. I have no particular recollection of that fact, but there are in all cases.

Q. And representing also the receiver appointed by the court in New York?—A. I should say absolutely not. I want to complete the answer to that question, if I may.

We took particular care not to appoint any attorney in that case, or, as far as we could, in any other case, who had any interest or connection with the case itself.

Q. What attorneys were looking after the appointment of receivers in ancillary proceedings in States out of New York?—A. I can give you, from my personal recollection, the name of only one of them. There were a group, I should say, of at least three, and possibly five, of which Mr. Max Isaacs was one, who presented to us a complete scheme drawn up for the appointment of ancillary receivers in every possible jurisdiction.

Q. Is it one of that group that was delegated to do this particular work that was in communication with Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel?—A. I must only reply to that that I assume that it was one of this group. I have no personal knowledge whatsoever.

Mr. LINFORTH. We have no further questions.

Redirect examination by Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Was this group to whom you refer in any way connected with the Irving Trust Co.?—A. They most decidedly were not. They came in and attempted to get into the administration, but were, to the best of my knowledge and belief, completely shut out and entirely independent attorneys appointed, so far as the primary receivership was concerned.

Q. What was their object in taking an interest in the affairs of the Irving Trust Co. as they related to the Sonora Phonograph Co.?—A. Well, the usual interest that lawyers have in getting business.

Q. State that a little more particularly. What was their interest?—A. Well, if an attorney can arrange for the appointment of a receiver of his own choice, or of ancillary receivers of his choice and friendly to him, it means that the patronage in connection with the case will likewise, in general, go to his friends; and without attempting to interpret the motives of this particular group, that is the general statement of fact as I draw it from my experience.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further questions? If not, the witness is excused.

EXAMINATION OF J. S. EAGAN

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Call Mr. Eagan.

J. S. Eagan, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, we desire to introduce at this time the petition of attorneys for fees on account in the case of Sonora Phonograph Co., Inc., filed April 30, 1930. The petition and exhibits are printed in the book of exhibits, copy of which has been furnished counsel, at page 878.

Mr. LINFORTH. We object to the offer upon the ground that it is not rebuttal in any sense of the word. That is one of the original charges contained in the articles. The managers, on the part of the House, have introduced their proof on those articles. We have met that proof to the extent of our ability; and we protest against this case being reopened under the guise of rebuttal, and the petition for fees being offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The evidence had already been offered before counsel objected; but the present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that the evidence would be admissible even if the objection had been made in time.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Eagan, please state your full name, your place of residence, and your occupation.—A. J. S. Eagan; accountant, United States Bureau of Investigation; Washington, D.C.

Q. At the request of the managers on the part of the House, did you make a computation or summary of exhibit A to the petition for fees on account of attorneys for ancillary receiver in the Sonora Phonograph case, printed at page 881 of the exhibits?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the petition, and appended to the petition for attorneys fees an exhibit showing the time spent in the matter of the Sonora Phonograph Co. matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I hand you a statement, and ask you if this statement is the result of your computation of the time spent in that case?—A. (Examining.) It is.

Q. That indicates the time spent by Messrs. Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel as attorneys in the Sonora Phonograph case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many hours did they spend?

Mr. LINFORTH. One minute. We object to that question on the ground that it is not rebuttal in any sense of the word, but part of the original case of the complainants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is that the only ground of objection?

Mr. LINFORTH. Yes, Mr. President; we base it solely on that ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is overruled. (See U.S.S. exhibit 57.)

The pending question was read, as follows:

Q. How many hours did they spend?

The WITNESS. Sixty-five hours.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Eagan, at the request of the managers on the part of the House, did you make a recapitulation of exhibit 44, showing the financial transactions of Mr. Sam Leake with the Hotel Fairmont, which have been offered in evidence in this case?—A. I did.

Q. I show you a paper entitled "Recapitulation, exhibit 44, room 679", and ask you if that is the result of your work?—A. (Examining.) It is.

Q. Will you please state just what that recapitulation shows on its footings?

Mr. LINFORTH. We object to the question as not rebuttal in any sense of the word. Article 1 of the impeachment articles alleges a conspiracy between the respondent and Mr. Leake, and evidence has been introduced on that subject. These particular statements which are now referred to were offered during the course of the examination of witnesses on behalf of the House of Representatives in their case in chief, and we submit that subject should have been exhausted at that time. It is not rebuttal in any sense of the word. It is irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and not within any issue of this case other than the one to which I have called attention, on which evidence was offered in the case in chief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May I see the paper?

(The paper referred to was handed to the Presiding Officer.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is merely a recapitulation of the evidence which came in. I sustain the objection to it, but not on the ground which has been offered. I do not think it is admissible, because I think the papers speak for themselves.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, this is in the nature of convenience evidence for the trial body. I do not assume that anyone will have the time to go through all these records, and for the purpose of convenience to the trial body, we produce this in order to show just what those transactions ultimately were.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is sustained.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Eagan, can you tell, from an examination of the record of Mr. Leake at the Hotel Fairmont, how much money in cash he withdrew from the hotel?

Mr. LINFORTH. We object to that on the same ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is sustained.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Cross-examine.

Mr. LINFORTH. No questions.

(The witness retired from the stand.)

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we quite recognize the objection made to the offer, but there is a volume of testimony which has been frequently referred to, and the suggestion made that the testimony would not be reprinted because of the fact that it is contained in this document. We do not desire to make an offer or a tender in the face of objection, but it seems to me it would probably be to the very great convenience of the Senate, sitting as a court, if series 15, part III, in which have been included a great many things referred to in the testimony, should, in an official sort of way, be incorporated in the record in this case. We do not insist that it shall have any particular status before the court, but we offer it in order that it may be here for the convenience of the members of the court.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I am not quite clear, and I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry as to the tender or suggestion of counsel. I ask the Presiding Officer whether the tender is to have printed the parts referred to or have them identified by pages, so that the members of the court, by reference to the pages, may know what parts of this large document have been incorporated in the record or made a part of this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the manager state?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, my statement is intended to go to this effect: Here is a volume in which are assembled a great many documents which have been offered in this case, some of which have been specifically referred to. We do not care a thing on earth about how it is accepted, or whether it is accepted at all; but it has struck me that before the case concludes, counsel for the respondent, the managers on the part of the House, and the Senators themselves, might, upon the suggestion made, arrive at some conclusion as to what should be the status of this volume in the record of this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask counsel for respondent his view on that question?

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, this is our position: What is in that record I do not know. I did not know of its existence until a few days ago, when Mr. SUMNERS, one of the honorable managers, called it to my attention. At that time he stated that it included certain accounts which we were then offering in evidence, and it was then understood that those pages of that volume which dealt with the matters of those accounts and petitions might be considered and referred to instead of having the same printed anew in the daily proceedings here.

What documents other than that may be contained within that volume, I do not know. Whether they are relevant or not, I do not know. Whether they are in rebuttal or not, I do not know. Therefore, I am in no position to make any agreement with reference to any paper contained within that bound volume until and unless the document is first specifically called to our attention.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I am not in a position to tender this volume as admissible testimony under the rules of evidence, and in view of the suggestions made by counsel for the respondent, about the only thing I can suggest is that this book contains documents which purport to be copies of originals, and we can leave them with the Senate for whatever use the Senate may deem fit to put them to, but certainly we are not in a position to offer them as evidence under any rule of evidence of which we know, and we do not so offer them as evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask the managers whether they have any more witnesses?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I believe there are 1 or 2 very short witnesses. I shall have no more to say with regard to this document.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, in violation of the rule, to make one observation relative to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks the court for unanimous consent to make an observation with reference to this matter. Is there objection?

Mr. LINFORTH. None whatever from us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as stated by counsel for the respondent when he was tendering certain documents, one of the honorable managers for the House stated that in this volume there were found a number of those documents which were offered by counsel for the respondent; and the counsel for the respondent, accepting the statement of the honorable manager on the part of the House that this volume contained a correct statement of the tendered document, agreed, as I understood, that the document tendered by counsel for the respondent need not be printed, but that reference could be made to this volume in order that members of the court might ascertain just what the document was.

I therefore suggest that the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent confer and before the case is concluded indicate the pages in this volume which cover the documents in the volume which were offered by counsel for the respondent and which were accepted, so that the members of the court, by turning to the pages indicated, may know just what part of this volume has been admitted in evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel have heard the suggestion, and it can be taken up at a later date, when we have concluded with the witnesses. I suggest that the next witness be called.

Mr. LINFORTH. Counsel for the respondent will be glad to follow the course suggested.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We will be glad to do that.

REEXAMINATION OF HARRY L. FOUTS

Harry L. Fouts, having been heretofore duly sworn, was re-called as a witness and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager LEWIS:

Q. You have already been sworn, have you, Mr. Fouts?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. What is your position?—A. Deputy clerk of the United States District Court, Northern District of California.

Q. You have custody of the original records which have been referred to during the trial?—A. I have.

Q. Have you prepared a summary of the fees paid and the dates on which they were paid to the receiver and to the attorneys for the receiver in the following cases: Gardner M. Olmstead against Russell-Colvin Co., being the so-called "Russell-Colvin case"; in the Sonora Phonograph Co. case; and in the Helen Lay against the Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association case—A. I have.

Mr. Manager LEWIS. I may state to the court that this is simply a summary of a lot of evidence which has been presented, which Mr. Fouts has prepared, and we should like to introduce his summary, which will be in convenient form for the purposes of argument and for the court.

Mr. LINFORTH. I submit, if the court please, that that is wholly incompetent. Counsel can cover that in their argument, and they can state what the computation is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair thinks that counsel could use it in argument, and there would be no reason why either side could possibly be injured by having it placed in this convenient form, and, therefore, I overrule the objection.

By Mr. Manager LEWIS:

Q. You have that document with you?—A. Yes; I have.

Q. You prepared it?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it prepared by reference to the original instruments?—A. It was.

Q. You have the original documents in court?—A. I have.

Q. Will you identify this paper?—A. This one here? [Indicating.]

Q. Yes.—A. This is the summary we are talking about.

Q. I mean, will you identify it in some way? Identify it by your signature or initials or something, and we will then offer it.—A. The clerk informs me that it will be United States Senate Exhibit 58.

Mr. LEWIS. I offer it in evidence for the purpose indicated.

The paper admitted in evidence is as follows:

RECESS

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, may the managers on the part of the House have 7 minutes for a consultation in order to determine what shall be done with reference to the introduction of additional testimony?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senate, sitting as a court, will stand in recess for 7 minutes.

Thereupon (at 3 o'clock and 1 minute p.m.) the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment took a recess for 7 minutes. At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

CONCLUSION OF EVIDENCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are the managers for the House ready to proceed?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House are ready to announce to the Senate, sitting as a court, that they do not have additional testimony to offer; that is, with the understanding that counsel for the respondent have also finished with their testimony. I inquire of counsel if that is correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do counsel for the respondent have any further testimony to offer?

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, if the managers on the part of the House rest their case, the respondent rests.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Then, we all rest.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wonder if I heard aright or am I correct in understanding that both the honorable managers on the part of the House and the counsel for the respondent have rested?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

FINAL DISCHARGE OF WITNESSES

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for an order that all witnesses may be finally excused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, the order is entered, and all witnesses are finally excused from further attendance on the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

REQUEST TO BE EXCUSED FROM ATTENDANCE ON IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on account of illness, I have been away from the Chamber for a number of days. I was ill for several days before I left. I am happy to say that I am now in good health. I heard the opening speech of counsel in the Louderback impeachment case; I have heard none of the testimony, and feel myself incompetent either to vote or to continue as a member of the court. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that I may be excused from further attendance and from voting in the Impeachment Court.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that he be excused from further attendance upon the court and from voting in the impeachment proceedings. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ALLOWANCE OF TIME FOR ARGUMENT

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, at this time I submit the order which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order submitted by the Senator from Arizona will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the time for final argument of the case of Harold Louderback shall be limited to 3 hours, which said time shall be divided equally between the managers on the part of the House of Representatives and the counsel for the respondent, and the time thus assigned to each side shall be divided as each side for itself may determine.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire, before the vote is taken on the order, whether that is agreeable to both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was just about to ask that their view be given by the managers on the part of the House, and after that the view will be obtained of counsel for the respondent.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House, both by inclination and necessity, conform to the pleasure of the Senate. This is a very difficult case to present in an hour and a half, due, in no small degree, to the fact that many Senators have been compelled by urgent matters to absent themselves frequently from attendance upon the Senate sitting as a court. It would be very agreeable to the managers on the part of the House—and I hope we do not make ourselves misunderstood—if there could be more time allowed for the narrative of the evidence in this case, but I also want it understood that we accept, with perfect submission, the judgment of the Senate in that regard, since the Senate is, from this time on, more concerned than is the House, because the responsibility is the responsibility of the Senate.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, on behalf of the respondent, we announce that we are satisfied with an hour and a half, and do not expect to take that much time. We go farther, and say that if the learned gentlemen representing the prosecution in this matter are willing to submit the case to the Senate without argument, so is the respondent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate sitting as a court has heard the order read and the request that it be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I believe all of us who have followed the evidence and heard it realize that it is not going to be an easy matter to present the evidence and argue it logically and systematically. I think this afternoon some evidence was ruled out that is going to make it necessary in the argument to gather together a whole lot of evidence that is strung through this case. I do not believe that the Senate ought, no matter how tired we are now, when we are so nearly through, to spoil the record and compel the managers on the part of the House or the attorneys for the respondent to limit their time, especially to an hour and a half on a side.

I presume the argument will first be made by the managers on the part of the House, to be followed by counsel for the respondent, and then concluded by managers on the part of the House. If we divide that time, I think we would very seriously interfere with the presentation of the case. It seems to me the time ought to be doubled, not necessarily to be used, but counsel ought to be given that much time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what length of time the managers on the part of the House feel would be required properly to present the case?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President and the Senator from Arkansas, I hope the managers are putting themselves in the right attitude before the Senate. They accept whatever the Senate determines. If we were privileged to choose between 2 hours and an hour and a half, we would choose 2 hours in which to attempt to discharge the responsibility which we feel we owe to the Senate. It may be that the managers on the part of the House estimate that it will require longer than it will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to make a statement, the suggestion of Mr. Manager SUMNERS is that if the managers were required to choose between an hour and a half and 2 hours, they would choose 2 hours. My inquiry was as to what length of time the managers feel would be required properly to present their case. It is inconceivable to me that there should arise here any such issue as appears to be arising as to whether an hour and a half or 2 hours would be adequate for proper argument of the issues in the case. I should be disposed to extend every possible courtesy and consideration to the managers on the part of the House. If they had a definite request or suggestion to submit, it would be my disposition to concede their suggestion; but having failed to do that and having manifested their reluctance to indicate what length of time is required, in view of the rule governing this matter and the limitation that is imposed in the rule as to certain proceedings, it has seemed to me that the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] ought to be regarded as adequate. If, however, the managers on the part of the House say they cannot properly present their case within that time and would require additional time, I see no objection to granting it. I do feel, however, that the onus is upon them to indicate what length of time is required in order properly to present the matter.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. In view of the statement of the Senator from Arkansas we would appreciate being permitted to have 2 hours in which to present the views of the managers with reference to this case.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I, therefore, take the liberty and privilege of modifying the order which I sent to the desk, so that the word "three" shall be changed to "four", and I ask that it be read as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order as modified by the Senator from Arizona will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the time for final argument of the case of Harold Louderback shall be limited to 4 hours, which said time shall be divided equally between the managers on the part of the House of Representatives and the counsel for the respondent, and the time thus assigned to each side shall be divided as each side for itself may determine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the order as modified? If not, the order is entered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I may be out of order, but I am doing this in the interest of time. In the Archbald Impeachment case, which was the last one before this, the present senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was one of the learned managers on the part of the House.

I have followed that case as to form and procedure as best I could. At this juncture of the proceedings in the Archbald case the Senate went into executive session as jurors to pass upon certain questions merely of procedure in fixing the time for voting. I hesitate to make such a motion, because it may be the Senate will not care to adopt that procedure at this time; but if Senators wish to talk, as they have the right to do and possibly the duty is incumbent upon them to do, this is the appropriate time, because it is contemplated that argument will begin at 7 o'clock this evening. May I have the attention of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President I do not know whether it is the purpose of the able Senator from Arizona to discuss the matter in open session.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I would rather discuss it in executive session.

Mr. McNARY. I simply want to apprise him of the fact that I could not consent to an order of that kind at this time, but I shall be very happy to discuss it in executive session.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I am going to take the responsibility and liberty of suggesting, if I can get a second, which is required under the rule, that we go into executive session with closed doors.

Mr. KING. I second the request.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, why would it not be more appropriate to wait until argument is concluded before we take any such action?

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. I will withhold any further action. I withdraw the motion which I just made. Now, I will suggest, without making a motion, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative, or, if Senators prefer, that the Senate take a recess until 7 o'clock this evening, and that the argument shall begin at that hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator does not make that as a motion?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I merely lay the suggestion before the Senate, sitting as a court, for its consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a number of Senators have been away from the Chamber today necessarily on account of the important business before committees. Two very important matters are being investigated by major committees of the Senate today. Several of those Senators have expressed a desire to read the record, particularly the testimony of the respondent himself. I thought, and I still think, that probably the fairest way, in consideration of the wishes of those Senators, would be to return to legislative session this afternoon, adjourning the court until Thursday at 10 o'clock, and in the meantime the record will be printed and all Senators will have time to inform themselves of the testimony and then hear counsel's argument and decide the case in closed executive session. That would meet the convenience of those who are unable to be present today.

I shall not combat, for any personal reason, an evening session. I am as anxious as anyone to get through with this case. I concur in much the Senator from Arizona has said, but I think if we are considering the rights of those who are necessarily forced to be absent today, we should concede that they should have some opportunity to consider the record.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish at this time to acknowledge, and I think the Senate appreciates, the able assistance that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] has rendered to speed the proceedings as much as possible consistent with duty and with justice. I am very certain that it would not be of any utility or serve any useful purpose to prolong the case as far as Thursday. Personally, I believe the argument should begin tonight. I fancy it will be impossible to secure such an agreement, but I certainly think the argument should begin not later than 10 o'clock tomorrow morning and that voting should be had not later than tomorrow evening.

Mr. McNARY. I think that is a very fair proposal. If we would conclude our session today as a court, after some attention is given to legislative business, and adjourn the court until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, at which time argument would start, everyone would have the printed record early in the morning and an opportunity to read it would be afforded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I inquire of the managers on the part of the House and of counsel for the respondent whether they would be ready to proceed with the argument this evening?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President and the Senator from Arkansas, the managers have no preference in regard to that matter. We would undertake to proceed this afternoon if it should be the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. LINFORTH. Mr. President, on behalf of the respondent we announce that we are ready at any time that will suit the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I inquire, then, if we may not proceed now with the argument? We can later determine when we wish to consider matters in executive session.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. It would require some period of consultation among the managers on the part of the House to determine the allocation of time and responsibility. We would not be prepared to start at this moment anyway.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas if he has asked that the argument be proceeded with this afternoon?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. Mr. President, I am going to make the suggestion that the Senate sitting as a court take a recess at this time, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business for a time, and that at the hour of 7:30 o'clock this evening the court resume its sitting for the purpose of hearing argument. That will afford an opportunity to confer, and then it will necessarily carry over the conclusion of the matter, probably until tomorrow, but it will not work inconvenience to either party to the controversy. I make that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas makes the suggestion.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I must again state the attitude of some who are absent today. I thought that it would be a very fair proposition to recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, giving Members an opportunity for a short time in the morning to read the record of the testimony of the respondent and have it before them, and the argument then proceed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In view of the insistence of the Senator from Oregon I suggest that the Senate, sitting as a court, now rise and resume its session at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning for the purpose of proceeding to the conclusion of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Thereupon (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.) the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 24, 1933, at 10 o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The Senate, pursuant to the order for a recess entered yesterday, resumed legislative session.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal for the calendar days of May 15 to May 20, inclusive, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 753) to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval, the Military, and the Coast Guard Academies.

RATIFICATION OF PROPOSED CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT BY NEW HAMPSHIRE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of state of New Hampshire, transmitting a concurrent resolution, adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, ratifying the proposed child-labor amendment to the Constitution, which, with the accompanying resolution, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
SECRETARY OF STATE,
Concord, May 22, 1933.

To the PRESIDING OFFICER UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: We have the honor to submit herewith the concurrent resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the regulation and limitation of labor by persons under 18 years of age.

Very truly yours,

ENOCH D. FULLER,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, 1933.

Concurrent resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States of America, by a constitutional majority of two thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

"SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article, except that the operation of State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress."

Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of New Hampshire (the senate concurring), That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire.

That certified copies of this preamble and concurrent resolution be forwarded by the Governor of this State to the Secretary of State at Washington, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

May 17, 1933.

Attest:

[SEAL]

ENOCH D. FULLER,
Secretary of State.

PROPOSED HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION IN TEXAS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Center, and the Commissioners Court of Van Zandt County, in the State of Texas, endorsing the program of President Roosevelt and favoring the inauguration of a public-works program for unemployment relief providing highway construction in the State of Texas, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITION FOR ABOLITION OF RAILROAD GRADE CROSSINGS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a petition from Prof. Edward T. Lee, the head of the John Marshall Law School, of the city of Chicago, who is a very distinguished man, for the abolition of railroad grade crossings.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"WHAT SHALL A MAN NOT GIVE IN EXCHANGE FOR HIS LIFE?"—"FIVE YOUTHS KILLED WHEN IOWA TRAIN AND AUTO CRASH"—"THREE KILLED IN INDIANA ACCIDENT" (MAN, WIFE, AND SISTER)—"THREE KILLED AS FAST TRAIN SMASHES AUTO" (A YOUNG COUPLE AND A 12-YEAR-OLD GIRL WERE KILLED)

To the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

Your petitioner, a citizen of the United States, residing in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, respectfully represents:

1. That the above quotations are taken from a Chicago newspaper on 2 successive days. The number might be increased by similar daily killings in various parts of our country. Statistics show that in 12 years, from 1919 to 1930, 25,354 human beings in the United States were killed, many horribly, in railroad crossing accidents, and that 72,700 were injured, many of them doubtless crippled and rendered useless for life. At that rate there will be killed in a single generation more persons than the number of the United States soldiers killed in the World War (47,949). This slaughter of the innocent (for those killed were not guilty of any crime punishable by death) pales into insignificance the number of victims of the car of juggernaut in ages and countries we choose to regard as uncivilized. The roads through the tiger-infested jungles of India and Africa are safer today than our American highways; and in those countries efforts are made to destroy the cause. No effective steps have been taken to remove the danger and to stop this useless destruction of human lives in large portions of our country. Communities have left the matter to the railroads—the railroads to communities.

2. What, then, is to be done about it? Communities and railroads today, even if they wanted to abolish these grade crossings, are not in a financial position to do so. State, county, and municipal, as well as private corporate resources, are too exhausted for such an undertaking. It is most obvious that the railroads have not the money and will never have the money to abolish these man-killing grade crossings, nor can they be compelled to do so. Many of them are bankrupt, others on the verge of bankruptcy. Eventually the United States may take over the railroads of the country. Certainly it will have to continue its present policy of assisting them in the interests of interstate commerce.

3. In this situation, and in the present state of unemployment, when the Government of the United States is considering and devising means to combat the present business depression and to start again the wheels of industry, is it not a practical suggestion that the Congress should authorize the President to undertake this humane work of saving the lives of our citizens, more precious than things material? What wakes of human sorrow and financial loss follow these unnecessary deaths no imagination can picture. Young and old, rich and poor, good and bad alike are victims. Only the fact that these killings occur a few at a time and in many different places lulls us all into a feeling of security for ourselves and ours, keeps us from rising in our might to end them, as we would if a public enemy or hostile force of nature were smiting us.

4. Would not this work be an investment on the part of the Government? Would it not, if undertaken, have the distinct advantage over all other plans of relief of reviving industry in every one of the 48 States of the Union? For in every one of these States are these deadly railroad crossings. Their removal would give employment in every locality where one exists, calling for unskilled and skilled labor, demanding the products of the mill, the mine, the factory, thus reviving industry in many of its forms and in many places.

If this work should cost $500,000,000 or more, it would be a wise investment, for the expenditure would be for work that ought to be done, and it would in time pay for itself in the saving not only of material things but in the most precious of our possessions—the lives of our fellow citizens. It would be an appropriation that, in my opinion, would meet with the full approval of our people everywhere.

5. Your petitioner, therefore, respectfully prays that the Congress of the United States may recognize this daily and avoidable destruction of the lives of our fellow citizens and provide for the general welfare by appropriating a sufficient sum of money to abolish grade crossings along our main highways of travel lying outside the limits of municipalities in the United States.

Respectfully,

EDWARD T. LEE.

CHICAGO, ILL., May 6, 1933.

LOANS TO THE LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions of the stock growers of eastern Nevada pertaining to loans that should be granted to the stock industry from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There being no objections, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions and recommendations offered at a meeting of the Elko Chamber of Commerce, held at Elko, Nev., on April 27, 1933, together with representatives of the Eastern Nevada Woolgrowers Association and prominent members of the Nevada Livestock Association, and unanimously passed and adopted at the regular meeting of the Elko Chamber of Commerce, held at Elko, Nev., on May 11, 1933; H. L. Bartlett, president of the Elko Chamber of Commerce, presiding; the same being in the words and figures as follows, to wit:

"Whereas the present economic and financial difficulties common to nearly every part of the country, which, with the closing of the oldest banking institutions of the State, place the livestock industry of this section in a most serious situation; and

"Whereas it is currently reported that the several loan agencies of the Government of the United States are to be reorganized and consolidated; and

"Whereas prompt and unrestricted action (not hampered by technicalities and so-called "red tape" and bureaucracy), fully protected by safe, sane, and common-sense business methods, is the essential need of the hour; and

"Whereas practically all Elko County cases are cited where more than 5 months have passed since application was made for needed financial aid, and this aid is still being delayed by correspondence concerning technical questions, and the attitude of said agencies seems to be one of passive resistance; and, while it is assumed that these agencies were set up for the sole purpose of assisting the livestock industry, cases exist where the entire legal battery is focused on some technical objection, without suggestion as to remedy, while practically all such cases are amenable to adjustment and correction;

"Now, therefore, this body recommends that some method be devised by the new agency to be set up for the relief of the livestock and other industries, whereby such relief may be provided with the least possible delay, consistent with good, sound business practices, and that emphasis be placed on actual rather than fine-grained technicalities.

"We, therefore, heartily approve of the reorganization and consolidation of the several loan agencies.

"We further recommend that the Federal Loan Agency Act be amended to make loans on ranch property based on the appraisal value of the ranch as a complete unit, giving due consideration to well-improved ranch properties, their ownership, leased lands, grazing rights and other established rights; such appraisal value to be based on the complete operating unit.

"We further recommend that in all cases of old and well-established outfits, who have gained recognition for efficient management and whose record and standing are above reproach, where their operations are conducted on a larger scale than the average stockmen, that the amount which they may borrow be only limited by the value of the security offered.

"We further recommend that these loans be made to corporations, copartnerships, and associations as well as individuals.

"We further recommend that these and all existing loans be reamortized on a 40-year basis, and that the rate of interest be not in excess of 3 percent per annum.

"We further recommend that, in view of the fact that Elko County is the center of one of the largest livestock districts of the State of Nevada, a loan agency be set up at Elko, Nev. for the convenience of the stockmen."

H. L. BARTLETT,

President of the Elko Chamber of Commerce.

Attest:

MILO TABER, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1564) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing the Great Falls Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Great Falls", approved April 21, 1928, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 89) thereon.

Mr. BULKLEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1648. An act to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to provide for loans to closed building and loan associations (Rept. No. 90); and

H.R. 5240. An act to provide emergency relief with respect to home-mortgage indebtedness, to refinance home mortgages, to extend relief to the owners of homes occupied by them and who are unable to amortize their debts elsewhere, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, to increase the market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 91).

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POPE:

A bill (S. 1750) to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to include apiarans; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 1751) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen", approved May 13, 1932, to desert-land entrymen, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. BYRD:

A bill (S. 1752) to extend certain letters patent to the Stark Car-Coupler Corporation; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 1753) for the relief of Marcella Leahy McNerney; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. DICKINSON:

A bill (S. 1754) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near New Boston, Ill.; to the Committee on Commerce.

REGULATION OF OIL PRODUCTION—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on the 19th of May I introduced Senate bill 1736, for the regulation of the oil industry. It was first referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I ask unanimous consent that that committee may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACK in the chair). The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which has been referred Senate bill 1736, may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. Is there objection?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, although this bill is properly one belonging to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I have no objection if the Senator desires to have it go to another committee. I do not know, however, what other committee would have jurisdiction of it.

Mr. CAPPER. It contains provision for the collection of a tax, and probably more appropriately belongs to the Finance Committee.

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to the reference of the bill to that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

REGULATION OF BANKING—AMENDMENT

Mr. AUSTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 1631, the banking bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CONFERRING OF DEGREES UPON NAVAL ACADEMY GRADUATES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of a conference report which I have heretofore submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 753) to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Academies", at the end of the said amendment, insert the following: "from and after the date of the accrediting of said academies by the Association of American Universities"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

PARK TRAMMELL,
FREDERICK HALE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

CARL VINSON,
FRED A. BRITTEN,

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the conference report?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask for some information in regard to this matter.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will give a very brief explanation of it, Mr. President.

The Senate passed a bill providing that the degree of bachelor of science should be given to graduates of the Naval Academy at Annapolis. The bill went to the House, which added to it a provision that the Military Academy at West Point and the Coast Guard Academy should also be permitted to give those degrees. The Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House, and asked for a conference; and at the conference it was agreed that an amendment should be added to the amendment made by the House to the effect that the degree of bachelor of science should be granted by these institutions only when they were accredited by the Association of American Universities.

Mr. KING. Does either the amendment or the conference report provide that the Coast Guard school shall also be authorized to grant the degree of bachelor of science?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It provides that they shall be so authorized when they are an accredited institution of the Association of American Universities. At the present time I doubt if they would meet that standard; but they will have to meet the same standard that the other two institutions meet before they will be entitled to confer the degree.

Mr. KING. From the Senator's investigation as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has any information been brought to the attention of the committee that would warrant the assumption that persons who are studying in the Coast Guard school are entitled to the degree of bachelor of science or bachelor of arts?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is claimed that the Coast Guard Academy now has about the same curriculum standard as the Naval Academy. They have a 4-year course. It has been very much enlarged. The first graduates under the 4-year course, I think, will graduate next year. The committee of conference felt willing to put a provision in the report that if they should meet the standard of requirement that is complied with by the other colleges throughout the country they could confer the degree just the same as the other two schools; but I understand that for this particular year they would not meet that standard. I do not think there is any question about that, although they claim that they have now put the curriculum on the same basis as the other institutions, covering a 4-year period.

Mr. KING. This bill, then, is designed to confer degrees by act of Congress. In other words, instead of receiving degrees from educational institutions, they are to be conferred by legislative act.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If they comply with certain standards, they can confer the degree. Of course, the Naval Academy and the Military Academy meet that requirement now. The other school probably does not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

LONDON ECONOMIC CONFERENCE—ADDRESS BY ASSISTANT SECRETARY MOLEY

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered over the radio by Assistant Secretary Moley on May 20 on the London Economic Conference. It is a very interesting and illuminating discussion of some very important problems.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The World Economic and Monetary Conference, which begins next month in London, is the result of the historical conference at Lausanne a year ago. Toward the close of that conference in July of last year, a resolution was adopted suggesting that the general program of the London conference should be divided into two parts, financial and economic.

Among the financial questions were monetary and credit policy, exchange policies, the level of prices and the movement of capital.

Among the economic questions, the Lausanne resolution suggested the general subject of improved conditions of produce and trade interchange, with particular attention to tariff policy; prohibition and restrictions of imports and exports, quotas and other barriers to trade and producers' agreements.

In preparing for the conference, the nations created what was known as an "Agenda committee", charged with the duty of exploring the field in a preliminary way and of setting up a program for the consideration of the conference.

The work of this committee cannot in any restricted sense bind the conference itself and insofar as the Agenda committee expressed opinions, these cannot be binding on the conference. It did, however, set up a fairly satisfactory list of topics to guide the conference and make some helpful suggestions with regard to the consideration of each.

It may be interesting in view of the importance of the Agenda in planning the course of action for the conference to describe its essential outlines. It begins with a discussion of the conditions under which a successful restoration of a free gold standard may be considered. No positive and dogmatic conditions are laid down with regard to this. This following statement indicates the care with which the Agenda committee handled this subject:

"The time when it will be possible for a particular country to return to the gold standard and the exchange parity at which such a return can safely be made will necessarily depend upon the conditions in that country, as well as those abroad, and these questions can only be determined by the proper authorities in each country separately."

RETURN TO GOLD STANDARD AN OUTSTANDING TOPIC

It should be noted that this was said by a committee meeting some months before the United States left the gold standard. It was no doubt an expression which met with the full approval of the representatives of countries that were then off the gold standard and, presumably, represented the particular conditions to be faced by a country in such a status. No doubt the consideration and thorough exploration of this question will be one of the most useful discussions of the conference.

The agenda, moreover, suggests the importance of a joint consideration of currency policy to be followed prior to such a general restoration. It invites an examination of various practical questions related to the functioning of the gold standard, such as the relation between political authority and central banks, a question now under discussion here in the United States.

The problem of monetary reserves is also involved. The agenda suggests the lowering of cover ratios and other methods of economizing gold and, finally, in this connection, the cooperation of central banks and credit policy.

One of the very important questions to be considered will be the status of silver in world economic policy. Not only the United States but many other nations have a deep concern in this question, which will probably be centered around various methods of raising the price of silver.

In preliminary discussions, foreign governments have expressed themselves as sympathetic to this general point of view. As is pointed out by sound advocates of silver, it is not a question of remonetizing silver so much as the enhancement in the price of silver in order that oriental and South American countries may again be able to purchase American goods.

A major section of the agenda deals with the level of prices. It points out that the tremendous fall in the price level makes the position of debtors exceedingly disquieting and unpleasant. This general situation produces a world-wide distress.

Moreover, decline in prices has not proceeded at the same pace for all classes of commodities. This has caused very serious confusion in international adjustments. Here again, the majority of the representatives of the various nations participating in the conferences in Washington in the past month have favored constructive action to increase the price level.

A further section of the agenda is entitled, "The Resumption of the Movement of Capital." This covers not only the question of existing indebtedness, but suggests the possibility of new and safer methods of international lending.

Probably the most perplexing and difficult part of the conference will have to do with the restrictions on international trade. The report of the agenda committee very strongly points out the innumerable methods now used by nations to establish trade advantages, including not only tariffs but exchange restrictions, clearing agreements, measures relating to the obligation to affix marks of origin on imported goods, quotas, prohibitions, and many others. It points out the various methods of dealing with these restrictions, the difficulties and advantages in the case of each. Practical measures with respect to this subject will no doubt be presented for consideration.

The agenda suggests economic agreements with respect to specific articles like wheat, and, also, various metals. Finally, the agenda suggests some consideration of shipping and of ship subsidies.

UNITED STATES BARS WAR DEBTS AS TOPIC

The American delegates on the agenda were especially enjoined not to permit the introduction of the subject of the debts owed to the United States by foreign governments into the list of topics to be discussed at the conference. This wise prohibition represented not only the point of view of the Hoover administration but of the present one as well.

It was the firm conviction of President Roosevelt, expressed even before his inauguration, that the subject of these debts should not be considered in connection with general economic matters of mutual interest, although they might be discussed concurrently. His contention has been that the various matters involved in the conference can, most of them, be adjusted to the mutual advantage and satisfaction of the various parties concerned and, except in unusual cases, the settlement of one need not be based upon the settlement of another.

It is, for example, exceedingly difficult to measure the relative values of a trade concession, let us say, against an agreement to stabilize currency. Any general process of trading results in an international market place rather than in an economic conference looking to the general rehabilitation of the world on a sounder and more enlightened basis.

Somewhat in the spirit of this position is the contention of the present administration that the debts are not a matter to be traded against other matters but are essentially questions to be determined in consultation with the countries concerned. The further point is that the debtor countries cannot be recognized collectively in the consideration of the debts and that each one separately and distinctly should be heard at any time that it wishes to present suggestions or requests.

It was clear very early in this present year that much of the success of the conference would depend upon the extent to which the participating governments understood each others' problems and points of view, before the conference should assemble.

Therefore, President Roosevelt invited to Washington individually representatives of various countries to discuss the considerations involved in the economic conference. This invitation resulted in individual discussions between representatives of the United States and a score of nations.

Some of the nations, notably England, France, Italy, Germany, and China, sent special representatives, accompanied by expert delegations. Others delegated their accredited representatives in this country to carry on these conversations.

In these conferences there were reviewed by the various topics in the agenda of the conference, and the points of view of the various governments were mutually and sympathetically reviewed. These preliminary conversations were not intended to be definite. Agreements were not sought, but rather mutual understanding was sought.

One thought has come to the foreground of my own mind as I have met and talked with these various representatives. It is the thought that the people of the world, as well as their own rulers, have so suffered during these years of the depression that there is everywhere a feeling of nervousness, not to say fear, in the face of the problems which are involved in recovery. It is not bitter-end chauvinism nor cold and calculated selfishness that makes the way to universal agreement so difficult. It is fear and uncertainty.

The disposition of all of these delegates to lend a willing hand to general recovery was unmistakable. The communiques of good will and hope issued by President Roosevelt and the various leaders during these conferences were not mere formal expressions of international piety but bespoke a concerted desire to be helpful. No one who came into contact with these representatives could fail to discern their sincerity.

But they were, nearly all of them, just as we have been, afraid. They had all experienced the heart-breaking burdens attendant upon participation in the governing of nations which were, for many economic reasons, deeply depressed. If the nations have taken measures to protect themselves even to the extent of shutting out contacts with others, it is largely due to this psychology. To become resentful in the face of these matters is to make them still worse.

FEAR AMONG NATIONS IS MOST SERIOUS PROBLEM

This deep fear of the nations of the world is the most serious problem which must be met at the World Economic Conference.

That it can be partially dissipated by the initial meetings can be confidently expected. But it must be remembered that each delegate in London will have come from a nation over which the icy atmosphere of economic fear has prevailed. The delegates may, as individuals, join in a common spirit of give and take, but their conclusions will always be modified by what their parliamentary bodies will be willing to approve.

This means for one thing that the thought of what reaction they will meet when they return home will act as a restraint upon what they are able to accomplish at the conference itself. And it means in addition that they will be actuated by a personal pride in achieving as much as they can—in other words, in achieving a diplomatic victory for themselves.

This suggests a competitiveness among the delegations which will reflect and intensify the larger competitiveness among the nations they represent.

One of the great problems of the conference will be to reduce to a minimum this spirit of competitiveness. It can be done in part by mutual understanding and in part by a limitation of the efforts to those suggestions that provide the opportunity for a genuine meeting of minds.

In other words, the conference will best serve the hopes and expectations of the world if it does not attempt the unattainable.

That this will be true no one can doubt after a calm review of the views of the practical men sent here by the foreign nations to discuss their problems with us.

There are, however, some problems for which solutions will probably be found. The first of these relates to the immediate monetary policy of the various governments. No doubt the establishment of better relationships between the central bank in each country and the government of that country, together with a closer cooperation between all central banks, would help recovery.

This is primarily a matter for the action of the central banks, but it might well be supplemented by an agreement among governments to synchronize policies of internal public expenditures with the aim of increasing internal trade and employment. Of course, the details of such policies of public expenditures and other action will necessarily be left to the governments themselves; but there is a great value to be derived from coordinating these policies by international understandings.

At the present time, specifically, the United States is in the act of working out its own internal policy of public expenditures. That is in part the import of the message sent by President Roosevelt to the Congress last Wednesday. Part of the philosophy behind this measure is that the Government is seeking to counteract the element of uncertainty in our economic life which makes individuals unwilling to engage in normal business activity.

It is necessary to repeat, however, that determination of such policies must in the final analysis be left to each government. But the coming conference should provide the theater for a better mutual understanding of the policies of the participating governments.

The second problem with regard to the money matters relates to exchange. It is generally agreed that out of the conference there must come progress in the removal of exchange restrictions.

These restrictions exist because of topheavy debt structures, but action with regard to this is not, however, primarily a Government problem. These debts are for the most private debts. But it is possible for governments to guide their nationals toward the finding of a solution.

TARIFF AMONG ISSUES OF DOMESTIC DIFFICULTY

Turning from the financial questions to the second class of problems, economic matters, we find questions much more difficult of solution. All of the nations, including our own, have in the past years erected tariffs and other barriers against trade, designed to secure for themselves a favorable balance of payments. The erection of such barriers has often gone hand in hand with various exchange operations.

The process by which this has happened is long and intricate and need not be gone into here. But the fact is that in the past 10 years each nation has been moving in the direction of setting up a self-contained economic life within its own borders. Thus it will be difficult to make extensive attacks upon trade barriers, however much this may be desired.

This points to a fact which should be made very plain. It should not be expected that the conference itself is going to be able to lay out a plan for a series of international measures which will bring about the alleviation of economic difficulties all over the world.

It is a popular fallacy that the depression has acted like a kind of disease which has swept over one nation after another by the process of contagion. It was argued by a number of distinguished Republicans in the last campaign that our own depression came as a result of a bank failure in Austria.

The fact is that there are many depressions in many countries, which did not come upon them at the same time and which have not affected them in the same way. It is overwhelmingly clear that a good part of the ills of each country is domestic.

The action of an international conference which attempted to bring about cures for these difficulties solely by concerted international measures would necessarily result in failure. In large part the cures for our difficulties lie within ourselves. Each nation must set its own house in order and a meeting of representatives of all of the nations is useful in large part only to coordinate in some measure these national activities. Beyond this there are relatively few remedies which might be called "international remedies."

The failure of international conferences arises from two mistakes. The first is that the general public is led to expect altogether too much from such international action.

The other mistake is that the mutual enthusiasm of those participating in conferences leads them to attempt more than can reasonably be expected in the way of accomplishment.

The clear understanding of these possibilities of danger must be had in approaching this conference. It is very important that such mistakes be avoided.

With clear understanding of the nature of the conference and its objectives, the people of the United States can place the advantages that they may expect from it in the proper proportion to their general view of their own economic recovery. Above all, they must recognize that world trade is, after all, only a small percentage of the entire trade of the United States. This means that our domestic policy is of paramount importance.

We must recognize, all of us, that common sense dictates that we build the basis of our prosperity here and direct all of our efforts to the end that our national welfare and prosperity may lead us away from the distress into which the depression plunged us. But wise international cooperation can help distinctly and permanently.

AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATION—ADDRESS BY EDWARD A. O'NEAL

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by Edward A. O'Neal, President of the American Farm Bureau Federation, delivered over the radio on May 13, 1933.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Congress has been in session a little over 2 months. During these few momentous weeks more far-reaching legislative and administrative action has been taken by the Government at Washington than in any similar period in the history of the Nation. The new deal for agriculture and the Nation is being put into effect with a speed and definiteness that is most gratifying. It is somewhat bewildering to some of the oldtimers around Washington who are accustomed to the usual deliberateness and hesitancy in legislative procedure. The remark is heard frequently here that events are moving so rapidly that it is difficult to keep up with them.

Consequently, I feel that nothing I could say today would be of more interest to you, or more timely, than to give a brief report of what has been done here at Washington during the past 2 months to end the depression and restore prosperity to agriculture and the Nation.

Last February, just before the new administration assumed office, I was one of the national leaders invited by the Senate Finance Committee to present recommendations as to the causes and cure of the depression. I presented a comprehensive program which reflected not only the conclusions of the American Farm Bureau Federation, but also the conclusions of the leaders of organized agriculture, developed through numerous conferences which I had previously called.

I asked for the adoption of a national monetary policy to raise and stabilize commodity prices at a normal level, to give us an honest dollar, so that our debts could be repaid with the same kind of a dollar that we borrowed. And I presented a concrete plan for accomplishing this purpose by changing the weight of gold in the dollar to the extent necessary to achieve such stabilization.

I asked for the rehabilitation of agriculture and the restoration of its purchasing power. To attain this end, I recommend eight constructive proposals, as follows:

- (1) The enactment of surplus-control legislation to restore price parity to agriculture with other groups.
- (2) Tariff adjustment to restore foreign trade and to give agriculture the benefits of the home market as much as industry.
- (3) Reduction of taxes and the cost of government and the redistribution of the tax burden on a more equitable basis.
- (4) Refinancing of farm debts at low interest rates and reorganization of agricultural credit agencies to provide adequate credit at rates as low as other groups enjoy.
- (5) Reduction of transportation rates on farm products to a fair and equitable basis, and the development of the cheapest and most efficient forms of transportation.
- (6) Promotion of farmers' cooperative organizations so as to reduce the cost of distribution and so as to give the farmer a fair share of the consumer's dollar.
- (7) Guaranty of bank deposits in order to restore confidence and make the banks safe for depositors.
- (8) Development of national planning for the rehabilitation of rural life by a closer coordination with the farm organizations of all governmental agencies for the aid of agriculture.

Such, in brief outline, was the broad program which I presented to the incoming administration. Now let me review for you very briefly the wonderful progress that has been made on our program.

Yesterday, by invitation from the White House, I had the honor and the pleasure of witnessing President Roosevelt attach his signature to the new farm bill. This act, in which are consolidated three different measures—the farm relief bill, the farm mortgage bill, and the inflation bill—is the most comprehensive and far-reaching economic legislation ever enacted by an American Congress—a measure of world-wide significance, especially in its monetary aspects. As I watched the President's pen add the signature making these proposals the law of the land, I could not help but be thrilled by the historic importance of the occasion. It meant the dawn of a new day for American agriculture and the whole Nation. It meant the fulfillment of years of struggle and effort which we farm leaders have put into the long battle to gain equality for agriculture. It meant the discarding of outworn shibboleths and the establishment of a new economic and social order in America which puts men above money, and which restores justice in our economic structure. It is the greatest social development of the age. It meant the death knell of the depression and the beginning of the restoration of the purchasing power of agriculture, employment for labor, and prosperity for the Nation.

Truly, it is a new day for agriculture and a great day of victory for the American Farm Bureau Federation, which has stood in the forefront of the fight for equality for agriculture for so many years. At last the justice of our cause has been recognized. And not only has our cause been recognized, but we were called in by the administration to help formulate the measure to remedy the conditions confronting agriculture. And now we are being consulted as to the administration of the act. We feel that this is as it should be. This sort of teamwork between the Government and organized agriculture is essential if we are to have national planning for agriculture that will be on a sound basis and get effective results.

Title I of the farm bill has as its objective the relieving of the existing economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power. In the case of the great basic commodities—wheat, cotton, corn, hogs, tobacco, milk, and milk products—of which, in most instances, we produce huge surpluses, there are several alternative methods whereby production can be brought more nearly in line with consumptive demands at home and abroad. This adjustment of production to consumption is to be brought about not by the compulsion of law, but by rewarding those who cooperate in adjusting their production as required and letting others take the economic consequences of their folly. The damping up of our surpluses owing to changed world conditions makes it necessary for every farmer to face conditions as they are and to adjust himself to the voluntary use of the equalization-fee principle as contained in this law. This bill goes farther than our old equalization-fee plan. Its application is voluntary for the farmer-producers but involuntary for the processors.

The farmers who adjust their production on a sound basis as required will be rewarded by the payment to them of either acreage rental payments on each acre retired from production or allotment benefits on each bushel of wheat or bale of cotton for domestic consumption. When the plan gets into full operation the amount of these payments, when added to the initial prices received by farmers, will be sufficient to give the farmers a total return equal to the pre-war purchasing power of the particular commodity on the portion for domestic consumption. No payments will be made on the portion going into export, since these products obviously must be sold at the world-market price.

In addition, the Secretary of Agriculture can negotiate marketing agreements and apply licensing powers with respect to any agricultural product. Under this provision relief can be brought to the producers of all farm products. Virtually, this gives the Secretary control over the distribution of farm products from the point of production to the point of consumption. The marketing agreements are exempted from the antitrust laws and are enforceable not only in the courts but by means of the licensing powers granted the Secretary under which he can require every processor and every distributor of any farm product to obtain a license from the Secretary of Agriculture. The scope of the powers under this licensing provision are virtually unlimited in carrying out the objective of the act, which is to restore farm purchasing power to normal. I quote from the act in this regard:

"Such licenses shall be subject to such terms and conditions * * * as may be necessary to eliminate unfair practices or charges that prevent or tend to prevent the effectuation of the declared policy and the restoration of normal economic conditions in the marketing of such commodities or products and the financing thereof."

The Secretary can suspend or revoke any license and thus stop the processor or distributor from doing business if he persists in violating the conditions laid down. This simply means that the Secretary has the power to lay down rules and regulations and prescribe such marketing agreements that will eliminate all unfair practices and profiteering in the marketing of farm products, to the end that farmers will be assured of a fair share of the consumer's dollar and the consumers will be protected from profiteering and racketeering.

This is one of the most fundamental and far-reaching parts of the bill. The lessening of the spread between the producer and the consumer is one of the greatest tasks before us. It is estimated that there is an annual waste of $10,000,000,000 in our distribution system, not to mention the profiteering and unfair share of the consumer's dollar which is being taken by the agencies between producer and consumer. Our cost of distribution of food products in December 1932 was 147 percent of the pre-war, or 47 percent higher than the pre-war level, while farm prices are about 50 percent less than the pre-war level. It is this hand in the dark between the producer and the consumer which is taking so heavy a toll from farmers and consumers. The farmer gets too little and the consumer pays too much. The Secretary now has the power to correct this injustice and give the farmers a fair return for their products without unduly burdening consumers. I hope he will use it to the fullest extent necessary to bring this about.

Thus, under this bill, Congress has placed squarely upon the Secretary of Agriculture and the administration the responsibility of restoring farm purchasing power to normal, endowed him with broad powers, and virtually said: "Now it is up to you to do the job."

The bill carries out the main principles of farm relief legislation which the American Farm Bureau Federation and other farm organizations agreed upon at the historic farm conference held by Secretary Wallace on March 10. The Secretary is following in his distinguished father's footsteps, and has proved himself to be a true and tried friend of agriculture, one who deserves the whole-hearted support of all of us whether or not we live on the farms of our Nation. It is announced that our old friend, George Peek, the veteran champion of equality for agriculture, will be the administrator of the act. He is a charter member of the Illinois agricultural association—the Illinois Farm Bureau. The farmers have confidence in these two leaders.

The passage of this bill represents one of the greatest legislative victories which organized agriculture ever achieved. It is the first fundamental farm relief measure advocated by organized agriculture which has ever been enacted into law.

The measure passed substantially in the form desired by the administration. To show the remarkable support which the measure commanded in Congress, the bill first passed the House by a vote of 315 to 98—more than 3 to 1 in favor of it. Later it passed the Senate by a vote of 64 to 20—also more than 3 to 1 in favor of it. Finally the conference report was approved by both Houses.

Secretary Wallace is losing no time in getting under way to administer the bill. Long before final approval of the measure was given, he and his staff of assistants were giving consideration to the problems of administration, in order to be ready to go right to work when the time came. I hope that every farmer in America will give him and his staff hearty and whole-hearted support and cooperation. No farm relief plan can succeed fully without the cooperation of the farmers themselves. To make it a complete success our farmers must give it their whole-hearted support.

The farm mortgage relief bill, which was added as title II of the farm bill, is designed to relieve the staggering debt burden of agriculture. It embodies a gigantic program for refinancing distressed-farm mortgages and other farm debts at a scale-down in principal and a sharp lowering of interest rates, and with 40 years' time in which to pay the principal of the debts.

A total of $2,000,000,000 to refinance farm mortgages is to be provided by a bond issue of the Federal land banks. In order to get the money at low cost, the interest on these bonds is to be guaranteed by the Government. The interest on the mortgages is to be just as low as the money can be obtained in the money market and made available for this purpose, but in no event can it exceed 4½ percent. The interest rate on all existing land bank loans is reduced to 4½ percent. This will mean an annual reduction of more than 20 percent in the annual interest payments of farm debtors who obtain this relief.

In addition, $200,000,000 is made available from funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for direct loans to farm debtors in distress, to refinance short-term loans, and debts other than first mortgages.

Deserving old and new borrowers through the Federal land banks, who are unable to meet their interest payments, can obtain extensions and amortize these delinquent installments over a 5-year period.

Neither old nor new borrowers from the Federal land banks will be required to make any payments on principal for 5 years.

We Farm Bureau leaders were consulted by the administration in formulating this great debt-relief program. It carries out in the main the recommendations of our rural-credits committee and our last annual meeting in providing for refinancing of farm debts at lower rates of interest and amortizing payments over longer periods of time. We sought a maximum lower limit on rate of interest, but we are assured that the administration will seek to sell the bonds at the lowest possible rate and give borrowers the benefit of any lower rate obtainable. It will enable farmers to hold their farms and help them to carry on until farm purchasing power is restored to normal. Gov. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., who is in charge of this gigantic relief program is an able administrator and the farmers' friend.

The inflation measure which was added to the farm bill confers far-reaching powers on the President to stop the deflation and to restore commodity prices generally. It authorizes the President to expand credit through the Federal Reserve System up to $3,000,000,000, to issue United States notes up to $3,000,000,000, to increase or decrease not more than 50 percent the weight of gold in the gold dollar, to fix the weight of the silver dollar at a fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed, to accept for a 1-year period not to exceed $200,000,000 worth of silver at 50 cents per ounce in payment of debts owed our Government by foreign governments, and to issue silver certificates against this silver.

Following the approval of the inflation measure by Congress, the President said: "The administration has the definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will on the average be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed. We do not seek to let them get such a cheap dollar that they will be able to pay back a great deal less than they borrowed. In other words, we seek to correct a wrong and not to create another wrong in the opposite direction. These high powers are being given to the administration to provide, if necessary, for an enlargement of credit in order to correct the existing wrong. These powers will be used when, as, and if it may be necessary to accomplish the purpose."

The one big thing lacking in this emergency program so far as that there is no yardstick established for our dollar. No one knows at what level its value is to be fixed, nor is there any mandate to maintain its value at any given level. This indefiniteness doubtless has decided advantages in negotiating with foreign countries for international monetary stabilization, but uncertainty, if long continued, is perilous. Uncertainty is not only disturbing to business but it invites undue speculation, which once started is difficult to stop. We are hoping therefore that the President will go ahead and complete the job of stabilization at the earliest practicable moment. We hope he will seek permanent legislation to stabilize our dollar at a normal level of value so it will always have a constant purchasing power. We have recommended such action to the President and to Congress.

Such a permanent program is provided in the Goldsborough bill (H.R. 5160) which we have endorsed. This bill establishes an independent Government agency charged with the duty of changing the amount of gold in the dollar by varying the price of gold in terms of the dollar from time to time to the extent necessary to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar at a normal level, so that a dollar will always purchase a constant amount of goods. This is fair to the debtor and the creditor, and to the producer, and the consumer. This measure of value for the dollar carries out the constitutional obligation upon Congress to regulate the value of our money. It will complete the program initiated by President Roosevelt in restoring and stabilizing the commodity-price level.

The cost of government here at Washington is being drastically reduced, and it is estimated that the total expenditures of the Federal Government for the next fiscal year will be nearly $1,000,000,000 less than the expenditures this year. This action is a necessary forerunner of reduction in taxes. We are insisting, however, that economy be constructive and not discriminate unfairly against agriculture. We are fighting vigorously for the Extension Service, vocational education, and the land-grant colleges. It would be folly to destroy these fundamental agencies which are so essential to maintaining agriculture on a sound basis—so essential to national planning for agriculture. We have confidence to believe the President will not permit these agencies to be injured or destroyed.

Cooperative marketing of farm products is to be further aided by the Farm Credit Administration. A special division is to be set up to make loans to cooperative associations. The stabilization feature of the Agricultural Marketing Act, which was so costly, has been abolished and the funds that were left in the revolving fund of the old Farm Board will be used in the future exclusively for the purpose of loans to cooperative associations.

In the field of transportation most remarkable progress is being made. The Interstate Commerce Commission, in response to a joint petition filed by the American Farm Bureau Federation and four other organizations, has ordered an investigation of the general freight-rate level. We demanded a drastic reduction in the general level of rates on agricultural products and all basic commodities. The Commission moved quickly in ordering a public hearing, and we are hopeful of success.

Guaranty of bank deposits is not yet an accomplished fact, but a measure is being formulated by Senate and House leaders which is understood to provide for a guaranty fund built up by assessment of the banks, for the purpose of guaranteeing deposits. We still believe that the banks should be so regulated in their operations by the Government that the Government can stand back of the depositors, so that every depositor in the future will be sure of getting back every dollar which he entrusts to the bank. We hope that the new proposal will give the results we desire.

The great Muscle Shoals properties at last are to be put to work as a result of legislation approved this week by Congress. A Tennessee Valley Authority is to be set up by the Government to operate the gigantic hydroelectric plant at Muscle Shoals, build Cove Creek Dam, and otherwise develop the resources of the Tennessee River Valley. A great industrial expansion and development is expected in this area, providing cheaper power, cheaper fertilizer, increased employment, improved navigation facilities on the Tennessee River, and conservation of the natural resources of the valley. It is the fulfillment of a dream that has been cherished for years. We are backing the President's program for the Tennessee River Basin whereby the Government is to make Muscle Shoals a yardstick for the cost of power and a yardstick for the cost of fertilizer.

A $3,000,000,000 public-works program is also being formulated by the administration to stimulate employment and speed up economic recovery. We Farm Bureau leaders have urged that a large part of these funds be used for highway building, and especially, farm-to-market roads. I particularly stressed the building of low-cost farm-to-market roads, which give more mileage and more employment to labor per dollar of expenditure than high-cost boulevards.

By Executive order, effective this month, President Roosevelt has ordered a reorganization and consolidation of the numerous Federal agencies extending credit to agriculture into one agency, to be known as the "Farm Credit Administration." This consolidation will get rid of the duplication and inefficiency resulting from a multiplicity of credit agencies scattered among various branches of government. It carries out, in the main, the recommendations of our rural credits committee, and our annual convention last December.

Finally, we are making rapid progress toward national planning not only for agriculture but for the Nation. The new farm bill is now a law and the measures for planning in industry are being pushed forward rapidly. We are entering upon a new era in American life and achievement—an era of intelligent national planning. Less emphasis must be placed on rugged individualism and more emphasis on cooperation for mutual benefit. Economic justice must replace exploitation. Spiritual values must be exalted above material values. Men must be valued more than money. The old order broke down in the hour of our greatest need. It destroyed itself because it was founded upon the shifting sands of economic injustice in which the strong exploited the weak. Through this national planning we hope for a new era of prosperity and economic security, in which agriculture shall receive a fair share of the consumer's dollar, labor a fair share of the profits of industry, and capital a fair return on its investment.

We are rejoicing at the wonderful progress which has been made in these few weeks. Already there is new hope and confidence in the people such as we have not had since the depression struck us in full force. It gives us courage and hope to press forward for the completion of the task of economic reconstruction.

I am profoundly grateful for this remarkable progress and it gives me a thrill of pride in our great Farm Bureau organization, because of the prominent part which it has played and is continuing to play in bringing this new day to American agriculture.

The farmers are in the saddle in Washington. The Congress and the President are in deep sympathy with the farmers. The pledges to agriculture are being fulfilled. The success of this program to a large extent depends on its proper administration. It also depends on the whole-hearted cooperation of all farmers and all citizens. Let's all put our shoulders to the wheel and push forward on this reconstruction program.

STATEMENT BY GENERAL HINES AS TO WAR VETERANS' COMPENSATION

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Gen. Frank T. Hines, carried by the United Press, with reference to the previously existing and promulgated orders with reference to service-connected disabilities, showing a modification thereof.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, May 23, 1933]

WAR ILLS PENSIONS WILL BE CONTINUED—GENERAL HINES ANNOUNCES PLAN TO PROTECT VETERANS UNDER ECONOMY BILL

Veterans who have received disability from disease directly resulting from war-time service will be continued as service-connected cases under the economy bill, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Veterans' Bureau Administrator, announced last night.

That means that a veteran suffering from a 10 percent disability of that nature will be assured of a pension, the Veterans' Bureau head said.

The customary exceptions—that the veteran shall have an honorable discharge and shall not have acquired his disease "because of misconduct"—are made.

NEW SCHEDULES MODIFIED

"It is the announced policy," the Bureau's statement read, "to afford to veterans suffering from disabilities for which the conditions of military service are responsible every consideration consistent with the law and public welfare in general."

"It is no part of such a policy to reverse former decisions regarding the service incurrence of disease where such former decision was reasonably proper and the veteran now meets the requirements regarding character and conditions of war-time service."

Hines said another order had been issued modifying in some cases the new schedules for rating disabilities. It applies particularly to gunshot wounds, arrested tuberculosis, and the other forms of severe disability.

ASSURANCE TO VETERANS

"The purpose of this order," it was said, "is to give added assurance that veterans having disability directly traceable to war service would receive a fair pension notwithstanding reductions."

"Veterans may be assured, therefore, that any determinations made in their cases which do not conform to these instructions will be corrected immediately the present review is completed."

President Roosevelt's economy bill slashed approximately $400,000,000 from veterans' compensation, but he subsequently announced he intended to review the reduction in an attempt to avoid injustice.

JUST A DOG

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, since the death of my guide dog, Lux, last March the mails of this and other countries have brought me hundreds of letters of regret. So many expressions of interest have gladdened and surprised me. I now realize that Lux had many admirers and friends, and I am embarrassed as to how I may best give answer to these kind sharers in a grief that I had thought to bear alone. As my dumb friend's ready executor, I would willingly make a personal reply to each letter of this unexpected legacy of correspondence, but a trial of this usual method has convinced me that it would be too hard.

Therefore I am asking to have printed in the RECORD a letter of mine to the LaSalle Kennels, of Minneapolis, as an answer to them all; and as an acknowledgment of the many newspaper tributes to Lux I ask the insertion of one of these, written by Scotty Mortland, and published in the San Francisco Chronicle of March 23, 1933.

If greatness is unselfish service, Lux reached the pinnacle.

I know I will not be misunderstood for taking space in the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to commemorate so fine an animal—what some persons may call "just a dog." My dog Lux was a national—yea, international—figure, and in doing him this honor I am not acting without precedent.

There has stood on this floor a man who was eloquent and able, Senator Vest, of Missouri, one of that splendid trio known as the "three V's"—Vance, Vest, and Voorhees—but his right to eminence comes not alone from what he did here, for he wrote a most-noted eulogy, a eulogy of the dog. Nor was he the first to find in its qualities a thing to inspire; for since time became of record, the song of fable and the story of history have honored them.

Katmir, the famous "dog of the seven sleepers", was allotted by the Prophet Mahomet a place in the Moslem paradise. Barry, the great mastiff of St. Bernard, who saved the lives of 40 people, stands preserved in the museum at Berne. Boatswain, the favorite of Lord Byron, lies in honored rest in Newstead Abbey garden. Master McGrath, Lord Lurgan's dog, who had won three Waterloo cups, in a ceremony not all mock "made his bow" to England's Queen. Caesar, the pet of Edward VII, behind his master's charger, between the motionless lines of 30,000 British soldiers standing with arms reversed, followed to and insisted on sharing the "narrow cell" of the body of his King.

The claims of such animals to esteem came from almost human deeds of courage, or from the reflected luster of masters who were great as poets and princes. Lux knew and held among his many official friends two Presidents of the United States. The clear title to honor which I present for Lux is this: Doing his supreme best, he gave devoted service. He was indeed my "light", my eyes! No man could have served me better. The memory of him will temper the chill snows of life's coming winter, and smooth the furrowed brow with gentle thought. The heart will quicken its slackened beat, though near the verge of the silent grave, when the reflection of his aging master dwells on that fugitive but pleasant span of former life—that time when Lux did honorable duty, not only as a guide but as a companion and friend.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the letter to which I have referred and a poem appearing in the San Francisco Chronicle of March 23, 1933.

There being no objection, the letter and poem were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. J. L. SINYKIN,

LaSalle Kennels, Minneapolis, Minn.

MY DEAR MR. SINYKIN: Lux, my faithful friend, my patient guide, is gone. A look into my heart might tell you of my loss; words cannot.

I thought it inappropriate to take him with me on Senator Walsh's funeral cortege. He grew anxious and morose; his sensitive, untamed nature unable to follow the human precepts that combat the distance and length of absence. For this strange division from me he knew no reason or cause. He became so tense that his digestion failed, his overwrought system refusing to assimilate food, and on the 17th of March he died. No question that sorrow killed him! No doubt that he was the victim of mourning and love for me!

An autopsy confirmed this conclusion, as did his behavior whenever I had been forced to leave him for shorter intervals before. For then he'd grow sick and listless and protest with grievous moanings. And when I came home it was to know a pleasure from his enthusiastic welcome, which might well equal that of Byron's returning traveler in Don Juan, who said:

"Tis sweet to hear the watchdog's honest bark
Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home;
'Tis sweet to know there is an eye will mark
Our coming and look brighter when we come."

Lux was so completely mine! None but the blind will understand the whole of what I mean; none but those who have come to cherish a deeper love for the ever-hidden sun; none but they who have "wandered lonely as a cloud", missing the "holy pleasure" that's in an eye; none but they who "only stand and wait", wondering what may be "that thing called light."

The kindest of seeing persons grow irked at waiting; but Lux would gladly await my pleasure through long hours, without food, drink, or movement—a patient sentinel at my feet. I might tell you of the many useful things he could do and use too much of space in describing his many traits of intelligence and affection. You know his breed and what might be generally expected of it. I will take but one of the many days when Lux was with me and let you judge from its story of those things in which he excelled.

I choose a day which was fair, one on which I was much abroad. I was in my room ready to begin this day, and stood at the window of the porch, to which ran a ladder from Lux's kennel below. A word brought him scrambling up and into my room, as eager for my company and the rigors of his duty as a charger who has sniffed the smoke of battle. He reared, and, standing his great height with his paws on my shoulders, laid his noble head against my face and gave to me his greeting. Down he went, and stood with his head pressed against my knee. My word was given to assure him that our "good morning" was spoken; but something was lacking, for he jerked his head beneath my hand and clutched it between his two paws. I patted him, and then he sprang away with happy bark; his tail threshed me like a club; and in a twinkling he had pushed up the rug and created havoc generally. I had some regard for the furnishings and sent him back down the ladder.

Now, we moved off, in attendance on the day's business, but after a few ecstatic gambols Lux grew quiet and changed. He stiffened as a soldier at the word that may mean death, and I think his eye must have steadied with that look I remember to have seen in man's—the concentrated, vigilant look that's awake for danger. He knew that to him had been intrusted a heavy charge—the life of his master. And so he was wherever he led me that day, through moving traffic, on elevators, or on the subway at the Capitol. Sometimes he'd growl as we moved through crowds, a warning to those who came too near that he, though dumb, was leading the blind. And once in traffic he blocked me with his body, or else I would have stepped before the wheels of a heedless car. And if I faltered, if the hidden rush of danger for an instant appalled me, his ready nose jogged my hand in comfort, and his hearty tug on the leash or bugle banished my instinct to fear.

And thus went the day, with me safe in his companionship and protection.

The unheeded division between light and dark had passed; and again I stood at my window and felt the "meaner beauties" of the night, which I could not see. And here Lux gave an indication of his unrelenting vigilance. I knew that he was asleep at the foot of the ladder, for this was his habit on mild nights; and I was wondering how often he had kept such watch when the nights were cold, when he came scuffling his way to me. The sense of smell, which for him was the open eye in sleep, had told him that I was there. He knew that this was unusual. For him the unexplained was mystery, and mystery was danger. I spoke reassuringly, and down he went to his post below, waiting the time when I should retire and he would take his place at the foot of my bed. I heard him growl—he had circled about—and then he barked with full-throated tone that made the night fearful with sound. Perhaps the air had borne some unliked scent, or he may but have thrown this challenge to the night, to any menace that it hid.

I slept; and had I dreamed it would have been of the noble dog who watched by my bed, his live nostrils twitching to each vagrant breeze, his sensitive ears alert for sound, his eyes, that knew the night and stared its blackness down, agleam in constant vigil on my sleep.

I cannot wonder, since I have known Lux, that in medieval monuments the dog is placed at the feet of women as symbolic of affection and fidelity, and seen as a rest for the mailed feet of crusaders. I agree with that artistic choice, and with the one that pictures him carrying a lighted torch in representations of Dominic the Saint of Old Castile.

Argos, the dog of Ulysses, recognized the hero of legend when he returned from his wanderings, knew this long-gone master, and died of joy in the knowing. A happy passing—to die of joy! A greatness in such going! But Lux died of grief. Which emotion is the nobler?

I cannot say too much for Lux, for he laid down his life; and well his story pleads the cause.

"Of those dumb mouths that have no speech."

The sympathetic understanding of your letter is appreciated, and your kind offer of another fully trained German Shepherd from your kennels is accepted with gratitude. No other can take the place that Lux held in my affections or give me so much of devotion. No other dumb eloquence can tell me that I alone, of all the world, stand for happiness. But the wonderful training he had from you gives me reason to believe that what you have done with one animal you may do with a second.

Your offer has renewed my hopes. I await the arrival of Lux the Second with impatience and some skepticism, for "when comes such another?"

In deep appreciation, I am,

Cordially yours,

THOS. D. SCHALL.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle of Thursday, Mar. 23, 1933]

BLESSED BE THE MAN A GOOD DOG LOVES

[Lux, the German police dog belonging to blind United States Senator THOMAS D. SCHALL, of Minnesota, couldn't eat for sorrow when the Senator was gone for 5 days and finally lay down and died.—News item.]

For 5 long years
This faithful dog
Had been the seeing eye
And guiding footsteps
For his blind master;
And if precepts are true,
Then we can well forget the dog
And think much of the man—
Precepts that teach us
That too much familiarity
Breeds a deep contempt.
In his dog's head an almost Human brain was placed
To let him keenly analyze
The virtues and the faults
Of this man friend of his;
In his dog's body was a heart
Whose every drop of blood
Was hot with constant love
For his man master;
In his brown eyes a mirror
To catch a true picture
Of this dependent human
And hold it firm and close.
To other men about him
This blind man might show
Bright coloring of merit
Which they might not gainsay,
But Lux saw deeper down;
And when he died in sorrow
At this short separation
His death said plainly
That his master was a man.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and the Senate will proceed with the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills.

The first business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 15) extending to the whaling industry certain benefits granted under section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, some Senators who are not present are interested in the call of the calendar. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Costigan	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Couzens	King	Russell
Bachman	Cutting	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Dale	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Dieterich	Loneragan	Smith
Barkley	Dill	Long	Steiwer
Black	Duffy	McAdoo	Stephens
Bone	Erickson	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	Frazier	McKellar	Townsend
Brown	George	McNary	Trammell
Bulkeley	Glass	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulow	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrd	Gore	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Walcott
Caraway	Hastings	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hatfield	Patterson	Wheeler
Clark	Hayden	Pittman	White
Connally	Hebert	Pope
Coolidge	Johnson	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 682) to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 317) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make advances to the reclamation fund was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the provisions of this bill were incorporated in a measure which has passed, and I think has become law. At any rate, I ask that we pass over this bill; and if the measure to which I refer has become law, I shall move the indefinite postponement of this bill at the next calling of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 382) to provide for the more effective supervision of foreign commercial transactions, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK

The bill (S. 324) to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he is not willing to give a little consideration to this matter. The bill has passed the Senate twice, is favorably reported by the House committee, and now we have it on the calendar again, and we should like very much to get some action on it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to my friend that I have written for certain information, and if that information is along the lines which I think it may be, I shall have an amendment to offer.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I hope the Senator will be ready at the next call of the calendar with his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1513) to amend Public Act No. 435 of the Seventy-second Congress, relating to sales of timber on Indian land, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONVEYANCE OF LANDS TO HARRISON COUNTY, MISS.

The bill (S. 1514) authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain lands to Harrison County, Miss., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to Harrison County, State of Mississippi, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following-described lands along the north line of the United States Veterans' Administration property at Gulfport, Mississippi: Beginning at the northwest corner of said property at the intersection of the western boundary of section 36, township 7 south, range 11 west, St. Stephens meridian, and the southern boundary of the Old Pass Christian Road; thence northeasterly along the existing northern boundary of said property a distance of 990 feet, more or less, to the northeast corner of said property; thence southerly on a line parallel to the aforesaid western line of said section 36 a distance of 15.8 feet, more or less, to a point; thence southwesterly on a line 15 feet from and parallel to the aforesaid northern boundary of said property a distance of 990 feet, more or less, to a point on the western boundary of said section 36; thence northerly along the western boundary of said section 36 to the point of beginning; and containing thirty-four one-hundredths acre, more or less.

CIRCUIT JUDGE, NINTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

The bill (S. 813) to remove the limitation on the filling of the vacancy in the office of senior circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a circuit judge to fill the vacancy in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Judicial Circuit occasioned by the death of Hon. William B. Gilbert. A vacancy occurring at any time in the office of circuit judge referred to in this section is authorized to be filled.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1129) to amend sections 361, 392, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, and 412 of title 46 of the United States Code, relating to the construction and inspection of boilers, unfired pressure vessels, and the appurtenances thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I note the absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROSECUTION BY INDICTMENT

The bill (S. 1518) providing for waiver of prosecution by indictment in certain criminal proceedings was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all prosecutions for capital or otherwise infamous crimes, in the courts of the United States and the courts of the District of Columbia, shall be by presentment or indictment of a grand jury unless the accused shall, in open court and in writing, and under such rules as the court may prescribe, expressly waive prosecution by presentment or indictment, and consent to the filing of an information against him, except that no such waiver shall be allowed unless the accused has had a preliminary examination before a United States commissioner or other examining magistrate, which examination has resulted in a finding of probable cause. In the event of such waiver the prosecution shall, with the approval of the court, be by information, and any judgment rendered and sentence imposed in any such case shall have the same force and effect in all respects as if the same had been rendered and imposed pursuant to a prosecution by presentment or indictment.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 510) to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That will have to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1577) creating the St. Lawrence Bridge Commission and authorizing said Commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N.Y., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill. It had better go over, in the absence of an explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

REDEMPTION OF NATIONAL BANK NOTES

The bill (S. 1634) to provide for the redemption of national-bank notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, and Federal Reserve notes which cannot be identified as to the bank of issue, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any national-bank notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, or Federal Reserve notes are presented to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption and such notes cannot be identified as to the bank of issue or the bank through which issued, the Treasurer of the United States may redeem such notes under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and the notes so redeemed shall be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency for cancellation and destruction.

Sec. 2. National-bank notes and Federal Reserve bank notes redeemed by the Treasurer of the United States under this act shall be charged against the balance of deposits for the retirement of national-bank notes and Federal Reserve bank notes under the provisions of section 6 of the act entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes", approved July 14, 1890 (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 122), and section 18 of the Federal Reserve

Act (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 445); and charges for Federal Reserve notes redeemed by the Treasurer of the United States under this act shall be apportioned among the 12 Federal Reserve banks in proportion to the amount of Federal Reserve notes of each Federal Reserve bank in circulation on the 31st day of December of the year preceding the date of redemption, and the amount so apportioned to each bank shall be charged by the Treasurer of the United States against deposit in the gold-redemption fund made by such bank or its Federal Reserve agent.

HOWELL K. STEPHENS

The bill (S. 879) for the relief of Howell K. Stephens was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I make a brief explanation to the Senator?

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the man mentioned in this bill was discharged with the notation, "not honorably", because he had concealed his age at the time of enlistment in the World War. A general statute was passed at the close of the war giving honorable discharges to those who had enlisted in this way if they had served acceptably. This man joined the Regular Army when the World War closed, and placed himself beyond the reach of this statute. This bill has the effect of giving him the benefit of a general statute which was intended to apply to others in the same situation in connection with the World War.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act" and to insert the words "back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Howell K. Stephens, who was a private, Medical Department, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 25th day of October 1919: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROGER P. AMES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1587) to amend an act entitled "An act to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever", approved February 28, 1929, as amended, by including Roger P. Ames among those honored by said act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Texas make a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it was most unjust that Dr. Ames' name was not mentioned among those to be honored in the original bill for participation in the yellow fever tests in Cuba. Walter Reed himself stated that the personnel of the yellow fever experimental camp included Dr. Roger P. Ames as acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, in immediate charge. Ames contracted yellow fever himself as a result of this service. This bill includes his name among those honored. He has since passed away, and no appropriation is carried, so far as he is concerned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Texas what is the necessity of repeating all those other names? Why not limit it to giving to Dr. Ames the same award given to the others?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In writing the bill I deemed it best to amend the existing law, so as to include Dr. Ames' name with the others, so far as honorable mention was concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to page 3 of the bill, line 4, where this language occurs:

For this purpose there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000.

So that if the man is dead, the appropriation ought not to be made.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That was the original bill, and applied only to pensions for the others while living. It does not apply to this man.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it authorizes an appropriation to pay these people $125 a month during their natural lives.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is being paid to survivors.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is a mere repetition of existing law?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever", approved February 28, 1929, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting between the names "Aristides Agramonte" and "John H. Andrus" the name "Roger P. Ames", so that the act as amended will read as follows:

"That in special recognition of the high public service rendered and disabilities contracted in the interest of humanity and science as voluntary subjects for the experimentations during the yellow-fever investigations in Cuba, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to publish annually in the Army Register a roll of honor on which shall be carried the following names: Walter Reed, James Carroll, Jesse W. Lazear, Aristides Agramonte, Roger P. Ames, John H. Andrus, John R. Bullard, A. W. Covington, William H. Dean, Wallace W. Forbes, Levi E. Folk, Paul Hamann, James F. Hanberry, Warren G. Jernegan, John R. Kissinger, John J. Moran, William Olsen, Charles G. Sonntag, Clyde L. West, Dr. R. P. Cooke, Thomas M. England, James Hildebrand, and Edward Weatherwalks, and to define in appropriate language the part which each of these persons played in the experimentations during the yellow-fever investigations in Cuba; and in further recognition of the high public service so rendered by the persons hereinbefore named, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cause to be struck for each of said persons a gold medal with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions, to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, and to present the same to each of said persons as shall be living and posthumously to such representatives of each of such persons as shall have died, as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury. For this purpose there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts annually as may be necessary in order to pay the following-named persons during the remainder of their natural lives the sum of $125 per month, and such amount shall be in lieu of any and all pensions authorized by law for the following-named persons: Pvt. Paul Hamann; Pvt. John R. Kissinger; Pvt. William Olsen, Hospital Corps; Pvt. Charles G. Sonntag, Hospital Corps; Pvt. Clyde L. West, Hospital Corps; Pvt. James Hildebrand, Hospital Corps; Pvt. John H. Andrus, Hospital Corps; Mr. John R. Bullard; Dr. Aristides Agramonte; Pvt. A. W. Covington, Twenty-third Battery, Coast Artillery Corps; Pvt. Wallace W. Forbes, Hospital Corps; Pvt. Levi E. Folk, Hospital Corps; Pvt. James F. Hanberry, Hospital Corps; Dr. R. P. Cooke; Pvt. Thomas M. England; Mr. John J. Moran, and the widow of Pvt. Edward Weatherwalks."

VETERINARY CORPS, UNITED STATES ARMY

The bill (S. 1286) to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Michigan that officers in the Veterinary Corps who served formerly in the Cavalry and Field Artillery are allowed credit for service in these branches. This bill enables six or seven veterinary officers who performed former service in the Quartermaster Department to have the same recognition.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call the Senator's attention to the printed report, which includes a letter from the Secretary of War in the preceding administration, which indicates that the expenditure involved in this bill was contrary to the financial program of the last administration. Inasmuch as this administration is supposed to be even more economical than its predecessor, I assume that it must continue to be in opposition to the financial program of the administration.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, only a small amount is involved, and, in view of the evident fairness of the bill, I hope the Senator will allow it to pass.

Mr. KING. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the bill removes a very patent discrimination, will not the Senator from Michigan permit it to pass? It has passed the Senate heretofore.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest that it go over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HARRY FLANERY

The bill (S. 1548) for the relief of Harry Flanery was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that the bill has passed the Senate on a prior occasion. This man was not a deserter, but was convicted by general courtmartial on a charge of being absent without leave. He served in the Philippines and China for about 3 years, saw active fighting, and was wounded in action. In view of a record of that kind, the committee felt that he should now be entitled to an honorable discharge. The case comes within the rules which we have heretofore followed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator whether this case comes within the rule for which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has contended?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it does, for this reason: This man saw 3 years of actual service and participated in active fighting. When a man has a record of that nature, and has conducted himself honorably since his separation from the service, I am sure the case comes within the rule suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KING. Did he desert?

Mr. SHEPPARD. He did not desert.

Mr. KING. At any time?

Mr. SHEPPARD. He did not desert; he was absent without leave for a few days.

Mr. KING. Was that during the war?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was after the Philippine insurrection. He served actively and took part in the fighting during the Philippine insurrection.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection, with the understanding that if, upon further investigation, I desire tomorrow to have the bill restored to the calendar, the Senator will consent.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Harry Flanery, formerly private, Troop C, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged July 3, 1903, from the military service of the United States: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

GEORGE W. EDGERLY

The bill (S. 860) for the relief of George W. Edgerly was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that this is another bill which passed the Senate heretofore. It enables this officer to appear before a court to endeavor to establish his claim that he was suffering under a mental condition which justified retirement for disability when he tendered his resignation. He served for about 16 years in the Army and rose from enlisted man to major. Since he was discharged the Veterans' Administration has given him a total disability rating. For that reason the Military Affairs Committee thinks he is entitled to have the matter tried out again.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with the same stipulation which I made with respect to the preceding measure, I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon George W. Edgerly, late captain of Infantry and temporary major, Regular Army, before a retiring board, to inquire whether at the time of his resignation, September 18, 1919, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry, it is found that he was so incapacitated, the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said George W. Edgerly a captain of Infantry and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said George W. Edgerly shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1631) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of Federal Reserve banks and of national banking associations, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENTS TO INDIAN PUEBLOS

The bill (S. 691) to authorize appropriations to pay in part the liability of the United States to the Indian pueblos herein named, under the terms of the act of June 7, 1924, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, Order of Business 85, House bill 4014, is identical with the bill just reached on the calendar. I move that that bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 4014) to authorize appropriations to pay in part the liability of the United States to the Indian pueblos herein named, under the terms of the act of June 7, 1924, and the liability of the United States to non-Indian claimants on Indian pueblo grants whose claims, extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, have been found by the Pueblo Lands Board to have been claims in good faith; to authorize the expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior of the sums herein authorized and of sums heretofore appropriated, in conformity with the act of June 7, 1924, for the purchase of needed lands and water rights and the creation of other permanent economic improvements as contemplated by said act; to provide for the protection of the watershed within the Carson National Forest for the Pueblo de Taos Indians of New Mexico and others interested, and to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to contract relating thereto; and to amend the act approved June 7, 1924, in certain respects.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in fulfillment of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 636), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums hereinafter set forth, in compensation to the several Indian pueblos hereinafter named, in payment of the liability of the United States to the said pueblos as declared by the act of June 7, 1924, which appropriations shall be made in equal annual installments as hereinafter specified, and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to approval of the governing authorities of each pueblo in question, at such times and in such amounts as he may deem wise and proper, for the purchase of lands and water rights to replace those which have been divested from said pueblo under the act of June 7, 1924, or for the purchase or construction of reservoirs, irrigation works, or other permanent improvements upon or for the benefit of the lands of said pueblos.

Sec. 2. In addition to the awards made by the Pueblo Lands Board, the following sums, to be used as directed in section 1 of this act, and in conformity with the act of June 7, 1924, be, and hereby are, authorized to be appropriated:

Pueblo of Jemez, $1,885; pueblo of Nambe, $47,439.50; pueblo of Taos, $84,707.09; pueblo of Santa Ana, $2,908.38; pueblo of Santo Domingo, $4,256.56; pueblo of Sandia, $12,980.62; pueblo of San Felipe, $14,954.53; pueblo of Isleta, $47,751.31; pueblo of Picuris, $66,574.40; pueblo of San Ildefonso, $37,058.28; pueblo of San Juan, $153,863.04; pueblo of Santa Clara, $181,114.19; pueblo of Cochiti, $37,826.37; pueblo of Pojoaque, $68,562.61; in all, $761,954.88: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report back to Congress any errors or omissions in the foregoing authorizations measured by the present fair market value of the lands involved, as heretofore determined by the appraisals of said tracts by the appraisers appointed by the Pueblo Lands Board, with evidence supporting his report and recommendations.

Sec. 3. Pursuant to the aforesaid act of June 7, 1924, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum to compensate white settlers or non-Indian claimants who have been found by the Pueblo Lands Board, created under said act of June 7, 1924, to have occupied and claimed land in good faith but whose claim has not been sustained and whose occupation has been terminated under said act of June 7, 1924, for the fair market value of lands, improvements appurtenant thereto, and water rights. The non-Indian claimants, or their successors, as found and reported by said Pueblo Lands Board, to be compensated out of said appropriations to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the amounts due them as appraised by the appraisers appointed by said Pueblo Lands Board, as follows:

Within the pueblo of Tesuque, $1,094.64; within the pueblo of Nambe, $19,393.59; within the pueblo of Taos, $14,064.57; within the Tenorio Tract, Taos Pueblo, $43,165.26; within the pueblo of Santa Ana (El Ranchito grant), $846.26; within the pueblo of Santo Domingo, $66; within the pueblo of Sandia, $5,354.46; within the pueblo of San Felipe, $16,424.68; within the pueblo of Isleta, $6,624.45; within the pueblo of Picuris, $11,464.73; within the pueblo of San Ildefonso, $16,209.13; within the pueblo of San Juan, $19,938.22; within the pueblo of Santa Clara, $35,350.88; within the pueblo of Cochiti, $9,653.81; within the pueblo of Pojoaque, $1,767.26; within the pueblo of Laguna, $30,668.87; in all, $232,086.80: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report back to Congress any errors in the amount of award measured by the present fair market value of the lands involved and any errors in the omissions of legitimate claimants for award, with evidence supporting his report and recommendations.

Sec. 4. That for the purpose of safeguarding the interests and welfare of the tribe of Indians known as the Pueblo de Taos of New Mexico in the certain lands hereinafter described, upon which lands said Indians depend for water supply, forage for their domestic livestock, wood and timber for their personal use and as the scene of certain of their religious ceremonies, the Secretary of Agriculture may and he hereby is authorized and directed to designate and segregate said lands, which shall not thereafter be subject to entry under the land laws of the United States, and to thereafter grant to said Pueblo de Taos, upon application of the governor and council thereof, a permit to occupy said lands and use the resources thereof for the personal use and benefit of said tribe of Indians for a period of 50 years, with provision for subsequent renewals if the use and occupancy by said tribe of Indians shall continue, the provisions of the permit are met and the continued protection of the watershed is required by public interest. Such permit shall specifically provide for and safeguard all rights and equities hitherto established and enjoyed by said tribe of Indians under any contracts or agreements hitherto existing, shall authorize the free use of wood, forage, and lands for the personal or tribal needs of said Indians, shall define the conditions under which natural resources under the control of the Department of Agriculture not needed by said Indians shall be made available for commercial use by the Indians or others, and shall establish necessary and proper safeguards for the efficient supervision and operation of the area for national forest purposes and all other purposes herein stated, the area referred to being described as follows:

Beginning at the northeast corner of the Pueblo de Taos grant, thence northeasterly along the divide between Rio Pueblo de Taos and Rio Lucero and along the divide between Rio Pueblo de Taos and Red River to a point a half mile east of Rio Pueblo de Taos; thence southwesterly on a line half mile east of Rio Pueblo de Taos and parallel thereto to the northwest corner of township 25 north, range 15 east; thence south on the west boundary of township 25 north, range 15 east, to the divide between Rio Pueblo de Taos and Rio Fernandez de Taos; thence westerly along the divide to the east boundary of the Pueblo de Taos grant; thence north to the point of beginning; containing approximately 30,000 acres, more or less.

Sec. 5. Except as otherwise provided herein, the Secretary of the Interior shall disburse and expend the amounts of money herein authorized to be appropriated, in accordance with and under the terms and conditions of the act approved June 7, 1924: Provided, however, That the Secretary be authorized to cause necessary surveys and investigations to be made promptly to ascertain the lands and water rights that can be purchased out of the foregoing appropriations and earlier appropriations made for the same purpose, with full authority to disburse said funds in the purchase of said lands and water rights without being limited to the appraised values thereof as fixed by the appraisers appointed by the Pueblo Lands Board appointed under said act of June 7, 1924, and all prior acts limiting the Secretary of the Interior in the disbursement of said funds to the appraised value of said lands as fixed by said appraisers of said Pueblo Lands Board be, and the same are, expressly repealed: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to disburse a portion of said funds for the purpose of securing options upon said lands and water rights and necessary abstracts of title thereof for the necessary period required to investigate titles and which may be required before disbursement can be authorized: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, out of the appropriations of the foregoing amounts and out of the funds heretofore appropriated for the same purpose, to purchase any available lands within the several pueblos which in his discretion it is desirable to purchase, without waiting for the issuance of final patents directed to be issued under the provisions of the act of June 7, 1924, where the right of said pueblos to bring independent suits, under the provisions of the act of June 7, 1924, has expired: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall not make any expenditures out of the pueblo funds resulting from the appropriations set forth herein, or prior appropriations for the same purpose, without first obtaining the approval of the governing authorities of the pueblo affected: And provided further, That the governing authorities of any pueblo may initiate matters pertaining to the purchase of lands in behalf of their respective pueblos, which matters, or contracts relative thereto, will not be binding or concluded until approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any pueblo from prosecuting independent suits as authorized under section 4 of the act of June 7, 1924. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contract with the several Pueblo Indian tribes, affected by the terms of this act, in consideration of the authorization of appropriations contained in section 2 hereof, providing for the dismissal of pending and the abandonment of contemplated original proceedings, in law or equity, by, or in behalf of said Pueblo Indian tribes, under the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 636), and the pueblo concerned may elect to accept the appropriations herein authorized, in the sums herein set forth, in full discharge of all claims to compensation under the terms of said act, notifying the Secretary of the Interior in writing of its election so to do: Provided, That if said election by said pueblo be not made, said pueblo shall have 1 year from the date of the approval of this act within which to file any independent suit authorized under section 4 of the act of June 7, 1924, at the expiration of which period the right to file such suit shall expire by limitation: And provided further, That no ejectment suits shall be filed against non-Indians entitled to compensation under this act, in less than 6 months after the sums herein authorized are appropriated.

SEC. 7. Section 16 of the act approved June 7, 1924, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 16. That if the Secretary of the Interior deems it to be for the best interest of the Indians that any land adjudged by the court or said Lands Board against any claimant be sold, he may, with the consent of the governing authorities of the pueblo, order the sale thereof, under such regulations as he may make, to the highest bidder for cash; and if the buyer thereof be other than the losing claimant, the purchase price shall be used in paying to such losing claimant the adjudicated value of the improvements aforesaid, if found under the provisions of section 15 hereof, and the balance thereof, if any, shall be paid over to the proper officer, or officers, of the Indian community, but if the buyer be the losing claimant, and the value of his improvements has been adjudicated as aforesaid, such buyer shall be entitled to have credit upon his bid for the value of such improvements so adjudicated."

SEC. 8. The attorney or attorneys for such Indian tribe or tribes shall be paid such fee as may be agreed upon by such attorney or attorneys and such Indian tribe or tribes, but in no case shall the fee be more than 10 percent of the sum herein authorized to be appropriated for the benefit of such tribe or tribes, and such attorneys' fees shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance herewith out of any funds appropriated for said Indian tribe or tribes under the provisions of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 636), or this act: Provided, however, That 25 percent of the amount agreed upon as attorneys' fees shall be retained by the Secretary of the Interior to be disbursed by him under the terms of the contract, subject to approval of the Secretary of the Interior, between said attorneys and said Indian tribes, providing for further services and expenses of said attorneys in furtherance of the objects set forth in section 19 of the act of June 7, 1924.

SEC. 9. Nothing herein contained shall in any manner be construed to deprive any of the Pueblo Indians of a prior right to the use of water from streams running through or bordering on their respective pueblos for domestic, stock-water, and irrigation purposes for the lands remaining in Indian ownership, and such water rights shall not be subject to loss by nonuse or abandonment thereof as long as title to said lands shall remain in the Indians.

SEC. 10. The sums authorized to be appropriated under the terms and provisions of section 2 of this act shall be appropriated in three annual installments, beginning with the fiscal year 1937.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this apparently is a bill of considerable importance. It carries a very large appropriation. May I ask the Senator from New Mexico the aggregate amount that is authorized?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the aggregate amount is about a million dollars, but the first payment to the Indians will be made in the fiscal year 1937.

Permit me to say to the Senator that this bill passed the Senate during the last session, and it has now passed the body at the opposite end of the Capitol. It is reported favorably by the Department of the Interior, and it has the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. It is an important measure. It concludes a long and involved controversy in New Mexico.

The principal purpose of the bill is to compensate non-Indian claimants now and to make a definite commitment to the Indians, so that a program of consolidating and blocking lands may be effected, looking forward to the appropriation for the Indians in the fiscal years 1937, 1938, and 1939. In addition to the fact that the bill has passed the Senate, has now passed the House, is approved by the Department of the Interior and the Director of the Budget, I can assure the Senator from Arkansas that it is meritorious.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I shall not object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator one question. Is this the measure to carry out the findings of the commission that was appointed—I have forgotten the title of the act—for the purpose of ascertaining the amount due to the pueblos of New Mexico for lands of which they have been deprived?

Mr. BRATTON. It is to carry out what that board should have done under the act. It is to correct the mistakes and omissions of the board, and to conform the situation to the purposes of the Pueblos Land Board Act, being the act approved June 7, 1924.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether this will prevent any further litigation in the Supreme Court in order to cure what are alleged to be bad decisions, or improper decisions, of that commission?

Mr. BRATTON. It will do that, and more. In addition to that, it will result in the dismissal of certain pending cases.

Permit me to say to the Senator from Utah that the special sub-subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, over which the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] presided, went to New Mexico and devoted itself to hearings there. Later hearings were conducted here. This measure has the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which committee has given the subject matter long and careful consideration in that manner.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my great confidence in the able Senator from New Mexico would prompt me to be silent even if I had some doubts.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 691 will be indefinitely postponed.

SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

The resolution (S.Res. 76) to investigate conditions respecting the sale and distribution of dairy products in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Utah explain that resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] was chairman, pursuant to numerous requests made by citizens of the District, reported this resolution unanimously to the Senate, but owing to the congested condition of the calendar we were unable to secure its adoption. There has been considerable agitation during the past few weeks growing out of the alleged very unjust prices which are charged by organizations which, it is contended, form a monopoly in the sale of milk and milk products. The agitation has been so great and the demands from various citizens' associations have been so numerous that the resolution which was reported to the Senate in the last Congress was reintroduced and has been unanimously reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is claimed that price levels in dairy commodities within the District of Columbia indicate that competition in trade in such commodities has become stifled therein, and that the cost to the consumer of such commodities exceeds the cost to the producer by more than a fair margin of profit to the producer: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk, cream, ice cream, or other dairy products within the District of Columbia with a view to determining particularly whether any individual, partnership, or corporation, whether residing in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, is operating within such District under any contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or is a party to any conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any such dairy products, or in any way monopolizing such trade within such District. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary remedial legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress until the final report is submitted, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF INVESTORS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment? I am very much occupied now in the Senate Office Building, where the Banking and Currency Committee are conducting hearings, and I should like to have the Senate act on the conference report on the securities bill. The report has been agreed to by the House of Representatives, and I do not know of any opposition to it in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the Senator's request?

Mr. FLETCHER. That the Senate now consider the conference report on the so-called "securities bill."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on House bill 5480. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when this matter was presented by the able Senator on yesterday I objected because the report was not then printed. I understand it has now been printed.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been printed.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the Senator does not have to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the report, but he can move to take it up at any time. I suggest, however, if he is going to do that, that we have a call for a quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am entirely dependent on what the Senator from Oregon desires.

Mr. McNARY. There are some Senators on this side who would like to be present when the report comes up. I will not object to the unanimous-consent request, but I will have to note the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I suggest that we complete the call of the calendar?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think it will take long to act on the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well; we will go ahead, although it has only been 20 minutes since there was a call of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that; but that was for one particular purpose and this is for another.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum. I thought the Senator from Oregon had done so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Costigan	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Couzens	King	Russell
Bachman	Cutting	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Dale	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Dieterich	Loneragan	Smith
Barkley	Dill	Long	Steiwer
Black	Duffy	McAdoo	Stephens
Bone	Erickson	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	Frazier	McKellar	Townsend
Brown	George	McNary	Trammell
Bulkeley	Glass	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulow	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrd	Gore	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Walcott
Caraway	Hastings	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hatfield	Patterson	Wheeler
Clark	Hayden	Pittman	White
Connally	Hebert	Pope
Coolidge	Johnson	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask that the conference report may be agreed to. It is quite long, and I will not ask to have it read. It is already in the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida for the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

CONVEYANCE OF LANDS TO DESCHUTES COUNTY (OREG.) SCHOOL DISTRICT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 284) authorizing the conveyance of certain lands to school district no. 28, Deschutes County, Oreg., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to school district no. 28, Deschutes County, Oreg., for use for school purposes, the following-described area: The southwest quarter southwest quarter southwest quarter section 27, township 17 south, range 13 east, Willamette meridian; but if such school district fails to use such lands for the purposes herein provided, or attempts to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

OCHOCO NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The bill (S. 285) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon if the bill now under consideration and the bill just acted upon propose to transfer Government domain to the State, and if so, for what purpose?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to confess that I am not informed as to the nature of the proposed legislation. The bills were handled wholly by my colleague [Mr. STEIWER], and information concerning them is in his possession. I think, under the circumstances, the pending bill had better go over unless the Senator is willing to have it considered.

Mr. KING. If the junior Senator from Oregon is absent, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEYES. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DEEPS CREEK BRIDGE, DEL.

The bill (S. 1562) granting the consent of Congress to the Levy Court of Sussex County, Del., to reconstruct a bridge across the Deep Creek at Cherry Tree Landing, Sussex County, Del., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Levy Court of Sussex County, Del., its successors and assigns, to reconstruct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereunto across the Deep Creek, being a part of a navigable river from Concord, Del., to the Chesapeake Bay, at a point suitable to navigation, at or near Cherry Tree Landing, in the county of Sussex, State of Delaware, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

NORTHWEST RIVER BRIDGE, NORFOLK COUNTY, VA.

The bill (H.R. 5152) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Virginia to replace and maintain a bridge across Northwest River in Norfolk County, Va., on State Highway Route No. 27, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS STAUNTON AND DAN RIVERS, VA.

The bill (H.R. 5173) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Virginia to maintain a bridge already constructed to replace a weak structure in the same location, across the Staunton and Dan Rivers, in Mecklenburg County, Va., on United States Route No. 15, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAVANNAH RIVER BRIDGE, SYLVANIA, GA.

The bill (H.R. 5476) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EARL A. ROSS

The bill (S. 1727) for the relief of Earl A. Ross was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Earl A. Ross, of Boston, Mass., may, and is hereby empowered to, enter under the homestead laws of the United States 160 acres of land and timber along the border of any national forest in western Washington State, in lieu of lands and timber previously selected by him in Pacific County, Wash., in one or more parcels in the timber areas thereof, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, and that patent be issued to said Earl A. Ross covering the land so selected and approved. Said selections shall not interfere with or include rangers' stations or buildings belonging to said reserves, nor any natural resources within said reserves, such as mineral springs or points or places generally known to be of scenic beauty, and all trails, roadways, approaches within the area taken shall remain property of the United States of America, usable and free to use as though this act had not been passed.

FRANK P. ROSS

The bill (S. 1728) for the relief of Frank P. Ross was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Frank P. Ross, of Tacoma, Wash., may, and is hereby empowered to, enter under the homestead laws of the United States 160 acres of land and timber along the border of any national forest in western Washington State, in lieu of lands and timber previously selected by him in Pacific County, Wash., in one or more parcels in the timber areas thereof, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, and that patent be issued to said Frank P. Ross covering the land so selected and approved. Said selections shall not interfere with or include rangers' stations or buildings belonging to said reserves, nor any natural resources within said reserves, such as mineral springs, or points or places generally known to be of scenic beauty, and all trails, roadways, approaches within the area taken shall remain property of the United States of America, usable and free to use as though this bill had not been passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF EDWARD B. WHEELER

The bill (S. 1724) authorizing the reimbursement of Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. for the loss of certain lands in the Mora Grant, N.Mex., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edward B. Wheeler, of Las Vegas, N.Mex., and the State Investment Co., of New Mexico, who were declared by the Supreme Court of the United States (United States v. State Investment Co. (1924), 264 U.S. 206) to be the owners, respectively, of certain lands in the tract known as the Mora Grant, located in San Miguel and Mora Counties, N.Mex., an amount to be computed by the Secretary on the basis of $2.25 per acre for every acre of lands embraced within the claim of any bona fide entryman on such lands holding under patent from the United States or under any entry allowed by the Department of the Interior, the recovery of which lands by the said Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. is barred by the stipulation entered into between such parties and the United States on January 23, 1918. Such payment shall operate as a full settlement of all claims of such Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. against the United States or the owners of such lands for damages for the loss of such lands.

EXPENSES OF LOUDERBACK IMPEACHMENT TRIAL

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S.Res. 82) submitted by Mr. BYRNES on May 18 (legislative day of May 15) and reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That $20,000 is hereby authorized to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate in addition to the amount previously authorized to defray the expenses in the impeachment trial of Judge Harold Louderback.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1580) to relieve the existing national emergency in relation to interstate railroad transportation and to amend sections 5, 15a, and 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COMPULSION OF TESTIMONY BEFORE INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNALS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1581) to amend the act approved July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 1005), authorizing commissioners or members of international tribunals to administer oaths, etc., which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest that a brief statement should be made of this measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the report is very brief. The bill is desired by the Department and by American nationals who are prosecuting claims where evidence is required in foreign lands. It is for the purpose of obtaining testimony more readily than under existing law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill will afford the additional and necessary means of compelling the testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence in connection with matters arising before international tribunals or commissions to which the United States is a party. Reading from the report, it is stated:

The necessity for this legislation became apparent in connection with claims pending before the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, when the American agent, prosecuting meritorious claims on behalf of American citizens, was thwarted by the lack of power under the treaty creating the Commission to compel the testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence.

I take it that the statement of the Senator from Utah and my own statement just concluded are adequate to satisfy the requirements of the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 1, section 5, line 9, after the word "commission", to insert "whether previously or hereafter established"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "party" to strike out "whether previously or hereafter established"; at the beginning of line 6 to strike out "subpenas" and insert "subpenas"; and in line 9, after the name "United States" to insert "on its own behalf or on behalf of any of its nationals"; so as to make the section read:

That the act of July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 1005), authorizing commissioners or members of international tribunals to administer oaths, and so forth, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following additional sections:

"Sec. 5. That the agent of the United States before any international tribunal or commission, whether previously or hereafter established, in which the United States participates as a party whenever he desires to obtain testimony or the production of books and papers by witnesses may apply to the United States district court for the district in which such witness or witnesses reside or may be found, for the issuance of subpoenas to require their attendance and testimony before the United States district court for that district and the production therein of books and papers, relating to any matter or claim in which the United States on its own behalf or on behalf of any of its nationals is concerned as a party claimant or respondent before such international tribunal or commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 2, line 15, after the word "issued", to insert "or caused to be issued"; in the same line, after the word "such", to strike out "subpenas" and insert "subpoenas"; in line 16, after the words "issuance of", to strike out "subpenas" and insert "subpoenas"; in line 20, after the word "such", to strike out "subpenas" and insert "subpoenas"; in line 23, after the word "such" to strike out "subpenas" and insert "subpoenas"; on page 3, line 4, after the word "representative", to strike out "The" and insert "Reasonable notice thereof shall be given to the"; in line 6, after the word "proceedings", to insert "who"; and in line 10, after the word "such", to strike out "subpenas" and insert "subpoenas"; so as to make the section read:

Sec. 6. That any United States district court to which such application shall be made shall have authority to issue or cause to be issued such subpoenas upon the same terms as are applicable to the issuance of subpoenas in suits pending in the United States district court, and the clerk thereof shall have authority to administer oaths respecting testimony given therein, and the marshal thereof shall serve such subpoenas upon the person or persons to whom they are directed. The hearing of witnesses and taking of their testimony and the production of books and papers pursuant to such subpoenas shall be before the United States district court for that district or before a commissioner or referee appointed by it for the taking of such testimony, and the examination may be oral or upon written interrogatories and may be conducted by the agent of the United States or his representative. Reasonable notice thereof shall be given to the agent or agents of the opposing government or governments concerned in such proceedings who shall have the right to be present in person or by representative and to examine or cross-examine such witnesses at such hearing. A certified transcript of such testimony and any proceedings arising out of the issuance of such subpoenas shall be forwarded by the clerk of the district court to the agent of the United States and also to the agent or agents of the opposing government or governments, without cost.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 17, after the word "such", to strike out "subpenas" and insert "subpoenas", and in line 23, after the word "such", to strike out "subpena" and insert "subpoena", so as to make the section read:

Sec. 7. That every person knowingly or willfully swearing or affirming falsely in any testimony taken in response to such subpoenas shall be deemed guilty of perjury and shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer the penalty provided by the laws of the United States for that offense when committed in its courts of justice. Any failure to attend and testify as a witness or to produce any book or paper which is in the possession or control of such witness, pursuant to such subpoena, may be regarded as a contempt of the court and shall be punishable as a contempt by the United States district court in the same manner as is provided by the laws of the United States for that offense in any other proceedings in its courts of justice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 3, to insert the following new section:

Sec. 8. For the purposes of sections 5, 6, and 7 of this act, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a district court of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

CONSTRUCTION AND INSPECTION OF BOILERS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 68, being the Senate bill 1129.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1129) to amend sections 361, 392, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, and 412 of title 46 of the United States Code, relating to the construction and inspection of boilers, unfired pressure vessels, and the appurtenances thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 361, 392, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, and 412, of title 46 of the United States Code be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 361. Every vessel subject to inspection propelled in whole or in part by steam or by any other form of mechanical or electrical power shall be considered a steam vessel within the meaning of and subject to all of the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That motor boats as defined in the act of June 9, 1910, are exempt from the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 392. The local inspectors shall also inspect, before the same shall be used and once at least in every year thereafter, the boilers, unfired pressure vessels, and appurtenances thereof, also the propelling and auxiliary machinery, electrical apparatus and equipment, of all vessels subject to inspection; and the inspectors shall satisfy themselves by thorough examination that the same are in conformity with law and the rules and regulations of the board of supervising inspectors, and may be safely employed in the service proposed. No boiler, unfired pressure vessel, or appurtenances thereof shall be allowed to be used if constructed in whole or in part of defective material or which because of its form, design, workmanship, age, use, or for any other reason is unsafe. At each annual inspection all boilers, unfired pressure vessels, and main steam piping shall be subjected to hydrostatic tests or such other tests as may be prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors. The ratio of the hydrostatic test to the maximum working pressure shall be determined by action of the board of supervising inspectors.

"Sec. 406. All boilers and unfired pressure vessels constructed of iron or steel plates or other approved metals for use on vessels subject to inspection shall be made of material that has been tested, inspected, and stamped in accordance with the requirements of this act.

"Sec. 407. Any person, firm, or corporation who constructs a boiler, or steam pipe connecting the boilers, or an unfired pressure vessel for use on vessels subject to inspection, of iron or steel plates or other approved metals which have not been duly tested, inspected, and stamped according to the provisions of this act and the requirements of the board of supervising inspectors; or who knowingly uses any defective material in the construction of such boiler, steam pipe, or pressure vessel; or who drifts any rivet hole to make it come fair; or who delivers any such boiler, steam pipe, or pressure vessel for use, knowing it to be defective in design, material, or construction, shall be fined $1,000. Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent from being used on such vessels any boiler, steam generator, steam pipe, or unfired pressure vessel which may not be constructed of riveted iron or steel plates: Provided, That scientific data and facts are submitted to enable the board of supervising inspectors to satisfy themselves that such boiler, steam generator, or pressure vessel is equal in strength and as safe from explosion as one of the best quality of iron or steel plates of riveted construction: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Commerce may grant permission to use any boiler, steam generator, or unfired pressure vessel not of iron or steel plate riveted construction upon the certificate of the supervising inspector for the district wherein such boiler, steam generator, or pressure vessel is to be used, and other satisfactory proof that the use of the same is safe and efficient, said permit to be valid until the next regular meeting of the board of supervising inspectors who shall act thereon: Provided further, That such boilers, steam generators, or pressure vessels may be constructed with seamless shells or by means of any approved method of welding governed by the rules and regulations prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors.

"Sec. 408. All iron or steel plates, or other material used in the construction of boilers or unfired pressure vessels for use on vessels subject to inspection shall be tested and inspected in such manner as shall be prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors and approved by the Secretary of Commerce, so as to enable the inspectors to ascertain the tensile strength, homogeneity, toughness, and ability to withstand the effect of repeated heating and cooling; and no plate or other material shall be used in the construction of such boilers or pressure vessels which has not been tested, inspected, and approved under the rules and regulations of the board of supervising inspectors: Provided, however, That small unfired pressure vessels having diameters not exceeding 30 inches and subject to a maximum allowable working pressure not exceeding 100 pounds per square inch shall be exempt from this requirement.

"The Director of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamship Inspection may, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, detail inspectors to inspect iron or steel plates or other material at the mills where the same are manufactured; and if such plates or material are found in accordance with the rules of the board of supervising inspectors, the inspector shall stamp the same with the initials of his name and the official stamp of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, which stamp shall be authorized by the board of supervising inspectors; and material so stamped shall be accepted by the local inspectors of the various districts as being in full compliance with the requirements of this section regarding the test and inspection of such plates and material: Provided, That any person, firm, or corporation who affixes any false, forged, fraudulent, spurious, or counterfeit of the stamp herein authorized to be put on by an inspector shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 and imprisoned not less than 2 years nor more than 5 years.

"Sec. 409. Every plate of iron or steel, made for use in the construction of boilers, unfired pressure vessels, or riveted steam pipe shall be distinctly and permanently stamped by the manufacturer thereof, and, if practicable, in such places that the marks shall be left visible when such plates are assembled, with the name of the manufacturer, and the minimum tensile strength in pounds per square inch, and the inspectors shall keep a record in their office of the stamps upon all plates, material, and boilers which they inspect.

"Sec. 410. Any person, firm, or corporation who counterfeits, or causes to be counterfeited, any of the marks or stamps prescribed for iron or steel plates or other material tested and inspected under this act, or who designedly stamps, or causes to be stamped falsely, any such plates or material; and every person who stamps or marks, or causes to be stamped or marked, any such plates or material with the name or trade-mark of another, with the intent to mislead or deceive, shall be fined $2,000, and may in addition thereto, at the discretion of the court, be imprisoned not exceeding 2 years.

"Sec. 411. The board of supervising inspectors is hereby empowered to prescribe formulas, rules, and regulations for the design, material, and construction of boilers, unfired pressure vessels, and appurtenances thereof, and steam piping for use on vessels subject to the provisions of this act. The maximum working pressure shall be determined by formulas prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors, and no such boiler, pressure vessel, or appurtenance thereof shall be designed or operated where the factor of safety is less than four: Provided, That the minimum thickness and maximum allowable working pressure of valves, fittings, and other appurtenances shall be determined by formulas prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors.

"Sec. 412. The maximum allowable thickness of shell plates and the details of material, design, and construction of externally fired boilers shall be determined by action of the board of supervising inspectors."

All laws or parts of laws which may conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is a bill transmitted to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] as Chairman of the Committee on Commerce and having relation to the provisions of the United States Code relating to the construction and inspection of boilers, unfired pressure vessels, and the appurtenances of the same. The bill is a departmental measure; it was unanimously reported by the committee; and I believe improves the present statute, brings it down to date, and makes certain modifications which are regarded as necessary and helpful.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As a member of the committee I should like to concur in the statement the Senator has just made. The improvements are technical in nature and it is scarcely worth while to survey them in detail. The general net result is of substantial advantage to the service.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; and the report of the committee was unanimous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GREAT FALLS BRIDGE

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, earlier in the day I reported from the Committee on Commerce a bridge bill, Senate bill 1564, for the calendar. It is in the usual form and I ask that it may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1564) to revive and reenact the act entitled

"An act authorizing the Great Falls Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Great Falls", approved April 21, 1928, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 3, before the word "granting", to insert "heretofore amended by acts of Congress approved March 4, 1929, and May 29, 1930", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved April 21, 1928, heretofore amended by acts of Congress approved March 4, 1929, and May 29, 1930, granting the consent of Congress to the Great Falls Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River at or near Great Falls, be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein referred to be commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of approval hereof.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON HOME FOR FOUNDLINGS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am going to submit a rather unusual request. The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] introduced a few days ago a bill, being Senate bill 1659, to authorize an increase in the number of directors of the Washington Home for Foundlings. It has not been considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I am chairman, but we have reported a number of bills of a similar character. Under the procedure many years ago Congress would grant special charters to various organizations within the District, hospitals, educational institutions, and so forth, and restricted the number of directors. These organizations have no power to amend their articles of incorporation to enlarge or diminish the number of directors.

This organization is known as the "Home for Foundlings" in the city of Washington, one of the most important humanitarian organizations that is functioning in the city. The Senator from Maine has been very much interested in it. Under the old charter the number of directors is limited to 10. The bill merely enlarges the authority so it may increase the number of directors as the needs of the home may require. That is the only purpose of the bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it may be considered and passed. May I say there is a bill pending before our committee to amend these old charters and to give the directors authority to enlarge or reduce the number of directors as they may see fit.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator realizes he is asking something that may establish a precedent which will come home to plague him? The bill has not been considered by a committee.

Mr. KING. I said it was an unusual request; and if the Senator objects, I shall not insist.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not going to object, but I simply invite attention to the fact that it is a procedure of which someone may take advantage in the way of a precedent to bring about the passage of some bill which may not be as desirable as this one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill named by him and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1659) to authorize an increase in the number of directors of the Washington Home for Foundlings, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for incorporating a hospital for foundlings in the city of Washington", approved April 22, 1870, as amended, is amended by striking out section 3 of said act and by inserting in lieu thereof the following new section:

"Sec. 3. The management of said hospital shall be under the control of a board of directors. The number of directors shall be fixed in the bylaws of the corporation and may be increased or decreased from time to time as may be provided in said bylaws.

The board of directors shall have power to appoint all officers and committees necessary to the proper administration of the affairs of the corporation."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARY SCHEDULES OF BANKS AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, on several different occasions I have asked unanimous consideration for Senate Resolution 75. I move at this time that the resolution be taken from the table and that the Senate proceed to consider it, as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 75.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 75) submitted by Mr. COSTIGAN on the 8th instant, as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each Federal Reserve bank and member bank of the Federal Reserve System; be it further

Resolved, That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each bank not a member of the Federal Reserve System to which loans or advances have been made by the Corporation; be it further

Resolved, That the Federal Power Commission is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each public-utility corporation engaged in the transportation of electrical energy in interstate commerce, and of all other corporations licensed under the Federal Water Power Act; and be it further

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is requested to prepare and transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors of each corporation engaged in interstate commerce (other than public-utility corporations) having capital and/or assets of more than a million dollars in value, whose securities are listed on the New York Stock Exchange or the New York Curb Exchange.

For the purposes of this resolution, the term "salary" includes any compensation, fee, bonus, commission, or other payment, direct or indirect, in money or otherwise, for personal services.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, is the Senator moving to take up the resolution?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator does not desire to displace the unfinished business?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly there is no disposition to displace the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the Senator asked unanimous consent for its consideration?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I shall ask unanimous consent if the motion is to have the effect indicated by the Senator from Arkansas. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution 75.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the resolution on the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on the table calendar.

Mr. McNARY. Is it a resolution coming over from a previous day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been on the calendar since May 8.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The able Senator from Oregon has twice heretofore objected to immediate consideration of the resolution because of the absence of Republican Senators.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; and at this time I have in mind the same objection. A number of Senators who would like to be present when the resolution is brought up have spoken to me about it. On two former occasions the able Senator from Colorado has called it up just a short time before the Senate took a recess. Under the circumstances I do not feel that I should at this time grant permission. I said to the Senator the other day that some time when there is a full attendance on a call of the calendar I shall have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon object?

Mr. McNARY. For that reason I object at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon objects.

COST OF ELECTRICAL DISTRIBUTION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 80.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 80. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask that the resolution may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 80), submitted by Mr. COSTIGAN on the 15th instant, as follows:

Whereas growing interest is manifest throughout the Nation on the part of householders, both urban and rural, as to present and future uses of electricity and reasonable rates chargeable therefor; and

Whereas a considerable, if not controlling, factor in the cost of rural and domestic electric service is reported to be the expense of distributing transmitted current between local substations and the customers' meters; and

Whereas it is responsibly alleged by engineers that the service companies keep no record of this important distribution cost and that the subject has never been discussed before any engineering society; that technical literature does not deal with it; and that only rarely has it been considered in electric-rate cases: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Power Commission is hereby requested to furnish the Senate with a report summarizing such information as may be available indicating the cost of electrical distribution expressed in cents per kilowatt-hour under varying service conditions, as contrasted with the more widely known costs of electrical generation and electrical transmission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Federal Trade Commission for a number of years, probably 2 or 3, have been making a very exacting, intensive, careful, and exhaustive investigation of the power companies in the United States and have submitted considerable data, I wonder if the matter ought not to be referred to the Federal Trade Commission, because it may have very much of the information the Senator seeks.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If agreeable to the Senator from Utah, I am willing to modify the resolution in effect so as to unite the information of the Federal Power and Trade Commissions, or otherwise, to meet the suggestion of the able Senator from Utah. However, I am advised that the Federal Power Commission has sufficient information with which to respond to the request.

Mr. KING. I do not wish to interfere with the course which the Senator from Colorado desires to pursue in the matter, but the thought occurred to me, in view of the great amount of testimony taken and the large amount of money expended in the investigation by the Federal Trade Commission, that that Commission would now have substantially all the information the Senator desires.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suggest that the resolution be adopted in its present form, if agreeable to the Senate, and that if cooperation is desired between the two commissions it may be subsequently arranged.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I was about to observe, when the Senator from Colorado made that suggestion, that it is not certain that the Federal Trade Commission has the data to which the resolution refers. If the Power Commission has it, there probably would be no occasion to complicate the matter by referring it to the Federal Trade Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I understand there are some Senators on this side of the aisle who are now absent who desire to be present when the resolution is considered. I hope, under the circumstances, that the Senator from Colorado will not press his request at this time because of the absence of those Senators on this side of the aisle, who are engaged in important committee hearings.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will it meet the wishes of the able Senator from Rhode Island if the absence of a quorum is suggested?

Mr. HEBERT. I do not know whether the Senators are available at this time. So far as I am concerned, I personally have no objection to the resolution now being considered, but I have information that some Senators on this side of the aisle desire to be present when it is considered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I trust the Senator will not insist on his objection. As he is aware, it is exceedingly difficult to secure the attendance which appears to be desired on the other side of the aisle for the consideration of any resolution. The resolution merely seeks information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 80, as requested by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEBERT. In view of the information that comes to me regarding the desire of Senators to be present when the resolution is considered and in view of their absence from the Chamber at this time, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island objects to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. GEORGE. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably the nomination of Stephen B. Gibbons, of New York, to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be placed on the calendar.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSIONER—EWIN L. DAVIS

Mr. NEELY. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably the nomination of Ewin Lamar Davis, of Tennessee, to be Federal Trade Commissioner for the term expiring September 25, 1939.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this nomination. Judge Davis is a former Member of the House; and I take it that there is no opposition to him of any kind, nature, or description on either side of the aisle. I hope the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] will permit him to be confirmed, and let the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this nomination. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator if the Committee on Interstate Commerce reported favorably on this nomination.

Mr. McKELLAR. It did.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I join in the hope expressed by the Senator from Tennessee that this nomination may be presently considered, and that the President may be advised of the action of the Senate.

I served in the House of Representatives with this nominee for 12 years of time. In all that span of years I never knew a man more indefatigable in industry, I never knew a man of loftier ideals of public service, I never knew a man of higher integrity, than this nominee. I join earnestly in the hope that there may be speedy action by the Senate on the nomination, and that notice thereof may be sent to the President, because no man ever was more deserving of such consideration at the hands of this body.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator from Maine, and concur entirely in what he has said.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I realize the amenities that exist between this body and the House. I further realize the necessity of conforming, so far as we can, to the practice of referring to the calendar matters that come from the committees.

If the committee has reported this nomination unanimously today, I shall have no objection to its consideration; but I shall object to the President being notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] requests the immediate consideration of the nomination of Mr. Ewin L. Davis. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and, the nomination is confirmed.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

THE CALENDAR—THE ADJUTANT GENERAL

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of James Fuller McKinley to be The Adjutant General of the Army.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have no desire to hold up the confirmation of this nomination through dilatory tactics. There are some features connected with the matter which I think the Senate should have brought to its attention. If, when it is in possession of these facts, the Senate desires to confirm General McKinley, it is a matter for each Senator to determine for himself.

I desire to say at the start that I do not wish to reflect upon General McKinley as a man or as a soldier. I understand that he is a splendid man, of fine character, and has a very efficient record as a soldier. The reason for my remarks is the manner in which he has been selected.

General McKinley has 11 more years to serve. For the past 4 years he has been Assistant The Adjutant General of the Army. If he is confirmed for this post, in 4 more years he will retire at $6,000 a year; and, although a young man in his fifties, he will probably go out, as other Army officers have gone, take a job in private industry, and continue to draw $500 a month or $6,000 a year as retired pay, even though he will have 7 more years to serve when the next 4 years shall have passed.

Here we are, at a time when we are cutting down the compensation of ex-service men. The man who lost a leg or was wounded in actual battle is having his compensation reduced 20 percent. The compensation paid in other cases of disability in action, in line of battle, is likewise diminished or eliminated altogether. Yet, in the face of that, we are going to take one of the most efficient Army officers in the whole Army, so I am told, elevate him at a very young age to the highest position to which he can aspire, and allow him to hold it for 4 years and then retire into private life at $500 a month. If there is any consistency in that policy, I am unable to follow it.

General McKinley at this moment has 11 years to serve. He is a very efficient officer. Under normal conditions perhaps his nomination to the top of his profession might be justified; but now, when economy is the watchword, are we by the confirmation of this appointment to take a step which will shortly bring about the retirement from the service of one of the most efficient officers of the Army, now in the heyday of his efficiency, upon whom the Government has expended thousands of dollars to educate him in the first place and to develop his efficiency to the highest point, and upon his retirement pay him $500 a month for the rest of his life?

That, briefly, is the reason why I have objected to the confirmation of General McKinley as The Adjutant General of the Army. It is not because General McKinley is inefficient, for he is not inefficient. He is a very efficient officer, one of the best in the Army. It is not because of any personal reflection on the general, for all that I have heard of him is commendatory in the highest degree. But I do want to ask Senators who but a few months ago voted to reduce the compensation of the man who had been wounded in actual battle, and in many cases to take away his compensation entirely, how they can do that on the one hand, and on the other hand justify the policy of paying an Army officer in good health, who has not yet finished his tour of duty, $6,000 a year for the balance of his life, even though he has 11 more years to serve.

I called this matter to the attention of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War said General McKinley was a very efficient officer. I called the Secretary's attention to the fact that General McKinley would draw a pension of $6,000 a year for 7 more years that he still had to serve, and stated that I thought we could not defend that policy in times like these, when Senators are having their compensation reduced from $10,000 a year to $8,500, when all Government employees are having their compensation reduced, when the Navy is about to lose three or four hundred of its officers and any number of its noncommissioned officers, and when, because of economy, several hundred Army officers are to be taken out of the service entirely, even though they are but half way through their military careers. The Secretary was much impressed with that argument, and said it offered a very grave problem for solution; but that as this had been the custom in the past, he felt that he should adhere to that policy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the officer in question was lifted up—and I do not use the term offensively—over other officers whose records were just as good as his, whose service was just as efficient, and given priority over them? My information is that General McKinley was given his present position over 17 officers who were his seniors, and whose efficiency record was not only excellent but without reproach or blemish.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is a true statement. May I say to the Senator from Utah that I may not have the figures exactly correct, but they are substantially correct.

When General McKinley was promoted the last time, 4 years ago, and made The Assistant Adjutant General of the Army, he was jumped over 17 other men who ranked him in seniority. At that time his selection was said to be based on efficiency. I desire to say now that I am impressed with General McKinley's record, that he is an efficient officer, that he is a man of fine character, and nothing I am saying against his confirmation is a reflection upon him personally. I am attempting to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that at a time when we are in the midst of an economy program we are asked to permit this exception to be made of paying to an Army officer who has 11 years yet to serve a pension of $6,000 a year for 7 years, when there is nothing wrong with his health, permitting him to go out and engage in employment in private life and yet be upon the pay roll of the Federal Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. TYDINGS. Before I yield to the Senator again—and I will in just a moment—may I say, take the case of Mr. Robert C. Davis, who was also an adjutant general, a very efficient Army officer. He was promoted to the top of his particular branch, and became The Adjutant General of the Army. After 4 years of service, while only 50 years of age, having 14 years to go before retirement, he exercised the option that he had, and retired with the rank of major general, and today draws $6,000 a year, although he is employed in private life as well. By this system we take the most efficient officer in the Army and drive him out of the service, and then, while he is out of the service, pay him for the 14 years he yet has to go before the proper retirement age.

I do not think this is sound policy in normal times; and certainly it is not fair policy in these times, when everybody else is feeling the blow of the ax of economy.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator whether he defends a policy which permits the lifting up of one officer over many others who are his seniors and whose records are as good as his, thus giving him priority and advantage.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I am not defending it, although I will say that I do believe there should be some elasticity for the man who is exceedingly efficient. In applying that rule, however, action based upon efficiency ought to be confined to the men in the same class, who have the same number of years to serve, so that the Government, the taxpayers, and the Army itself will not by this policy lose the services of a man before he reaches the proper retirement age.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. My information is that the record of Gen. Edgar T. Conley is just as good as that of General McKinley. He is a man of ability and integrity and his record as a military officer is not surpassed by that of General McKinley or any other officer in the Army. Why was General McKinley lifted up over him? General Conley was his senior. Why give General McKinley the precedence now?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. TYDINGS. Before I yield to the Senator from Tennessee, let us take the situation which the Senator from Utah conjures up and see where we are.

Here is Col. Edgar T. Conley, who entered West Point as a young man, graduated, and served all his life in the Army without a blot on his record. He is now, I think, 59 or 60 years old. I was told by the Chief of Staff and by the Secretary of War, who had refreshed his mind from the records, that Colonel Conley is one of the two most efficient officers in the Adjutant General's department of our entire Army. If Colonel Conley had received this appointment, he would have retired at the age of 64, as he should retire under the law. He would have had the climaxing laurel placed on his brow as the result of efficient and honorable service. The Government would not have been out a penny of money. They would have kept him as long as he was useful to the Army.

On the other hand we have General McKinley. A number of years after Colonel Conley graduated from West Point, General McKinley graduated. He is a splendid man, with a very efficient record; but when he had 15 more long years to serve he was lifted up over 17 other men, many of them with splendid records by the admission of the War Department itself, and made the Assistant Adjutant General of the Army. Now, forsooth, because he is Assistant Adjutant General of the Army, it is proposed to give him the top rank, and make him Adjutant General of the Army, so that when he completes these 4 years of duty and still will have 7 years to serve he will leave the service and draw $6,000 a year, simply because the alternative is that if he does not leave the service he must then go back to the rank of colonel, and his retirement pay as an Adjutant General would be equal to the pay he would receive as a colonel were he to stay in the Army.

I asked whether there were any exceptions where men who had gone to the top of their profession before retirement age had stayed in the Army. In reply the Chief of Staff, General MacArthur, and the Secretary of War stated that it was the almost universal custom that when a man had reached the top he retired and took his retirement pay for the balance of his life.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it might be said in behalf of General McKinley that his appointment comes here under the law we have enacted. We have permitted the President to select officers of efficiency—

Mr. TYDINGS. The President never selected General McKinley. I will say that to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not only has the present President selected him, but a former President selected him, and a former Secretary of War selected him—by the way, a Republican Secretary of War and a Republican President.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is in error. No former Secretary of War and no former President ever selected General McKinley to be The Adjutant General of the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, his name was sent to the Senate at the last session, and it was not confirmed; and now a Democratic President and a Democratic Secretary of War have sent in General McKinley's name again. He has been chosen for this position twice, and we must assume that he has been chosen because of his efficiency as an Army officer. The Senator admits that he has made an efficient officer, and I have no doubt of it. Of course, I am not saying anything contrary to General Conley, or any other officer. I only know that here are officers whom the Secretary of War and the President have a right to choose, and they have chosen them. Two Secretaries of War belonging to different parties and two Presidents belonging to different parties have chosen one of them, and he ought to be confirmed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, let me put to my friend, the Senator from Tennessee, rather plainly what the issue is in this case. In other words, we have cut off the rolls entirely five totally disabled service men, drawing a hundred dollars a month each as a pension, in order 4 years from now to retire General McKinley at $500 a month, even though he is healthy, even though we spent thousands of dollars on training him up to this point, and he has 7 or 8 years more to go. We take the money away from these disabled service men just to pay his retired pay, notwithstanding he may go into private life and make another five or ten or fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not understand that that is being done at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what is being done.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is true compensation has been taken away from certain deserving soldiers, and, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote to restore it at the very earliest possible moment when the Government has the money.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Government never will get the money, may I say to the Senator from Tennessee, if we are going to spend $6,000 a year that we do not need to spend.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to ask the Senator whether General McKinley is not already a brigadier general and could he not retire at this time, after 30 years' service, as a brigadier general?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think he could, but I am not certain about it. Whether or not the matter is complete or not I do not know, but the moment his successor is confirmed, then he would become a colonel, and he could not retire except upon disability. It is my understanding, though I may be wrong, that he could not retire as a brigadier general.

Mr. CAREY. I think the Senator is mistaken in that. I think General McKinley is a brigadier general now.

Mr. TYDINGS. He could not retire.

Mr. CAREY. He could retire as such after 30 years' service. He has been in the Army for 35 years, and he would have a right to retire.

Mr. TYDINGS. He has been in the Army for 35 years?

Mr. CAREY. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. How old is General McKinley?

Mr. CAREY. I do not know, but I know he received his commission when he was very young. I think before he was 21 he went into the Spanish War.

Mr. McKELLAR. He is about 53 years old.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He was born February 22, 1880.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not going to make any point about General McKinley's nomination. I simply felt that, as a matter of justice, I should call the matter to the attention of the Senate. I want to reiterate what I said at the beginning, that General McKinley, as far as I know, is a man of splendid character, and a man with a very efficient record. I have no aspersion to cast on him at all. I think he has done only what anybody would do, namely, try to advance to the top in the shortest possible time. But in a Congress which has cut the ex-service man to the extent which this Congress has cut him in his compensation, in a Congress which has cut every employee of this Government, in a Congress which has taken Army and Navy officers and Army and Navy personnel by the wholesale in the early part of their careers and turned them out, it seems to me that in such a Congress there at least might be a desire to meditate and reflect upon a policy which would allow a very efficient Army officer to retire on $6,000 a year 7 or 8 years before the expiration of his service.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it seems to me that the situation alluded to by the Senator from Maryland is one which should be remedied by law. It is certainly one for which General McKinley is not responsible. It would be most unfair to penalize him by denying him a promotion which he has earned by exceptional efficiency under a system which he had no voice in establishing. Let us by legislation cure the inequalities to which the Senator from Maryland refers, and let us not make General McKinley bear the blame for an unfair system, if indeed it is unfair.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, was this nomination unanimous on the part of the committee?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The nomination was unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, of course what the Senator from Texas has been arguing is that if a system is wrong keep on with the system, even though it is wrong, until the whole system is changed; do not correct some injustice that may be done by an erroneous system when you have an opportunity.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all. I say let us not punish an innocent individual for a system over which he has no control. The Secretary of War, after earnest consideration, decided that General McKinley was entitled to this promotion. We could change the system by law tomorrow if we should so desire.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Maryland is a very extraordinary one. Because of the very efficiency and merit which General McKinley has shown the Senator from Maryland would have him suffer the humiliation of having the Senate reject his nomination in order to save a few hundred or a few thousand dollars for the Government.

Congress has a right to adopt a policy that Army officers shall be promoted by seniority, and by seniority only. It has not adopted such a policy. As long as we permit the promotion of officers based on the merit of their service we run some risk that it may cost the Government in individual cases more money than the seniority system would cost.

For reasons which have seemed good to the Congress we have maintained the policy of permitting promotions based upon merit and good service to the Government. General McKinley has won this promotion. The Senator from Maryland does not seriously question that. General McKinley has been designated for this promotion on recommendation of the Chief of Staff and by the action of the Secretary of War. He has his nomination from the President of the United States, and the nomination is unanimously reported by the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate. I submit that no reason has been shown for failing to confirm the appointment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, only because the Senator from Ohio inadvertently has misconstrued something I have said do I rise further to detain the Senate.

I do not concede for a single moment that General McKinley is any more efficient than General Conley. I happened to see the efficiency records, and looked them over with my own eyes, and I am in possession of the same facts which the Secretary of War has in his possession.

As for the humiliation of General McKinley now, how about the humiliation of those officers who ranked General McKinley when 4 years ago he was taken from number 17 on the list and jumped over all the officers in between him and the top, cutting them out of the possibility of reaching the top of their profession before the time of retirement came? How was that for an injustice? The records in the case of General Conley 4 years ago showed that the then Adjutant General of the Army recommended him as being fitted in every way for the promotion which General McKinley got.

May I say to my friend from Ohio that it was not only efficiency, although General McKinley did have efficiency. There were certain Members of this body on the other side of the aisle who saw that that efficiency was called to the attention of the appointing power, and when I went to three of the Senators in this body and told them of the injustice that was then being done to Colonel Conley, I was told that I might as well save my legs and my breath, because those gentlemen were going to name the next Adjutant General of the Army.

When it comes down to the question of justice or injustice, my connection with this matter has been such that I happen to know that the real injustice was done 4 years ago, when certain Members of this body brought all the pressure they could bring to secure the appointment of a certain gentleman to a then very high office.

I am rising now not only because of the present injustice, but because I happen to know that 4 years ago efficiency was not the only thing that counted in making promotions in the Army.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. What reason have we to think that that has been changed?

Mr. TYDINGS. What I am trying to prove to the Senate is that it has not been changed.

Mr. LONG. We have been told that 4 years ago efficiency was not the sole reason for promotion. I do not find anything here to indicate any great departure from the practice we were following in that regard at that time.

Mr. TYDINGS. General McKinley will still be Adjutant General of the Army if he does not get this promotion, if he lives. Long before his term of service is up, if he is so efficient, he would render this service at the top of his profession anyway, and in the meantime the Government would have his exclusive services for the money which is being paid. But under this policy at the end of 4 years the Government will continue to pay the money but will lose the services of one of the most efficient men it has in the Army.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this is one of the things which keeps the Army mysterious, which apparently is necessary.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to get a roll call on this matter. I have no doubt in the world but that the Senate will confirm the nomination. We are still in the goose-step period, and I am ready to take my licking, but I should like to have a roll call, so that those who vote for and against may be known.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, General McKinley will draw his retirement pay if the Congress permits the retirement act to stand as it now does stand, but the Congress will have 4 years in which it may, if it wishes, provide that retirement pay shall not be due and payable until the officer who claims it has reached the regular retirement age.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it cannot only do that but it can change the law at any time so as to make the pay any amount it sees fit to make it.

Mr. GEORGE. It can change it entirely or take it away entirely. Because General McKinley was jumped over 17 officers would, I submit, be no fair reason why we should deny him the right to promotion to this office to which he has been advanced. I suspect that has occurred at every session of the Senate since promotions have been made in the Army.

I may remind the Senator from Maryland now that something similar is occurring in the case of the Chief of Infantry, where the senior colonel is by no means given the advancement although his efficiency is beyond question and although, I dare say, in Army circles he would be regarded as entirely capable of filling that important post.

If we are to correct an evil by eliminating the retired pay in a case of this kind, it ought to be done directly by Congress, and it ought not to be done by denying promotion to a deserving officer who has received the nomination of the President of the United States for the position to which he has been promoted.

May I say, Mr. President, that it is a very serious question whether the Congress has any right to impose a limitation upon the power of the President to appoint to public office. The term "public office" within the meaning of the Constitution, and within the meaning of the phrase as I now use it, is as applicable to military service as it is to civil life. It has been recognized that the Congress has the right, and the exercise of that right has been acquiesced in, to provide for promotion by seniority up to and through to the rank of colonel; but it is a serious question whether, under the Constitution, the power of the President to appoint anyone Adjutant General or to any office in the Army, even below the rank of colonel, might not be exercised without regard to anything the Congress might do.

However, the point is that Congress has provided for promotions on the basis of seniority up to and through the rank of colonel; but it has left to the President, unrestrained and unrestricted, the full right that is given him under the Constitution to make promotions among general officers and of general officers in the Army. If what the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] says should transpire, to wit, that General McKinley should elect to retire at the end of his 4 years' service as Adjutant General of the Army and receive his retired pay as of that rank, the Congress itself, if it believes that practice to be wrong in principle, would be remiss in not remedying it long before the opportunity for retirement after the 4 years' service has arisen in this case. If we are now to deny confirmation to a general officer simply and solely because he has been stepped up over other officers, his seniors, we will have instituted a practice which, had it been adhered to through the years, would have made a vastly different picture of the whole official set-up of the Army.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Having been called from the Chamber I have not heard all the observations of my friend, but the last sentence that he uttered leads me to the conclusion that because the President, as he contends, is given authority to name the senior officers the Senate's authority to reject them is restricted. It seems to me, Mr. President—and I ask the Senator if that is not the correct view to take—that the President has no greater authority or power to name officers for the higher positions in the Army than he has to name persons for other positions in the Government where the Constitution gives him the right to nominate. The Senate has the same authority to confirm or reject military nominations as it has to confirm or refuse to confirm the nominations of persons to be ambassadors, judges, or to hold other important positions in the Government service.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sure the Senator is right, and I was not making the argument that the Senate did not have the responsibility and power to act in this case as in any other, but I was making the point that the power of the President to appoint general officers, given him under the Constitution, has not been restrained or restricted by Congress nor has there been any attempt to do so in the case of those officers beyond the rank of colonel. It would be true, of course, that the Senate would have the power to reject the nomination of an ambassador to Great Britain, for instance, solely because the majority party, or the Senate itself without regard to party, believed that someone else had seniority right or by virtue of his qualifications ought to have received the appointment; but the point is that the seniority rule does not apply, and it ought not to, I think, be argued against a worthy officer who has received his nomination any more in this case than in the case to which the Senator has referred, to wit, the nomination of any civil officer of the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I am sure the Senator is familiar with the fact that both in the Army and the Navy there have been complaints because of the alleged unfairness and favoritism in the matter of promotions. There have been many heartburnings and grounds for complaint by reason of the fact that favoritism has been exhibited in the selection of officers for promotion. In my opinion there have been abuses, by those in authority, and not infrequently political or other improper influences exerted in securing promotions and advancements. This has affected the efficiency and morale of the military branch of the Government.

I ask the Senator if it is not manifestly unfair for those in authority to select officers and promote them over many of their seniors whose records are of the highest character and against whom there can be found no blot or blemish? It seems to me—and I ask the Senator if it is not a fact—that such a procedure as that is bound to produce confusion and inefficiency? Will it not lead to discouragement, to heartburning, and criticisms, all tending to produce demoralization in the military service of the Government?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am not called upon to answer that question because I have not the appointing power; there may be a great deal of justice in what the Senator says; but I have suffered from the application of the doctrine before, and I have just called attention to the fact that the Chief of Infantry is not the senior nor ranking colonel in the service today. While, if I had the appointing power, I might select the senior colonel for that important post, I do not concede that it would be fair to the nominee of the President to reject him solely because I might have been of the opinion that the rule of seniority should have been applied in principle, although it is not required to be applied under the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, of course the Congress, if it sees fit, can provide a system by which the higher-ranking officers are promoted just as are officers who are below the grade of colonel.

Mr. GEORGE. That is, if it would not infringe the Constitution, and so long as the requisite qualifications are present.

Mr. McKELLAR. So long as it conforms to the constitutional requirement; but Congress has never seen fit to take his present privilege away from the President; it allows him to exercise it; and, having allowed him to exercise it, if we should now decline to do so we would not be carrying out the law.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly; and for very good reasons Congress never will take that power away from the President.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have listened to the discussion and understand the position taken by different Senators. According to my idea, the Senate should not become a party to a system of jumping up and lifting officers up over a number of others of higher rank and equal efficiency. There is a duty upon the Senate in the matter of confirmation, just as there is in the matter of nominations upon the Chief of Staff of the Army, or upon the President for that matter.

I may be wrong, but I have been impressed with the fact that during the Hoover administration, more or less through political activities, this officer became a pet of the administration; not that he was not efficient, but he was then promoted over 17 other officers of higher rank and of acknowledged efficiency. Then, in the latter part of the Hoover administration, he still had the star of favoritism—I call it a "star of favoritism" setting over him because he was again recommended for appointment as Adjutant General over a number of officers of higher rank and of equal efficiency according to the records. So far as I am concerned, I do not care to go on record in exercising my prerogative on the question of confirmation and vote to perpetuate or to encourage any such system in our Army.

It is foolish and ridiculous and absurd for anybody to close his eyes and say that there is not more or less favoritism or more or less manipulation in the Army in regard to promotions. I do not know of anybody who is familiar with such matters who is not aware of that. I know in the case of the selection of the Chief of Infantry, mentioned by the Senator from Georgia, a senior officer, with a splendid and excellent record throughout his entire military service, was passed over and some other officer was recommended by the Chief of Staff. It is all right to retire and to retreat and to try to extricate oneself by trying to talk about the President making the appointment, but the selection is really made by the Chief of Staff, and, in a routine way, generally speaking, the President goes ahead and recommends to Congress a certain man be placed in a certain office. That is a feature of the administration of the Army that I do not approve of; it is favoritism.

It is true that we have a law that authorizes what is done, but it was never intended that that law should be abused or that that law should be utilized as a vehicle for favoritism against other worthy officers of the Army of equal efficiency; and it has been utilized in many instances in such a way, and for the purpose of promoting and advancing the cause of some officer who happened to be a pet or who happened to have the favor of those having the selecting power. I believe that the officer who has not the favor of those in power has some right and should have some consideration.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I wish to ask the Senator if he has not heard—it has been pretty generally known here for some time—that this particular party was going to be jumped over a number of others and made the choice for this position? I have heard that around here for quite a little while.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have heard that, and I heard during the Hoover administration when he got in The Adjutant General's office, when he got the first step-up promotion over 17 others, many of whom had just as good records as he had, that he was then probably headed for The Adjutant Generalship, because President Hoover appointed him, and the only reason that he was not confirmed during the latter part of the Hoover administration was that the Democrats, being in control, adopted a general rule that they would not confirm anyone, but now he is here again, and I think that all the circumstances fully justify me in not voting for his confirmation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything except what I have contributed; but I was a member of the committee appointed by the Democratic caucus to attempt to determine the exceptions which should be made during the closing days of the Hoover administration. As I recall, this officer was one of those at that time, and there was no one who thought that this supposed-to-be routine matter justified an exception. There was not a single man, as I recall, in the entire caucus that looked upon this case as being one that justified an exception, and his nomination was held up at that time and was kept from being confirmed.

I wish to confirm what the Senator from Florida said. It has been in the brewing here. I have understood that this thing was going to be manipulated ever since I have been in the Congress. It has been generally understood that a certain gentleman who had been the object of some favoritism or had some "Knight of the Garter" standing was going to be slipped over and made Adjutant General. That has been well known. The fact of the case is we have been given notice that this thing was coming, and apparently now it is being put over, to pay a man $500 a month for 7 years, while the crippled boys who are getting $10 a month are being taken off the pay roll on the ground of economy.

Mr. President, I do not know that the Senator from Maryland will get a roll call on this matter. I am going to help him to get a roll call, but I want it to be known in line with the way I have been voting on these matters that the Senate is about to advise and consent in this matter, and I think that some of the sources of our military operations need some senatorial advice. My part of the advice is going to be that this mysterious brewing that is going on in the Army is not of the solacing kind to meet with what I think is for the welfare and benefit of the country.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is obvious we cannot get a vote tonight. There is no quorum present and I do not want to call a quorum. I ask if it is not agreeable that we pass over the nomination at this time?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let us get through with the nomination. We can ask for a quorum. The Assistant Adjutant General has already been appointed. It will complicate matters very much unless this nomination is acted upon. I think it ought to be acted upon and I hope it will be.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that I do not want to call a quorum, but I shall be compelled to do so if he insists upon a vote on this nomination tonight. I suggest that we pass it over and take up the rest of the calendar and dispose of it. Then I shall move for a recess of the Senate until the conclusion of the Court of Impeachment proceedings tomorrow.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, there is no reason why we should not vote tonight, as I see it. However, if Senators desire to have a record vote on this question, I realize the difficulty of getting a quorum at this hour. There is, however, a serious complication if another executive session should go by without acting upon this nomination. The nominations of The Adjutant General and of General Conley as Assistant Adjutant General were sent to the Senate at the same time. They were reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to the Senate at the same time. General Conley's nomination as Assistant Adjutant General was confirmed at the session of the Senate last Saturday.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is under the impression that the confirmation of General Conley and notification of the President would constitute an immediate confirmation. My understanding, in talking with the Secretary of War, is that even though both confirmations were made today and the President notified today, it would be at some date in the future, the 30th of June, before the actual change in place will occur, so that General McKinley, as I see the situation, would not be prejudiced by having it go over until tomorrow.

Mr. BULKLEY. I think the Senator is correct in saying that if both notifications went to the President at the same time, it would work out as the President and the Secretary of War intend. But I am advised that if the President should be advised of the confirmation of General Conley first, before the confirmation of General McKinley, it would complicate the situation. Cannot we have unanimous consent that notification of the President of the confirmation of the nomination of General Conley may be withheld until this matter is disposed of?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to take any small advantage of General McKinley. I have no objection, and if the Senator from Ohio submits the request I shall not object; but let me say it will not be necessary. However, I have no objection.

Mr. BULKLEY. I feel constrained to make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio that notification of the President of confirmation of the nomination of General Conley be withheld temporarily?

Mr. KING. I hope that will be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that we pass over the pending nomination and take up the remainder of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, may I inquire if the consent given to withhold notification to the President of the confirmation of General Conley will leave that matter within the disposition of the Senate as completely as if a motion was made to reconsider the confirmation at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the interpretation of the Chair. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Pat Malloy, of Oklahoma, to be Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the nominee is from my State. I have known him for 20 years. I endorsed his nomination and I am glad to move his confirmation.

Mr. KING. The Judiciary Committee unanimously reported the nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, because there are so many vacancies in the Department of Justice and because I understand the Attorney General himself is out of the city, I ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified of the confirmation of Mr. Malloy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the practice that has obtained during this session and the last session, I shall have to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

JUDGE OF THE CIRCUIT COURT OF HAWAII

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Norman D. Godbold to be first judge, circuit court, first circuit of Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY, MIDDLE DISTRICT, GA.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of T. Hoyt Davis, of Georgia, to be United States attorney for the middle district of Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL, NORTHERN DISTRICT, INDIANA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Al W. Hosinski to be United States marshal for the northern district of Indiana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed. That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if there is nothing further, I move that the Senate, as in legislative session, take a recess until tomorrow following the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p.m.) the Senate, as in legislative session, took a recess until the conclusion of the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment on Wednesday, May 24, 1933; the hour of meeting of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment being 10 o'clock a.m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 23 (legislative day of May 15), 1933

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

Pat Malloy to be Assistant Attorney General.

FIRST JUDGE, CIRCUIT COURT, FIRST CIRCUIT OF HAWAII

Norman D. Godbold to be first judge, circuit court, first circuit of Hawaii.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

T. Hoyt Davis to be United States attorney, middle district of Georgia.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF INDIANA
Al W. Hosinski to be United States marshal, northern district of Indiana.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSIONER

Ewin Lamar Davis to be Federal Trade Commissioner.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, who hast given us life with all its countless blessings and promises, we rejoice in Thee, knowing that Thou art the source of perfect peace and understanding; all good things cometh from Thy merciful and bountiful hand. We thank Thee for the kindly sunlight, for the beauty and the glory of the radiant sky. O teach us, our Heavenly Father, the joy of that life made responsive to the messages of the flowers, the songbirds, the fragrant hill-sides, and the sweet, quiet murmur of the valley. O forgive us, Lord, for only man is out of harmony. By these ministries may we be led to labor joyously and enter into helpful relations with every good thing that lives. Speak to us in the manifold voices of Thy loving creatures and allow nothing, O Lord, to preclude inward largeness, strength, and vision. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 4220) entitled "An act for the protection of Government records", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and Mr. BORAH to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J.Res. 159. Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to a compact or agreement between the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri authorizing the acceptance for and on behalf of the States of Kansas and Missouri of title to a toll bridge across the Missouri River from a point in Platte County, Mo., to a point at or near Kansas City, in Wyandotte County, Kans., and specifying the conditions thereof.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.J.Res. 48. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Posheng Yen, a citizen of China.

CONFERRING DEGREE OF BACHELOR OF SCIENCE ON GRADUATES OF NAVAL ACADEMY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 753) to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon the graduates of the Naval Academy and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 753) to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "academies", at the end of the said amendment, insert the following: ", from and after the date of the accrediting of said academies by the Association of American Universities"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

CARL VINSON,

FRED A. BRITTEN,

Managers on the part of the House.

PARK TRAMMELL,

FREDERICK HALE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 753) to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommend in the accompanying conference report:

The Naval Academy and the Military Academy are now approved and listed by the Association of American Universities.

The curriculum of the Coast Guard Academy has been submitted to the association, but its approval has not yet been extended, pending further observation of the success of graduates of the Coast Guard Academy in post-graduate study.

CARL VINSON,

FRED A. BRITTEN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, this is agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. This merely requires the three institutions to be accredited in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Association of American Universities.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. What is going to happen to the degrees of bachelor of science to be conferred on the cadets of the Military Academy? That was in another bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This takes care of all of them. This takes care of the Coast Guard, the Military Academy, and the Naval Academy. They may each issue the degree of bachelor of science to the cadets when the institutions qualify in accordance with the regulations of the American Association of Universities.

Mr. GOSS. That is, all three of them?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. The Naval Academy and the West Point Academy have already qualified. The Coast Guard Academy has not yet qualified, and until it does the degree cannot be issued to the Coast Guard cadets.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF PREFERRED STOCK OF INSURANCE COMPANIES BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced in the House H.Res. 156, providing for the consideration of S. 1094, a bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase the preferred stock of certain insurance companies.

Public confidence in American insurance companies, particularly fire and casualty companies, has been shaken by rumors and also by rehabilitation proceedings against the third largest American fire company and one of the great American casualty companies, namely, Globe & Rutgers Fire Insurance Co. and the National Surety Co.

The result of this loss of confidence has been to cause more or less serious runs on American insurance companies similar in nature to runs on banks; that is, policyholders cancel policies and demand payment of unearned premiums. The effect is to seriously threaten the ability of the insurance companies to continue in business because of the cash drain, irrespective of whether their assets at a fair value exceed their liabilities.

There are many unfortunate effects flowing from such wholesale cancellations of policies. In the first place, the insurance companies throw into the securities market their best securities in order to provide cash to meet the demands for return of unearned premiums, and this has a depressing effect upon the market.

Moreover, just as in the case of banks, the insurance companies have a vast network of interlocking credits and debits; that is to say, each reinsures in other companies. Accordingly, if one substantial company is threatened, it injures the credit of a number of other companies, and the danger pyramids as in the case of the failure of a large metropolitan bank.

Another effect of rehabilitation or other proceedings against a fire or casualty company is to tie up funds of American industries and institutions which have insured in the company and also to tie up the funds of home owners and other mortgagors and add one more burden to their effort to carry their property.

Legal proceedings against such a company also throws out of work a large number of employees and threatens the solvency and the ability to carry on of thousands of individuals throughout the country acting as agents and brokers who have written business in such a company.

One of the most unfortunate results of the present lack of confidence in American fire and casualty companies is the flow of business to foreign companies operating in this country. This flow of business and premium money is enormous, and is a serious permanent damage to American business institutions. It is, naturally, most difficult to obtain accurate figures as to the volume of this flow of premium money and business. However, it is known that one of the British companies, the operations of which in this country have been on a smaller scale than those of the other British companies, and which expected to do a current annual business of only $5,000,000 in premiums, did approximately $23,000,000 in premium business during the first few weeks after the low point of the depression evidenced by the bank moratorium. It is also known that one of the great American universities ordered all of its insurance canceled in American companies and replaced in foreign companies.

The reason for this confidence in foreign companies, as compared with the lack of confidence in American companies under present conditions, is that the foreign companies are fortified by their resources in their home countries. Thus they may draw on funds at home to meet obligations here, and the liquidity of these home funds are not affected by bank failures, by bank moratoria, and by the holding up of inflow of premiums from agents.

On the other hand, the liquidity of American companies is damaged by the tying up of deposits in closed banks, by the depression in value of their holdings of securities in American railroads, industrials, and mortgages, and by the slow payment of premium balances owed by agents throughout the country, whose funds in turn are tied up in closed banks and in depressed investments.

The difficulties of the American companies are not due in any degree to bad underwriting practices but solely to the banking and mortgage situation and the extreme depression in the market prices for American securities and by their faith in American investments and institutions.

Accordingly the American companies are suffering solely from their confidence in American investments and institutions, and unless they are given assistance and stabilized and sustained by the Government through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation they will become more and more subject to inroads of competition from foreign fire and casualty companies.

It is freely stated by important insurance agents and brokers that unless the important companies which are now in rehabilitation are put in a position to resume business it will be a black eye to all the American fire and casualty companies and a severe blow to that field of American business.

There are not only these large and imponderable effects of a failure to rehabilitate these companies through a lack of legislation permitting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase their preferred stock, but there is a direct effect through the freezing of assets of other American insurance companies which have direct claims against the companies in present difficulties.

If this bill permitting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase preferred stock in insurance companies is passed and the purchase is made in a few cases, in all probability confidence in American companies will be restored by the belief in the determination of the Government to stabilize and protect them, and there will be no need for further purchases.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds will be fully protected in the purchase of preferred stocks, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not be asked to contribute any funds to make up any deficiency in assets. The companies will first be made solvent by the conversion of claims against them into an issue of preferred stock junior to that offered to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will then get a prior claim on the assets, not in the form of a secured loan but in the form of a prior stock. To repeat, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not be asked to contribute money so as to bring the assets up level with or above liabilities, but simply to take a prior position, at the same time freeing the pledged assets so as to make the companies liquid. This will enable the companies to carry on in business and take advantage of their enormous good will. The argument has been made that the good will of the companies against which proceedings have been taken has been destroyed. However, careful inquiry has been made among insurance men, and they have estimated that not less than 75 percent of the advantageous agency relationships of these companies are still intact. It is known that when the new National Surety Corporation resumed it received a flood of new business. In fact, the opposite is true. When a company has been rehabilitated and it is seen that the Government intends to sustain it, confidence in the company is more than restored, particularly in a case where claimants against a company convert their claims into stock. The result is customer ownership, and the claimants have every motive to place new business with that company.

Furthermore, in the case of Globe & Rutgers Fire Insurance Co., which is now in rehabilitation proceedings, if the law is passed, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not be asked to put new money into the company, but simply to convert all or a portion of its already existing $10,000,000 loan into a prior preferred stock of a company already made solvent. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be given controlling voting power which it may exercise when and as it sees fit and thus insure the prompt retirement of the stock it receives after the emergency passes.

If, on the other hand, this, the third largest American fire-insurance company, is permitted to go into liquidation, the record shows that 5 years will probably elapse before any payment whatever is made to claimants. This has been the history of the liquidation of stock companies in New York State in the past. This long freezing of credits is not due to any incompetence or laxity on the part of the insurance department officials, but simply to the necessity for reducing all the claims to definite amounts before any distribution can be made. It would be most unfortunate to freeze the $20,000,000 of claims of policyholders against Globe & Rutgers Fire Insurance Co. for this long period.

Furthermore, the liquidation of this company would have a disastrous effect upon the credit abroad of American insurance companies. The company had a vast amount of foreign business all over the civilized world, in addition to approximately 400,000 policyholders in the United States. This company has had a distinguished record of over 34 years, particularly marked by its patriotic achievements during the war. Before the Government established other means of insuring shipment of American goods abroad, Globe & Rutgers time and again increased its maximum risks under marine policies and thus enabled American manufacturers and shippers to protect their shipments to Europe at a time when they were unable to obtain protection in substantial amounts from other companies.

At a meeting of over 100 insurance brokers and agents in New York City last week a resolution was unanimously adopted urging the rehabilitation of the company, and the management has been flooded with letters urging rehabilitation from all parts of the country. Furthermore, the plan for the reorganization of the company has had the endorsement and formal assent of leading American industrial concerns, banking institutions and individuals, who are claimants.

The passage of this law and its consequent immediate rehabilitation of Globe & Rutgers and these few other pressing situations will restore confidence in American fire and casualty companies and do away with any further need of action in this field by the Government, and stop the flow of business and premium money to foreign companies.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. O'CONNOR was granted permission to extend his remarks.)

THE ECONOMY ACT

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks concerning the regulations affecting the administration of the Economy Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, study of the new regulations providing for benefits to veterans under the provisions of the Economy Act has convinced me that they are going to cause grave injustices in many cases, and in fairness to the former service men, as well as to the other citizens of the country, I feel that immediate revision of the new orders and regulations is imperative.

ADMINISTRATION SHOULD CORRECT ALREADY APPARENT INJUSTICES

I am firmly convinced that neither the Congress nor the President had any desire to work any injustice on any veteran to whom the country owes a great debt that must be repaid as best we can. It has been my consistent practice to support the Executive in his recommendations for emergency legislation to bring the Nation out of the critical economic situation that confronted it. I supported him in his request for power to readjust the schedule of benefits to veterans, and voted for the economy bill. President Roosevelt, in discussing the farm-relief legislation, frankly admitted that it was experimental in character; and he asserted that if it failed to achieve the desired results, he would be the first to admit its faults and seek changes in it. I am confident, therefore, that this same attitude of honesty and fairness will characterize his attitude toward the veterans legislation.

SERIOUS ABUSES OF JUSTICE MUST BE AVOIDED

Laws affecting the former soldiers of the Nation form a bulky volume of statutes, and there are many intricate details in them. In sweeping alternations, therefore, it is not surprising that some mistakes have been made, but my hope is that those charged with the administration of the laws will be quick to accept suggestions for modifications and that they would not hesitate to make such changes when it can be clearly shown that they are necessary if serious abuses of justice are to be avoided.

NARROW, UNFAIR, AND ARBITRARY INTERPRETATIONS

There are thousands of former service men in the Fourteenth Congressional District of Texas, and I have corresponded with many of them concerning the details of their cases. From evidence submitted to me by these veterans, I have come to the conclusion that some of the new regulations must be altered if the intent of the Congress is to be followed in administration of the Economy Act. Some of these injustices have been caused by the regulations themselves and others have been occasioned by what I consider harsh, arbitrary, and unfair interpretations placed upon them by officials of the Veterans' Administration.

SERVICE-CONNECTION AND CAUSATIVE-FACTOR REQUIREMENTS

One of the phrases that is depriving many worthy men, with service-connected disabilities, of fair benefits is that in Regulation No. 5, which provides that emergency officers will continue to receive retirement pay for their service-connected disabilities as long as "the causative factor therefor is shown to have arisen out of the performance of duty during such service." According to letters from the Veterans' Administration to retired officers in my district, it is apparent that the Administration is placing a literal interpretation upon this phrase that is not warranted by the terms of the act itself. Obviously it is often impossible for a man, who was injured or who incurred disease in the service, to point to the explicit causative factor which originated his trouble. In fact, my observation of cases which have thus far come to my attention leads me to the conclusion that very few disabled men can submit such evidence.

I have numbers of cases of officers who have served for periods of from 10 to 30 years and who were finally discharged after the World War with a surgeon's certificate of disability by reason of tuberculosis; yet they have been removed from the rolls because they cannot point to the exact hour and date when such tuberculosis began. It appears that few, if any, tuberculosis cases in this category will remain on the rolls despite the fact that the men affected were discharged with statements showing that they had the disease. A similar situation exists with regard to other diseases and to many injuries. The veteran became disabled while in service, it is apparent, and the records disclose the fact that it was admitted that he was disabled when he was discharged. Yet lack of technical evidence prohibits establishment of the exact "causative factor" in the case. No one could possibly believe that this was the intent of the Congress or of the President in the enactment of this legislation.

SOLICITOR'S DECISION OF APRIL 21 AND RETROACTIVE EFFECT

Another example of the miscarriage of justice in the interpretation of these regulations is seen in the action of the Administration in actually making some of them retroactive. The act provided that payments should continue for 3 months after its passage. Naturally, it would be assumed that in cases where an award had been made by the Administration the beneficiary would receive payment for those 3 months. However, the officials of the Administration, in numbers of cases affecting my constituents, have ruled that payment must have actually been started to the beneficiary; in other words, if the award had been made, but the payment held up through the inevitable delays of the Administration so that the check was not forwarded prior to March 20, 1933, the beneficiary is wrongfully deprived not only for 3 months after the enactment of the act but in actuality payment from the date of application, which in several cases dates as far back as December 1932. Is there any justifiable reason for depriving a claimant of benefits for December, January, and February under which he was entitled and had been awarded because of an act of March 20, 1933, and a department decision of April 21, 1933?

DISCHARGE FROM HOMES AND HOSPITALS MINUS TRANSPORTATION

Attention should be given immediately to the provisions of the new rules requiring discharge of certain veterans from hospitals and veterans' homes. In many instances the Government moved these disabled veterans hundreds of miles to these homes; the least it can do now is to return them to their places of residence, and I feel that neither the Congress nor the Executive intended that these veterans be put out into the street with no place to go. I recall the case of a veteran who resides in my home city of Corpus Christi, Tex. He was admitted to the Veterans' Administration home at Leavenworth, Kans. He has now been notified that he will be dismissed; and despite the fact that the Government took him from south Texas to Kansas to place him in the home, it is not going to provide transportation back to Corpus Christi for him. Of course he is without funds to pay for such travel. The Administration states: "There are no funds available to pay return transportation for beneficiaries discharged." If he, and the thousands of other veterans in his situation, are to be turned loose at the homes, a great burden will be placed upon the local charity institutions in the cities where these Government institutions are located, and a gross injustice will be done the veterans. Furthermore, if these veterans attempt to go home on foot or by soliciting rides upon the highways, they are going to expose themselves to needless suffering. I fear that grave results will be apparent in their health; it is not improbable to suppose that this action might even result in fatalities.

VETERAN CANNOT BE HEARD. WHY NOT CHANGE PROCEDURE?

A further change should be made in the method of reducing the allowances and benefits given to service-connected cases of disability. In no instance should the veteran be penalized without the opportunity of presenting his side of the case in an attempt to establish once more the service-connected nature of his disability to the satisfaction of the Government. The Administration advises me the approved procedure does not contemplate affording the veteran or his representative a personal appearance. I earnestly hope that immediate provision will be made for hearings on all of these cases.

SERVICE-CONNECTED CASES NOT REDUCED BY 20 PERCENT BUT MORE OFTEN BY 60 TO 70 PERCENT

I have noted instances where veterans have been reduced in their allowances far more than the percentage specified in the Economy Act. This has been done by the Administration's revising the schedule of ratings of disability and at the same time paying a reduced allowance for each rating. The veteran is thus cut two ways, and the percentage of reduction in some cases under my personal observation will amount to as much as 70 percent. The intent of Congress, clearly shown in the act, should be followed by the Administration in this matter.

INJUSTICES MUST BE POINTED OUT AND REMEDIAL ACTION TAKEN

It is my intention to do all in my power to bring these injustices to the attention of the proper authorities here in order that remedial action can be taken at once. The present crisis is no less serious than that which confronted our Nation in 1917. The same high order of patriotism is needed now as was essential in those critical days. No citizens realize this more than the former service men. They have made sacrifices for the country before, and they are willing to make them again. They should not be called upon to suffer, however, and I hope and believe that the persons who are charged with the administration of the Economy Act should not cause them to do so.

VETERANS WITH SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITIES

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, sufficient cases of veterans with service-connected disability have now been reviewed so that we can begin to see how the Economy Act is actually going to operate. Fifteen regional offices have reviewed and analyzed a total of 14,227 cases.

Mr. Speaker, I want this record to show that of these cases receiving service-connected compensation of an average of $46 per month, service connection has been broken on 6,253, or 44 percent of them. Two percent, or 289, are getting the monthly statutory award of $20 for total and permanent disability; 7,427 are still on the rolls, but now, instead of $46 a month, they are receiving an average of $20 a month.

This means an actual average cut on these 14,227 cases of 75 percent.

Mr. Speaker, we will not even need the $65,000,000 which is carried for service-connected cases in the independent offices appropriation bill in place of the $221,000,000 previously carried.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand, from the statement made by the gentleman, that of these cases that have been reviewed, the service-connected disability men will get an average of only 25 percent of what they had received.

Mr. KVALE. The average is 25 percent. The gentleman is entirely correct.

THE RECORD

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the Chair to what I think should be a correction in the RECORD. I think the correction is necessary unless the RECORD is to carry a deception to the country. On page 3939 the RECORD states:

The Clerk read as follows:

Then included within the portion read by the Clerk are section 15 and subsections (a) and (b). They were not read by the Clerk. Thereby amendments were shut off. I think the RECORD should be corrected to speak the truth.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman held yesterday that the sections had been read. That is the only information the Chair has.

REGULATION OF BANKING

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5661) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 5661, the banking bill, with Mr. CANNON of Missouri in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday an amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] was pending.

Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the Boileau amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to explain the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered is to strike out section 24 of the bill, which appears on pages 30 and 31.

At the present time national-bank stock has what is known as the "double-liability feature." In other words, if a person has a thousand dollars' worth of stock and a bank fails or goes into the hands of a receiver to liquidate the bank there is an assessment of $1,000 against the owner of the stock. To my mind, that is a just and fair provision of the law. This section of the present bill would repeal that double-liability feature. If we vote in favor of my amendment it will leave the situation just as it is at the present time, leaving the double-liability feature so far as national banks are concerned.

Most of the States have this double-liability feature in connection with State-bank stock, and it would be unfair to those State banks which have that double-liability feature if we were to remove that feature from the national-bank stocks.

I believe this is not the proper time to further weaken the financial structure. I believe the depositors should have that additional guaranty, and I hope the Members will support my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 31 and noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 202. Section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 321-331; supp. VI, title 12, secs. 321-331), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"Each bank admitted to membership under this section shall obtain from each of its affiliates other than member banks and furnish to the Federal Reserve bank of its district and to the Federal Reserve Board not less than three reports during each year. Such reports shall be in such form as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the president or such other officer as may be designated by the board of directors of such affiliate to verify such reports, and shall disclose the information hereinafter provided for as of dates identical with those fixed by the Federal Reserve Board for reports of the condition of the affiliated member bank. Each such report of an affiliate shall be transmitted as herein provided at the same time as the corresponding report of the affiliated member bank, except that the Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, extend such time for good cause shown. Each such report shall contain such information as in the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such affiliate and such bank and to enable the Board to inform itself as to the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such bank. The reports of such affiliates shall be published by the bank under the same conditions as govern its own condition reports.

"Any such affiliated member bank may be required to obtain from any such affiliate such additional reports as in the opinion of its Federal Reserve bank or the Federal Reserve Board may be necessary in order to obtain a full and complete knowledge of the condition of the affiliated member bank. Such additional reports shall be transmitted to the Federal Reserve bank and the Federal Reserve Board and shall be in such form as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe.

"Any such affiliated member bank which fails to obtain from any of its affiliates and furnish any report provided for by the two preceding paragraphs of this section shall be subject to a penalty of $100 for each day during which such failure continues, which, by direction of the Federal Reserve Board, may be collected, by suit or otherwise, by the Federal Reserve bank of the district in which such member bank is located. For the purposes of this paragraph and the two preceding paragraphs of this section, the term 'affiliate' shall include holding company affiliates as well as other affiliates.

"State member banks shall be subject to the same limitations and conditions with respect to the purchasing, selling, underwriting, and holding of investment securities and stock as are applicable in the case of national banks under paragraph 'Seventh' of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended.

"After 2 years from the date of the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, no certificate representing the stock of any State member bank shall represent the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank, nor shall the ownership, sale, or transfer of any certificate representing the stock of any such bank be conditioned in any manner whatsoever upon the ownership, sale, or transfer of a certificate representing the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank.

"Each State member bank affiliated with a holding-company affiliate shall obtain from such holding-company affiliate, within such time as the Federal Reserve Board shall prescribe, an agreement that such holding-company affiliate shall be subject to the same conditions and limitations as are applicable under section 5144 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, in the case of holding-company affiliates of national banks. A copy of each such agreement shall be filed with the Federal Reserve Board. Upon the failure of a State member bank affiliated with a holding-company affiliate to obtain such an agreement within the time so prescribed, the Federal Reserve Board shall require such bank to surrender its stock in the Federal Reserve bank and to forfeit all rights and privileges of membership in the Federal Reserve System as provided in this section. Whenever the Federal Reserve Board shall have revoked the voting permit of any such holding-company affiliate, the Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, require any or all State member banks affiliated with such holding-company affiliate to surrender their stock in the Federal Reserve bank and to forfeit all rights and privileges of membership in the Federal Reserve System as provided in this section.

"In connection with examinations of State member banks, examiners selected or approved by the Federal Reserve Board shall make such examinations of the affairs of all affiliates of such banks as shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such banks and their affiliates and the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such banks. The expense of examination of affiliates of any State member bank may, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, be assessed against such bank and when so assessed shall be paid by such bank. In the event of the refusal to give any information requested in the course of the examination of any such affiliate, or in the event of the refusal to permit such examination, or in the event of the refusal to pay any expense so assessed, the Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, require any or all State member banks affiliated with such affiliate to surrender their stock in the Federal Reserve bank and to forfeit all rights and privileges of membership in the Federal Reserve System as provided in this section."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency to explain what effect this section which has just been read will have upon a group system of banks, where a holding company owns three or four banks in a State. Will it be necessary for the banks affiliated in this group to become separate institutions, or can they continue to operate under the group system?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is not anything that prevents their continued operation.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Then what is the effect of this section on them? If the different elements of a group are separate members of the Federal Reserve System, as I understand it, they lose their vote?

Mr. STEAGALL. It regulates their right to vote and limits the vote, but it does not in any way interfere with their operation.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Is there any change in this act as to their rights to become branches?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is not anything in this section, nor in this bill, that deals with branch banks, except in one trivial manner, namely, that State banks having branches and joining the Federal Reserve System may continue to operate their branches if a national bank in the same territory or city is permitted to continue to operate. There will be so few occurrences of that kind that it is not regarded as of any importance.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 33, line 21, after the word "after", strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard very briefly on the amendment to substitute the word "one" for the word "two" in line 21 on page 33.

You are familiar with the fact that this section provides for the divorcing of affiliates from national banks, and 2 years is provided to accomplish that end. In the first bill that was introduced in the last Congress, as I understand, 5 years were provided in which to accomplish this divorcement. The present bill recites 2 years, but I submit some reasons why I believe 1 year is ample.

In the first place it occurs to me that 1 year is sufficient for any bank to get its house in order. In the second place, I think the gentlemen on the Democratic side anticipate we are going to have a boom season one of these days. We are at least hoping so. We hope there will be an upturn in all forms of markets and industrial and commercial enterprises, and if that upturn should come within the space of a year, and we provide 2 years for the divorcement of the affiliates from banks, it still gives them an additional year in such a new lush, boom period in which to connive and operate to the detriment of the investors of the country.

The third reason I submit for the change from 2 years to 1 year is this: The distinguished Senator from Virginia, former Secretary of the Treasury, only a few days ago expressed and uttered the hope in the Senate of the United States that perhaps the body at this end of the Capitol would reduce the 2-year period to 1 year. I do not believe any more conclusive or cogent logic is necessary to show the advisability of reducing that period.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I think we are all agreed in purpose. We are agreed as to the desirability of remedying of what is generally regarded as a serious evil. The only question is the manner in which we shall go about the task. The Senate has considered this provision and discussed it at great length, and it has been agreed among those who have given most thought to this provision and who are responsible for its origin, that in the present condition of the country and the existing disturbance in economic affairs, reasonable time should be allowed for bringing about this reform.

I think perhaps if I had been asked to draw this section I should have agreed with my friend in the thought he has. I should probably have written it 1 year, but having heard the matter discussed as I have and having witnessed developments in the centers where the evil at which this section is aimed exists, I am convinced no harm will result in giving 2 years to bring about this reform.

We need not be unduly hard. We just want to clean up and straighten up if we can. I can understand how in some communities there might be a division of interests, commercial, industrial, and agricultural between two banks. Half the interests of the community would gather around one institution, a State bank having an affiliate. Across the street is a national bank of similar size serving the other half of the community. Everybody is satisfied in both cases. We have instances like this.

To call upon one of those institutions at this time to put this into effect might result in some instances in hardship and in cases where there never has been criticism against the operation of these institutions.

So, in order to be scrupulously fair and considerate we thought 2 years should be allowed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. For the benefit of the House I want to read from the RECORD of May 19, about four sentences. Senator GLASS in debating this section said:

We have modified that provision of the bill, however, changing it from 5 years to 2 years rather with the expectation, if not the confident hope that the other branch of Congress, or the Senate, may reduce it to 1 year.

I submit this simply for the purpose of showing what has been taking place in the other body and their probable attitude toward it.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am aware of the attitude of the Senator to whom the gentleman refers.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 45, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 203. The Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting between sections 23 and 24 thereof (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 64 and 371; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 371) the following new section:

"Sec. 23A. No member bank shall (1) make any loan or any extension of credit to, or purchase securities under repurchase agreement from, any of its affiliates, or (2) invest any of its funds in the capital stock, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations of any such affiliate, or (3) accept the capital stock, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations of any such affiliate as collateral security for advances made to any person, partnership, association, or corporation, if, in the case of any such affiliate, the aggregate amount of such loans, extensions of credit, repurchase agreements, investments, and advances against such collateral security will exceed 10 percent of the capital stock and surplus of such member bank, or if, in the case of all such affiliates, the aggregate amount of such loans, extensions of credits, repurchase agreements, investments, and advances against such collateral security will exceed 20 percent of the capital stock and surplus of such member bank.

"Within the foregoing limitations, each loan or extension of credit of any kind or character to an affiliate shall be secured by collateral in the form of stocks, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations having a market value at the time of making the loan or extension of credit of at least 20 percent more than the amount of the loan or extension of credit, or of at least 10 percent more than the amount of the loan or extension of credit if it is secured by obligations of any State, or of any political subdivision or agency thereof: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to loans or extensions of credit secured by obligations of the United States Government, the Federal intermediate credit banks, or the Federal land banks, or by such notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or bankers' acceptances as are eligible for rediscount or for purchase by Federal Reserve banks. A loan or extension of credit to a director officer, clerk, or other employee or any representative of any such affiliate shall be deemed a loan to the affiliate to the extent that the proceeds of such loan are used for the benefit of, or transferred to, the affiliate.

"For the purposes of this section the term 'affiliate' shall include holding company affiliates as well as other affiliates, and the provisions of this section shall not apply to any affiliate (1) engaged solely in holding the bank premises of the member bank with which it is affiliated, (2) engaged solely in conducting a safe-deposit business or the business of an agricultural credit corporation or livestock loan company, (3) in the capital stock of which a national banking association is authorized to invest pursuant to section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, or (4) organized under section 25 (a) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended; but as to any such affiliate, member banks shall continue to be subject to other provisions of law applicable to loans by such banks and investments by such banks in stocks, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise only to call attention to a provision which advertently or inadvertently was left out of the next section on page 38, so-called "section 5144", of the House bill.

I have examined the companion bill in the Senate, S. 1631, and I find that this section provides for what is known as cumulative voting for directors of banks.

I shall not offer an amendment, but I do hope the leaders of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the House, and the conferees thereof, having received notice of the fact that at least one Member is anxious to have the bill in the House conform to that in the Senate, will provide for cumulative voting for bank directors in the conference report of both Houses. Indeed, Chairman STEAGALL said he reviewed the matter with great favor and pledged support to have it inserted. In the light of that pledge I shall not embarrass the committee now and press an appropriate amendment.

I rise at this time to point out what cumulative voting is. You will find that in most corporations, usually nonbanking corporations, provision is always made, or ought to be made, in charters for cumulative voting so that minority interests shall have a voice in the management and operation of the corporate entity.

There are some very flagrant situations arising in various banking institutions where substantial, large minority interests are kept out in the cold, have no voice whatsoever in the management of the bank. In one particular instance in New York City, of which I have actual knowledge, there are some 5,000,000 shares of stock outstanding. It concerns one of the largest banks in the world. One individual controls about 10 percent of that entire stock, and through another entity controls another 10 percent. So we might say that gentleman—and, incidentally, he is a very upright, honest, righteous, and efficient banker—himself controls about 20 percent of the stock of this very large institution; but the persons in majority control thereof, freeze him out, and refuse to let him have anything to do or say in connection with the operation of this bank. This bank lost a vast sum of money. One of its officials is on trial in New York today for utter disregard and violation of income-tax laws. He has offended in many other respects. He never was a respecter of law or persons. Had this man controlling this 20 percent of stock been on the board—and he would have been on the board had there been cumulative voting—he would have prevented many of the excesses, many of the abuses, much of the malfeasance and misfeasance that occurred in that bank by its officers.

He would have been in the nature of a brake upon the wild and extravagant practices of that institution in New York; and I do now implore that the Members give some consideration, as the Senate has, at least in its Banking and Currency Committee, to the principle of cumulative voting for directors of banks. So that, for example, if anyone here had, say, 30 shares of stock in a bank, and there were 10 directors to be voted for, he then would have the equivalent of 300 votes. The number of shares is multiplied by the number of directors to be voted for. These votes can be concentrated on one or more directors. So in this way the minority can have at least a chance for their "white alley." As it is today, in these large banks and in many smaller ones, a small coterie cabal together keep out the minority, and, if there are wise counsels and prudence in the minority, the stockholders of the institution and the depositors thereof never get the benefit of such wise counsel and such prudence.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday when section 21 was being discussed, page 28 of the bill, I sought by amendment to reduce the requirements for directors, as to holdings of stock, from $2,000 to $1,000.

We were told at that time by members of the committee—and I know the misinformation was not intentional—that the present law provided for a minimum of $1,000, and that they saw fit, for good and valid reasons, to lift the requirement to $2,000.

I have looked up the law, and I find that title XII, section 72, of the code places requirements upon directors as follows:

Every director must own in his own right at least 10 shares of the capital stock of the association of which he is a director, unless the capital of the bank shall not exceed $25,000, in which case he must own in his own right at least five shares of such capital stock.

In other words, instead of a requirement of $2,000 worth of stock, the present law requires each director of the $25,000 bank to have $500 worth of stock.

Now, I envision the many business men, professional men, retired farmers, and others, as I said yesterday, who make up the directorates of these small banks.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, if this bill goes through in its present form, there will be no more of these $25,000 banks. They will all be at least $50,000.

Mr. KVALE. That is true, but that applies to banks that are going to be organized in the future, and does not apply to banks that already exist.

If it is the intention of the bill, if it is the intention of the committee, if it is the intention of the leaders to kill off all the $25,000 banks that now exist, in addition to preventing their organization in the future, let us say so and let us understand that now, because that is exactly what will happen unless unanimous consent is given to return to this particular section and modify this requirement.

You cannot find enough men in these towns of under 6,000 population to make up a board of directors with men who have $2,000 blocks of stock. Common sense will tell this to every member of the committee here, and I hope the committee will permit us to return and reduce the figure, or, preferably, to leave the law as it is now written.

It is just as ridiculous to require a small bank to live up to this requirement as it would be to say that every director of every bank, regardless of its size, should own 3 percent of the capital stock. Think what such a provision would mean if you applied such a provision to the $100,000,000 banks, and yet that would be no more unfair than the provision to which I am calling your attention.

Common sense seems to me to warrant the request, and I hope it may be granted, so that we can return to section 21 for the purpose of offering and considering such an amendment. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I do now ask unanimous consent to return to section 21 of the bill for the purpose of offering the amendment suggested.

Mr. BYRNS. May I ask the gentleman to withhold that request until after the reading of the bill is completed? I am sure the gentleman can then be accommodated.

Mr. KVALE. Then I withdraw the request for the present, Mr. Chairman.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Page 37, line 3, after the word "banks" where it first appears, strike out the word "or" and insert after the word "banks" as it secondly appears the words "or any other Federal corporation."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to secure that the securities of the Federal Mortgage Corporation that we are in process of creating, shall be put on a level with those of the Federal farm banks.

This change was made in committee on the previous page and the insertion of it at this place was overlooked. I am sure there is no opposition to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 204. Section 5144 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 61), is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5144. In all elections of directors and in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders each shareholder shall be entitled to 1 vote on each share of stock held by him; except (1) that shares of its own stock held by a national bank as sole trustee shall not be voted, and shares of its own stock held by a national bank and one or more persons as trustees may be voted by such other person or persons, as trustees, in the same manner as if he or they were the sole trustee, and (2) shares controlled by any holding company affiliate of a national bank shall not be voted unless such holding company affiliate shall have first obtained a voting permit as hereinafter provided, which permit is in force at the time such shares are voted. Shareholders may vote by proxies duly authorized in writing; but no officer, clerk, teller, or bookkeeper of such bank shall act as proxy; and no shareholder whose liability is past due and unpaid shall be allowed to vote.

"For the purposes of this section shares shall be deemed to be controlled by a holding company affiliate if they are owned or controlled directly or indirectly by such holding company affiliate or held by any trustee for the benefit of the shareholders or members thereof.

"Any such holding company affiliate may make application to the Federal Reserve Board for a voting permit entitling it to cast 1 vote at all elections of directors and in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders of such bank on each share of stock controlled by it or authorizing the trustee or trustees holding the stock for its benefit or for the benefit of its shareholders so to vote the same. The Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, grant or withhold such permit as the public interest may require. In acting upon such application, the Board shall consider the financial condition of the applicant, the general character of its management, and the probable effect of the granting of such permit upon the affairs of such bank, but no such permit shall be granted except upon the following conditions:

"(a) Every such holding company affiliate shall, in making the application for such permit, agree (1) to receive, on dates identical with those fixed for the examination of banks with which it is affiliated, examiners duly authorized to examine such banks, who shall make such examinations of such holding company affiliate as shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such banks and such holding company affiliate and the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such banks, such examinations to be at the expense of the holding company affiliate so examined; (2) that the reports of such examiners shall contain such information as shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such affiliate and such banks and the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such banks; (3) that such examiners may examine each bank owned or controlled by the holding company affiliate, both individually and in conjunction with other banks owned or controlled by such holding company affiliate; and (4) that publication of individual or consolidated statements of condition of such banks may be required;

"(b) After 5 years after the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, every such holding company affiliate (1) shall possess, and shall continue to possess during the life of such permit, free and clear of any lien, pledge, or hypothecation of any nature, readily marketable assets other than bank stock in an amount not less than 12 percent of the aggregate par value of all bank stocks controlled by such holding company affiliate, which amount shall be increased by not less than 2 percent per annum of such aggregate par value until such assets shall amount to 25 percent of the aggregate par value of such bank stocks; and (2) shall reinvest in readily marketable assets other than bank stock all net earnings over and above 6 percent per annum on the book value of its own shares outstanding until such assets shall amount to such 25 percent of the aggregate par value of all bank stocks controlled by it;

"(c) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, after 5 years after the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, (1) any such holding company affiliate the shareholders or members of which shall be individually and severally liable in proportion to the number of shares of such holding company affiliate held by them, respectively, in addition to amounts invested therein, for all statutory liability imposed on such holding company affiliate by reason of its control of shares of stock of banks, shall be required only to establish and maintain out of net earnings over and above 6 percent per annum on the book value of its own shares outstanding a reserve of readily marketable assets in an amount not less than 12 percent of the aggregate par value of bank stocks controlled by it, and (2) the assets required by this section to be possessed by such holding company affiliate may be used by it for replacement of capital in banks affiliated with it and for losses incurred in such banks, but any deficiency in such assets resulting from such use shall be made up within such period as the Federal Reserve Board may by regulation prescribe;

"(d) Every officer, director, agent, and employee of every such holding company affiliate shall be subject to the same penalties for false entries in any book, report, or statement of such holding company affiliate as are applicable to officers, directors, agents, and employees of member banks under section 5209 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; and

"(e) Every such holding company affiliate shall, in its application for such voting permit, (1) show that it does not own, control, or have any interest in, and is not participating in the management or direction of, any corporation, business trust, association, or other similar organization formed for the purpose of, or engaged principally in, the issue, flotation, underwriting, public sale, or distribution, at wholesale or retail or through syndicate participation, of stocks, bonds, debentures, notes, or other securities of any sort (hereinafter referred to as 'securities company'); (2) agree that during the period that the permit remains in force it will not acquire any ownership, control, or interest in any such securities company or participate in the management or direction thereof; (3) agree that if, at the time of filing the application for such permit, it owns, controls, or has an interest in, or is participating in the management or direction of, any such securities company, it will, within 5 years after the filing of such application, divest itself of its ownership, control, and interest in such securities company and will cease participating in the management or direction thereof, and will not thereafter, during the period that the permit remains in force, acquire any further ownership, control, or interest in any such securities company or participate in the management or direction thereof; and (4) agree that thenceforth it will declare dividends only out of actual net earnings.

"If at any time it shall appear to the Federal Reserve Board that any holding company affiliate has violated any of the provisions of the Banking Act of 1933 or of any agreement made pursuant to this section, the Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, revoke any such voting permit after giving 60 days' notice by registered mail of its intention to the holding company affiliate and affording it an opportunity to be heard. Whenever the Federal Reserve Board shall have revoked any such voting permit, no national bank whose stock is controlled by the holding company affiliate whose permit is so revoked shall receive deposits of public moneys of the United States, nor shall any such national bank pay any further dividend to such holding company affiliate upon any shares of such bank controlled by such holding company affiliate.

"Whenever the Federal Reserve Board shall have revoked any voting permit as hereinbefore provided, the rights, privileges, and franchises of any or all national banks the stock of which is controlled by such holding company affiliate shall, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, be subject to forfeiture in accordance with section 2 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended."

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of getting an opinion of those in charge of the bill whether my contention is right or not. I came to the conclusion in reading the bill that in order for a State bank to come under the operation of this bill it will have to have a capital stock of $25,000 or more. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether my contention is correct or not.

On page 23 is a paragraph, which says that—

No applying bank shall be admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve bank unless it possesses a paid-up, unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provisions of the National Bank Act as amended.

Now, I have the National Bank Act here, and it provides in relation of the conversion of State banks into national banks.

It reads as follows:

Sec. 5154. Any bank incorporated by special law of any State, or of the United States, or organized general laws of any State, or of the United States, and having an unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association under the provisions of the existing laws may, by the vote of the shareholders owning not less than 51 percent of the capital stock of such bank or banking association, with the approval of the Comtroller of the Currency, be converted into a national banking association, with any name approved by the Comptroller of the Currency.

Under that same act, section 217, provides:

No national banking association shall be organized with a less capital than $100,000, except that such association with a capital of not less than $50,000 may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be organized in any place the population of which does not exceed 6,000 inhabitants, and except that such association with a capital of not less than $25,000 may, with the sanction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be organized in any place the population of which does not exceed 3,000 inhabitants.

So my contention is that under the National Banking Act a national bank must have $25,000 capital or more in places where there is a population of less than 3,000 people and a State bank to become a national bank must have the same capital.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It is true that no State bank can become a member of the Federal Reserve System unless it has a minimum amount of capital stock.

Mr. ARENS. That is $25,000.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes; but that is not true as far as the insurance provision of this bill is concerned. There is no prescribed capital a State bank shall have in order to be admitted to the insurance fund.

Mr. ARENS. It says that it must have the same capital as a national bank.

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no prescribed amount of capital in the bill which a bank is required to have to become a member of this insurance fund.

Mr. ARENS. I think according to the bill it must have $25,000, at least.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is mistaken.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It was my understanding that in order to become eligible to participate in the insurance fund they had to qualify under the Federal Reserve Act.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is a mistake.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 205. After 2 years from the date of the enactment of this act, no member bank shall be affiliated in any manner described in section 1 (b) of this title with any corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization engaged principally in the issue, flotation, underwriting, public sale, or distribution at wholesale or retail or through syndicate participation of stocks, bonds, debentures, notes, or other securities.

For every violation of this section the member bank involved shall be subject to a penalty not exceeding $1,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues. Such penalty may be assessed by the Federal Reserve Board, in its discretion, and, when so assessed, may be collected by the Federal Reserve bank by suit or otherwise.

If any such violation shall continue for 6 calendar months after the member bank shall have been warned by the Federal Reserve Board to discontinue the same, (a) in the case of a national bank, all the rights, privileges, and franchises granted to it under the National Bank Act may be forfeited in the manner prescribed in section 2 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, or, (b) in the case of a State member bank, all of its rights and privileges of membership in the Federal Reserve System may be forfeited in the manner prescribed in section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FISH: Page 44, line 1, after the word "after", strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear some discussion of the reason why these security affiliates should be permitted 2 years in which to divorce themselves from national banks. My amendment eliminates the word "two" and substitutes the word "one", so as to compel them to be separated in 1 year. I am not sure but 1 year is more than sufficient. Perhaps 90 days would be better. According to my way of thinking, the Congress should have acted a number of years ago and passed legislation to prohibit national banks from having these security affiliates. Why should we now give them 2 years to divorce themselves from the national banks? I can remember back in 1928 and 1929, during the boom times, when these bank presidents, Mr. Charles Mitchell, of the National City Bank, and Mr. Wiggin, of the Chase National Bank, which are the two worst offenders, as far as affiliates are concerned, said to the Congress, "We don't want any interference with business by the Congress; we know how to handle our own business and we want to be left alone." The only fault that I find with Congress as I look back is that we listened to this call from the big business men, Mitchell and Wiggin and others in Wall Street, and let business alone. They got us into this inflation largely through these security affiliates connected with the big banks. The banker, instead of looking after the deposits of his own depositors, was paying more attention to the security affiliate, where he got his money from. Only in the last year we found out that Charlie Mitchell, of the National City Bank, obtained in 1 year $3,000,000, whereas his pay as bank president was $100,000 a year.

Probably the same thing applied to the other banks, particularly to the Chase National Bank and to Mr. Wiggin. Those were the men who said to Congress at that time that there must be no interference with business. No wonder when these two bank presidents were making enormous profits for themselves largely at the expense of their depositors. All the time they were saying to their depositors, "You have got money in our banks, and you ought to take it out of our banks and invest it. We will sell you some foreign bonds, some A B C bonds, some South American bonds." The depositors would reply that they did not know anything about the bonds and the bank presidents, and their associates would then advise them that these bonds pay 7 and 8 percent, and would say, "Don't leave your money idle in our banks, you should take it out and invest in these bonds." When the depositor again said that he did not know anything about the bonds the bankers said, "Of course our bank is behind them, and that is enough, for we have investigated them", and then the depositor took his money out and he bought Argentine, Chile, and Brazilian bonds paying 7 and 8 percent, and, of course, the commissions went to the presidents of those banks and their associates. Those security affiliates did more harm in promoting the inflation and the resulting deflation that caused the financial ruin of hundreds of thousands of bank depositors than any other agency in America. So why should we give them 2 years more to divorce themselves from national banks and to carry on this unethical and vicious practice in case of better times and renewal of investment activity.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I am sorry, but I have only 5 minutes. There is nothing new about this depression, as far as the principle involved. It is exactly the same as any other. There was an enormous inflation brought about because of the mass overproduction of stocks, bonds, and other securities largely emanating from these affiliates, which were sold to the American people often without much investigation, and as a result it meant a mass overproduction of factories, commodities, real estate, and everything else—an enormous inflation that sooner or later had to crash, and when it did crash and the pendulum swung back, it did not stop at normalcy but went right on down into the depths where we are now. I do not indict the big bankers alone. The American people were also responsible. They went into an orgy of gambling and speculating and extravagance. But the big business and banking leadership was at fault. These international bankers and the biggest bankers in America were making all kinds of money. They naturally said that they did not want interference from Congress. They wanted to grab off all the money they could while the going was good, regardless of consequences to their depositors or anyone else. The Congress should have acted long before this to protect the American public. We should have told the big bankers long ago to get rid of these affiliates, and should not permit them now more than 1 year to put an end to their security affiliates. I think this amendment should be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 44, noes 64.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. STEAGALL and Mr. FISH to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 64 and noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

SEC. 301. (a) There is hereby created a Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "Corporation"), whose duty it shall be to purchase, hold, and liquidate as hereinafter provided the assets of national banks which have been closed by action of the Comptroller of the Currency, or by vote of their directors, and the assets of State member banks, and to make loans to State banks and trust companies as hereinafter provided, which have been closed by action of the appropriate State authorities, or by vote of their directors.

(b) The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors, consisting of 5 members, 1 of whom shall be the Comptroller of the Currency, 1 a member of the Federal Reserve Board designated by the Board for the purpose, and 3 citizens of the United States appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold their offices during a term of 6 years. Not more than two of the appointive members of the board shall be members of the same political party. The terms of the appointive members first appointed shall be for 2, 4, and 6 years, as designated by the President. The appointive members of the board shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, payable monthly out of the funds of the Corporation, but no other member of the board shall receive additional compensation for service as a member.

(c) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000,000, which shall be available for payment by the Secretary of the Treasury for capital stock of the Corporation in an equal amount, which shall be subscribed for by him on behalf of the United States. Payments upon such subscription shall be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors of the Corporation. Such stock shall be in addition to the amount of capital stock required to be subscribed for by Federal Reserve banks and member and nonmember banks as hereinafter provided and the United States shall be entitled to the payment of dividends on such stock to the same extent as member and nonmember banks are entitled to such payment on the class A stock of the Corporation held by them. Receipts for payments by the United States for or on account of such stock shall be issued by the Corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States.

(d) The capital stock of the Corporation shall be divided into shares of $100 each. Certificates of stock of the Corporation shall be of two classes, class A and class B. Class A stock shall be held by member and nonmember banks only and they shall be entitled to payment of dividends out of net earnings at the rate of 6 percent per annum on the capital stock paid in by them, which dividends shall be cumulative, or to the extent of 30 percent of such net earnings in any one year, whichever amount shall be the greater, but such stock shall have no vote at meetings of stockholders. Class B stock shall be held by Federal Reserve banks only and shall not be entitled to the payment of dividends. Every Federal Reserve bank shall subscribe to shares of class B stock in the Corporation to an amount equal to one half of the surplus of such bank on January 1, 1933, and its subscriptions shall be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Corporation in an amount equal to one half of such subscription. The remainder of such subscription shall be subject to call from time to time by the board of directors upon 90 days' notice.

(e) Every member bank shall subscribe to the class A capital stock of the Corporation in an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of its total net outstanding time and demand deposits on January 1, 1933, as computed in accordance with regulations of the Federal Reserve Board governing the computation of reserves. One half of such subscription shall be paid in full within 90 days after receipt of notice from the chairman of the board of directors of the Corporation, and the remainder of such subscription shall be subject to call from time to time by the board of directors of the Corporation.

(f) The amount of the outstanding class A stock of the Corporation held by member banks shall be annually adjusted as hereinafter provided as of the last preceding call date as member banks increase their time and demand deposits or as additional banks become members, or subscribe to the stock of the Corporation, and such stock may be decreased in amount as member banks reduce their time and demand deposits or cease to be members. Shares of the capital stock of the Corporation owned by member banks shall not be transferred or hypothecated. When a member bank increases its time and demand deposits it shall, at the beginning of each calendar year, subscribe for an additional amount of capital stock of the Corporation equal to one half of 1 percent of such increase in deposits. One half of the amount of such additional stock shall be paid for at the time of the subscription therefor and the balance shall be subject to call by the board of directors of the Corporation. A bank admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System at any time after the organization of the Corporation shall be required to subscribe for an amount of class A capital stock equal to one half of 1 percent of the time and demand deposits of the applicant bank as of the date of such admission, paying therefor its par value plus one half of 1 percent a month from the period of the last dividend on the class A stock of the Corporation. When a member bank reduces its time and demand deposits it shall surrender, not later than the 1st day of January thereafter, a proportionate amount of its holdings in the capital stock of the Corporation, and when a member bank voluntarily liquidates it shall surrender all its holdings of the capital stock of the Corporation and be released from its stock subscription not previously called. The shares so surrendered shall be canceled and the member bank shall receive in payment therefor, under regulations to be prescribed by the Board, a sum equal to its cash-paid subscriptions on the shares surrendered and its proportionate share of dividends not to exceed one half of 1 percent a month, from the period of the last dividend on such stock, less any liability of such member bank to the Corporation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: On page 49, in line 20, after the word "President", insert "one of whom selected by the vote of the three shall be chairman of the Corporation."

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, that amendment was adopted by the Committee on Banking and Currency, but through inadvertence of the clerk it was not inserted in the new bill as it was introduced.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: On page 49, in line 17, after the word "Currency", strike out the following language in lines 17, 18, and 19: "one a member of the Federal Reserve Board designated by the Board for the purpose, and three citizens of the United States appointed by the President" and insert the following: "and four citizens of the United States appointed by the President."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would not oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, and I should like to have that adopted first, and then offer my amendment as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is not a substitute at all.

Mr. McFADDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question. The usual provisions in the Federal Reserve Act or other pieces of legislation which have been enacted provided that a choice should be made between the two political parties.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is provided in this bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. STEAGALL. As to the 3 members appointed by the President, not more than 2 shall be of the same political party.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute amendment offered by the gentleman is not in order at this time.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: On page 49, line 17, after the word "Currency", strike out the following language: "one a member of the Federal Reserve Board designated by the Board for the purpose, and three citizens of the United States appointed by the President" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and four citizens of the United States appointed by the President."

THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the amendment.

This is a board set up for the purpose of determining who will be permitted to take advantage of this law. There are 6,000 national banks and 12,000 State banks in this country. It occurs to me that this board should be a fair board, one that would administer the law fairly and impartially. It should not be composed of representatives of the State banks, neither should it be composed of representatives of the Federal Reserve banks. It should be composed of citizens of the United States who are not directly interested in either State or National banks. If the bill is passed as proposed by the committee, the set-up of 5 members will be 2 members of the Federal Reserve Board, another member of the opposite party, and 2 of the party in power. So if a State bank comes before members of that board asking for admission there will probably be 2 votes on the board immediately influenced against their admission. In other words, the committee did not intend it, but it looks very much like a stacked board. I do not say that to reflect on the committee. I do not impugn their motives. I have the utmost confidence in those gentlemen, and I know they do not propose it to be a stacked board, but nevertheless, 2 members of the 5 will be particularly interested in Federal Reserve banks and naturally will be opposed to State banks coming into the system.

May I suggest that unless this law is fixed in some way so that it will be administered in a manner that is lenient toward State banks, it is likely to cause at least five or six thousand State banks in this country to fail.

SQUARE DEAL FOR STATE BANKS

I say it is not fair for every national bank and every member bank of the Federal Reserve to automatically come within the terms of this law, without so much effort as the turning of a hand. Every one of them will automatically come in, whereas the State banks are excluded and will have to pass an examination and submit themselves to this board, which I say is somewhat of a stacked board. Unless they can convince that board they will have no opportunity to come in. So we certainly should have a fair board, and if the board is arranged as I want it we will have the Comptroller of the Currency as a member of the board. He is also a member of the Federal Reserve Board. We will have a representative of the Federal Reserve Board on the board, as I propose it. Then the President can appoint four other citizens of the United States. They should not be directly interested in the Federal Reserve System nor in the State banking system, but in a position to fairly and impartially pass upon the facts as presented to them.

I hope this amendment will be adopted.

There is a good reason why this should be done. This is an insurance corporation guaranteeing the deposits in banks. Ordinarily, if you insure your own property, you pay the insurance premium. Ordinarily any corporation that insures its own property will pay the insurance premium, but in this case two thirds of the insurance premium is paid by the Government of the United States and the other one third is paid by the banks participating.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose in the preparation of this provision to safeguard State non-member banks against any possible discrimination by the board administering the deposit insurance corporation. Of course, there are differences of view at this point. It was my thought that we should give recognition to the Federal Reserve System by having a member of the Federal Reserve Board serve on the insurance deposit corporation board, and that it was necessary and wise to have the Comptroller of the Currency serve on the board, not because he happens to be an ex-officio member of the Federal Reserve Board but because he is Comptroller of the Currency and possesses a vast store of information that would be useful in the administration of the deposit guaranty corporation.

The provision of the bill is for three members to be appointed by the President—citizens to represent all public interests involved. Now, I had no thought whatsoever of politics in writing that provision in this bill except that in a hurried manner I did attempt to provide for political division so that the minority party would not get an unfair deal. For that reason provision is made for the appointing of three members, not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party.

The gentleman is quite correct when he says the board will be made up of two members of the Federal Reserve Board and one Republican, but if his amendment is adopted there will be two Republicans instead of one.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not saying that there is anything destructive in that or that it is unfair or hurtful. I merely call his attention to what his amendment would accomplish, since he seems to attach importance to the political complexion of the board.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I have another amendment, providing that not more than three shall be of one political party. So we can change it if the gentleman desires, if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. ARENS. Could not the other member be appointed from the Farmer-Laborite Party? That would be the proper way to construe it.

Mr. STEAGALL. After all, Mr. Chairman, this is not a seriously controversial matter. I simply desired to explain the amendment and let the Committee understand just what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STOKES: Page 51, line 12, strike out the word "not", and in line 13, after the word "dividends", insert "to the same extent as the member banks."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, there will be no objection on the part of the committee to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. PATMAN. Is this the amendment dealing with dividends to Federal Reserve banks?

Mr. STOKES. It is.

Mr. PATMAN. That they shall be paid dividends on the amount of money—

Mr. STOKES. I will explain it to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I want to rise in opposition to this amendment. I did not know this amendment was up for consideration.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely permits Federal Reserve banks to receive the same amount of dividends which the member banks and the Treasury Department will receive on their stock subscriptions. This is only fair.

The Federal Reserve banks are the fundamental basis of our whole banking system and we do not want to weaken them in any way. The Federal Reserve Bank of the City of Philadelphia, whence I come, has a surplus of $29,000,000. Of this surplus it must take, under the provisions of this bill, $14,500,000, or one half, to be advanced toward this guaranty fund. At the present time it is receiving an income on this $14,500,000. According to the provisions of this bill, this money would be invested in this stock and no dividends would be received thereon. My amendment merely authorizes them to receive the same dividends as the Treasury Department and as the member banks, which I think will be agreed is only fair and just.

FEDERAL RESERVE NOT ENTITLED DIVIDENDS ON SURPLUS FUNDS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The way this fund is made up is in the first place by a contribution of $150,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States. The other $150,000,000 is taken from the Federal Reserve funds and Federal Reserve banks. The remainder of the $150,000,000 is taken from the depositors by levying an assessment of one half of 1 percent against their deposits. There is no question but that the Government is entitled to 6-percent dividends on the part it appropriates directly from the Treasury.

NOT FEDERAL RESERVE FUNDS

The member banks which subscribe to the $150,000,000 are also entitled to 6-percent dividends. That will be the law, and it is right.

But now the gentleman comes in and wants the Federal Reserve banks to have a 6-percent dividend on money that they do not own, are not entitled to, and which the House yesterday said they should not receive. That is not the Federal Reserve banks' money.

Why give the Federal Reserve banks a dividend on money they are not entitled to receive? It is not their money. It belongs to the Government. That is in the Reserve fund, a surplus fund that the law says does not belong to the Federal Reserve banks, but belongs to the people of the United States. That is what it says.

CONVINCING EXAMPLE

Now, in order to convince absolutely the gentleman, suppose a member bank decides to withdraw from the System. It can get the amount of capital stock that it pays in, but it does not get a penny of the surplus. Why? Because this surplus does not belong to the Federal Reserve bank. This surplus belongs to the people. It is written into the law. There cannot be any mistake about it when it is written into the law itself.

Another convincing example is that in the event a Federal Reserve bank is liquidated, voluntarily or otherwise, after the creditors are paid, the law says that the remainder, the surplus, shall go into the Treasury of the United States. Why should it not go to the member banks, if the gentleman is correct in his statement that it belongs to them? No. Everywhere throughout this bill it is written in coal-black letters that this surplus does not belong to the Federal Reserve banks. They are not entitled to it. It belongs to the Treasury of the United States; and certainly the gentleman would not have the Government, or this insurance corporation, pay dividends on money the Federal Reserve banks do not own and are not entitled to receive.

SECTION 3 OF PRESENT BILL

On yesterday the committee agreed to strike out of this bill section 3. I offered the amendment, and it was accepted. Section 3 attempted to give these surplus earnings to the Federal Reserve banks, but we made such a hard fight on it I think we convinced the committee that the Federal Reserve banks are not entitled to this surplus. Now, are we here today, just 1 day later, going to turn around and say that although they are not entitled to the surplus, we are going to give them a 6-percent dividend on an investment paid out of that surplus? It is unreasonable. I cannot see why the gentleman would even argue that the Federal Reserve banks are entitled to it. The amount of money that the member banks put up they will get dividends on, and the amount of money that the Government puts up the Government will get dividends on, and this money, really, the Government of the United States should get dividends on instead of the Federal Reserve banks; and I respectfully submit that this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not regard this amendment as in any sense vital to this legislation.

This is the situation. The present law provides that the 12 Federal Reserve banks shall set aside in a surplus fund all their net earnings until the fund equals the amount of its subscribed capital stock. This amount they have on hand. They paid this year into the Treasury something over $2,000,000, as I remember.

The bill provides that the amount of one half of the surplus of the 12 Federal Reserve banks shall be subscribed by the Federal Reserve banks for stock in the deposit insurance corporation. Originally the bill was drawn so as to omit the Federal Reserve stock from the provision which permits the payment of dividends on stock in the deposit insurance corporation. This was done because of the fact that we formerly provided that hereafter all the earnings of the Federal Reserve banks should go into a surplus fund, leaving nothing for the Treasury. At the instance of gentlemen who opposed this, and without the slightest violence to my own feeling about the matter—and to be frank about it, without the slightest effect whatever on the practical results—I agreed to this amendment and it was adopted.

I may say, in passing, that at the rate which the 12 Federal Reserve banks are now earning profits under existing law, it will be sometime before there will be anything left for the Treasury, but having taken half of the surplus of the Federal Reserve banks which they were permitted to accumulate under unqualified, lawful authority, having taken away their surplus, I do not think it is unreasonable or destructive to permit them to share in the earnings of the deposit insurance corporation and receive dividends on the amount of the stock invested by them if, happily, we are to have substantial dividends to the stockholders of the deposit insurance corporation.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. PATMAN. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that if the Federal Reserve member banks had paid their 6-percent assessment or had paid in the amount they are required under the law to subscribe, they would now have $321,000,000 capital stock instead of $160,500,000, and this surplus would not be needed at all, and the only reason they ask that this surplus that has been accumulated be arrested or captured before it gets to the Treasury is that they have not paid in the other half of their capital stock and they are using the Government's money to take its place?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman that I have never believed that the Federal Reserve banks needed the entire amount of surplus they have been permitted to acquire. I may say to my friend that for 10 years I have introduced bills providing for an administration upon the earnings of the Federal Reserve banks and the payment into the Treasury of such portion of the earnings as of right ought to go into the Treasury, and to distribute the balance of the earnings of the Federal Reserve banks among their member banks, out of which the profits of the System are made. But that subject is broad enough for a separate bill.

I regard it all as an insignificant detail in connection with the bill now under consideration.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I just want to ask the gentleman this question. Since it is not vital, will it not be all right to leave it in, because it will not affect the bill very much one way or the other?

Mr. STEAGALL. It will not destroy the bill if it is changed, and it will not harm anybody if it remains as it is.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I was quite sure the gentleman felt that way about it, and that is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be recognized for 1 minute to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What becomes of the dividends on this class B stock? Is it a donation to the insurance fund?

Mr. STEAGALL. If there are no dividends allowed, half of the surplus of the Federal Reserve banks will go into the deposit insurance corporation as a contribution. In other words, it is a subscription to stock that stands without any right of revocation or any right to dividends.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In other words, this class B stock is a pure donation to the insurance system.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. May I say that the $150,000,000 will be a donation from the surplus fund of the 12 Federal Reserve banks, which really belongs to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 9, strike out the figures "$150,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen will read this section they will see that it takes $150,000,000 from the Public Treasury. When we voted to protect the national credit, we were told that the house was on fire. We voted to cut the veterans, and the wages of Federal employees, and yet here we are providing $150,000,000 to be taken from the Treasury in order to give the private bankers of America a guaranty on bank deposits.

If the Government is justified in entering the guaranty-deposit business, it is equally justified in entering the banking business. I understand from the gentleman from Texas that the Government is providing two thirds of the guaranty. In other words, the Government is going to guarantee deposits. Why should not the Government have some stock in the banks? If it did, there would be no necessity of a guaranty provision.

We have been exceptionally liberal to the banks of America, and that liberality has been reflected parsimoniously on the people of the country.

The first bill I voted for was to give the banks $2,000,000,000 at practically no interest, on the urge of the President that an emergency existed. We have in addition given to the banks through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $1,122,000,000; and through the Postal Savings we have given the banks another billion or more.

All we are doing is making contributions to the bankers and doing nothing for our unemployed citizens.

Congress is not the only one culpable—the various legislatures of the States seem to be doing the same thing. I have a letter from California, my own State, advising me that the legislature enacted a law protecting building-and-loan associations.

Under the new law I may be compelled to wait 8½ years before I can secure the return of my modest passbook account.

We are doing everything to protect the bankers and nothing to relieve the mortgagors and men out of employment. If we wish to do the proper thing for the people, we should give the bankers a fair deal; but at the same time we should enact a moratorium so that the unemployed and others will be protected against the loss of their homes.

The building-and-loan associations state that the provisions with relation to the recently enacted home-loan bank will be of no benefit to them. The mortgagees will not accept the benefits of the act. Our citizens are going to lose their homes.

I hope that the chairman of the committee will be a little more liberal in this matter and help protect the taxpayer and bring relief to the unemployed.

I may vote for this guaranty bill, although it seems to me like a nice, rosy, well-polished apple. It looks nice, but I am afraid that there are defects inside—that it is rotten at the core. [Laughter.] I may vote for it, but it will be a strain on my conscience to do so. [Laughter and applause.] I am hoping that the time will come when the chairman of this committee will bring in a humanized bill which will protect the interest of all the people and not one solely for the bankers.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, it certainly is amusing to hear such an argument as that just listened to. It is absolutely ridiculous for men who claim to be business men, who claim to represent constituencies that are composed of business men, to listen to such utter absurdities. It is said that we are giving the big bankers of the country a big benefit because we allow these bankers to act as depositories for post-office money.

Mr. HOEPPPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. In a moment. There is not a bank in the United States that is making any money by reason of being a depository for post-office money. I will tell you how it happens. I happen to be the president of a small bank. It was wished on me after I came here. The banks were failing over all the country and the boys elected me president of this bank, and I have never found an opportunity to resign. I do not know much about banking, but mine is standing up. This bank has stood the acid test. We wanted to be a depository for post-office money.

Mr. HOEPPPEL. I wish the gentleman would advise us what ladies' aid society he belongs to.

Mr. FULLER. None. Banks make no money off postal savings. They buy bonds, mostly Government, drawing a small rate of interest, and these are deposited as security for the postal savings. Then these banks must pay 2½ per cent on the postal savings, and thus make nothing out of these Postal Savings deposits.

Mr. HOEPPPEL. I am not speaking for the banks, I am speaking for the American people. If you examine the records, you will find that postal deposits have increased over 1,100 percent since the bank holiday.

Mr. FULLER. And they have a gentleman like you in Congress who just got out of a Republican post office and came here on the Democratic landslide and occupies a seat on the Democratic side. You do not know what it is to go along with this Democratic administration. The only time anybody ever knew of you voting with the administration was when you voted for beer; and if you did as you should, you would go over to the Republican side where you rightfully belong. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOEPPPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. No; I do not want to hear any more. I cannot spend a lot of time in 5 minutes shooting cannon balls at a canary bird. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOEPPPEL. But I have a cannon ball to shoot at you. Why do not you yield?

Mr. FULLER. It is not the big banks that want security or guaranty. None of them wants it. It is the people who are demanding this law.

Mr. HOEPPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. No.

Mr. HOEPPPEL. What about Dawes getting charity?

Mr. FULLER. Who?

Mr. HOEPPPEL. Dawes, the man with the friendly pipe. He borrowed $90,000,000, and we will lose at least $30,000,000 on the securities.

Mr. FULLER. I expect that is true, but it has nothing to do with the merits of this bill. What we are trying to do is to correct the American banking system so that we can regulate the banks. I am amused at other Members on this side of the House who make every objection and every argument they can in criticism of this bill, especially the guaranty system. The gentleman from Texas says in his own State two thirds of the banks cannot qualify under this law. This is an acknowledgment of their insolvency. If they cannot pass inspection and examination, they should not be permitted to take advantage of the guaranty feature. If they are not solvent, they should not be permitted to operate. Yet the people of his State and the people of America everywhere are demanding at the hands of Congress that we give them a guaranty bank system. The only way that we can do that is for the Federal Government to get back of it all. I say to you that two thirds of this money is not being contributed by the Federal Government.

Mr. HOEPPPEL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PATMAN is a Democrat.

Mr. FULLER. Yes; and he is a good one, and he is going to be regular, and he will vote for this bill. He is all right. You need not worry about PATMAN. He will go along with this measure and the administration. They say that these little banks are insolvent and cannot come into this System. Then they should cease to operate. The Government cannot afford to guarantee insolvent banking institutions. If it did, the guaranty would prove a failure and almost bankrupt the Government. The deposits should not be guaranteed in any bank which cannot stand examination.

This panic, causing general bank failures, has caused the people to lose confidence in banks. The best way to restore that confidence is to examine strictly and regulate banking and guarantee the deposits of all banks sufficiently solvent to pass a rigid examination. We should make it impossible for banks to accept deposits, fail, and pay only a small percentage. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago an amendment was adopted which read like this:

One of whom, selected by the third, shall be chairman of the Corporation.

Since that time, by an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, which was adopted, that no. 3 has been changed to 4, so that the previously adopted amendment has no meaning. I ask unanimous consent that that previous amendment which I have just read be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH for the committee: Page 49, line 20, after the word "President", insert: "one of whom shall be chairman of the Corporation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. Chairman, before we get to the next section of this bill and before the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] will have an opportunity to offer his amendment thereto there are some things I wish to bring before the Membership of this House.

There seems to be a prevailing idea that those of us who are opposing this bill or parts of it in its present form are unduly stubborn in our position.

I have some communications which I should like to bring to the attention of this House. Our position is based upon the proposition that we believe sincerely that this bill, placed in operation, is detrimental to the welfare of the country banks.

I hold in my hand a letter from Hon. H. W. Koenke, bank commissioner of the State of Kansas. The banks out in the agricultural section have become very apprehensive in this matter. Mr. Koenke tells me that as a result of a certain conference of Kansas bankers, a meeting was called in Des Moines, Iowa, and at that meeting there attended as representatives from the various agricultural States bank commissioners, representatives of the State banking departments, presidents, secretaries, and chairmen of the legislative committees. Mr. Koenke would have been here at this time as a representative of the State banking departments of 14 agricultural States, except that he met with an automobile accident on his way to Washington.

Speaking of the Des Moines meeting, he has this to say:

This meeting was attended by more than 40 representatives from 14 Midwest States, consisting of the following States: Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

At this meeting the proposed national legislation was thoroughly discussed, and the consensus of opinion of the entire group was that we should not stand idly by and permit the enactment of Federal legislation which would be detrimental to the individual unit banks throughout these agricultural States.

I hold in my hand a telegram which I received this morning from the president of the Kansas Bankers Association:

Kansas bankers, State and National, in convention at Salina, May 17, expressed by resolution strong opposition to the features of the Glass-Steagall bill. One being concerned chiefly over provisions which would inevitably operate to annihilate fully 400, or more than half, of existing Kansas banks now opened and serving well their respective communities. The convention urged strongly the preservation of the dual system and maintenance of present capital limitations for existing banks and admission of State banks thereunder to the Federal Reserve System.

Now, under the present law, State banks in towns of under 3,000 people can enter the Federal Reserve with $25,000 capital. When you pass this bill any bank in any size town, even if it only has a hundred people, must have a minimum capital stock of $50,000. Pass this bill; and if a bank is located in a town of over 6,000, it must have a capital of $100,000 in order to enter the Federal Reserve. Study this bill as you may, and you can reach but one logical conclusion, and that is that in the end no bank is safe unless it ultimately qualifies and enters the Federal Reserve System. In fact, it is the purpose of the bill to force all banks into the Federal Reserve.

I should like to go along on a bill which would provide for the guaranty of deposits. The country bankers of Kansas want to do that. The banking departments of the 14 agricultural States want to do that, but you have not given them that kind of bill. This bill discriminates against them. I protest against the wrong about to be done to the small country unit banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I have been in this fight for 15 years to accomplish this reform on behalf of independent community banking in the United States, and the passage of the legislation during all these years has been defeated by messages flooding Congress from bankers such as those just read. Many of those bankers, guided by short-sighted, selfish interests, did not even understand at times the purport of the legislation under consideration. No doubt the messages that have been read were predicated upon the bill introduced in the Senate.

Some of the advocates of bank-deposit insurance at this time favor restricting such insurance to member banks of the Federal Reserve System. I am as much opposed to that as is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin]. The Congress passed last year a bill setting up a plan for insuring bank deposits, and we incorporated in that bill a method for the admission of State banks upon the same terms and conditions that had to be met by member banks of the Federal Reserve System. This bill has incorporated in it almost every suggestion that any advocate of the interests of State nonmember banks has seen fit to offer to safeguard the System against discrimination as between the two classes of banking.

I know the service that has been rendered by the small community banks. They constitute the pillar of the financial and economic structure of this country.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. And the figures that have been read on this floor by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin] and by others relating to the number of bank failures in the United States, and the comparative figures relating to the two systems in the reports of bank failures, do not tell the whole story.

The records show while there is a far greater number—practically one and one half times as many—of State nonmember banks than there are member banks of the Federal Reserve System, and while deposits in State nonmember banks far exceed the deposits in member banks, the records show that there is slight difference between the amount of deposits that have been tied up by bank failures in member banks and nonmember banks of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Not for the moment; I will a little later. I have the figures which show during the 10-year period from 1921 to 1931 that the total number of deposits tied up in nonmember banks were a fraction less than the deposits tied up in member banks that failed. I have the figures for 1931. They tell the same story, comparatively. I have the figures showing the distress that has come upon the country and the conditions that have arisen because of the failure of large banks, of chain banks, and branch banks. I am not going to take the time to read these figures.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. I shall incorporate the figures in my statement.

No man is more concerned about preserving the independent community banks in the United States than I am. The same statement is true of the members of this committee, who have stood together in this House and defeated for years all efforts to undermine independent community banks. We have beaten back the effort that has been made to unify the banking system and to set up centralized banking. We have made this fight through the years, and this bill is the culmination of that struggle.

This bill will preserve independent, dual banking in the United States to supply community credit, community service, and for the upbuilding of community life. That is what this bill is intended to do. That is the purpose of this bill; that is what the measure will accomplish.

In addition to the deposits insurance provisions which have been discussed and which I think the Members of this House favor, and which I know the citizenship of this country desires, I may say that the measure represents years of effort of a great Senator who wishes to restrict commercial banking and the great Federal Reserve System to service of the public interest. Everybody now regards these regulatory provisions as wise and constructive.

Besides these provisions and the plan for insuring deposits, we are setting up a great fund with resources of something like $2,000,000,000 to be used for the purpose of relieving the distress caused by the wave of bank failures that has come upon us in recent years. We pray God these experiences will never be repeated in the United States, and they will not be repeated if the Congress is alive to the responsibilities and duties of this hour.

If there were nothing else in this bill, the plan for making loans upon the assets of closed banks for the purpose of enabling communities that have their deposits tied up in failed banks to realize a portion of the value of those deposits would alone make this bill one of supreme importance.

Mr. Chairman, I think I know that it is unnecessary to argue with this House against the motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Goss) there were—ayes 1, noes 148.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 302. (a) Any State bank or trust company, not a member bank of the Federal Reserve System, with the approval of the State authority having supervision of such bank or trust company and certification to the Corporation by such authority that such bank or trust company is in solvent condition, after examination by, and approval of, the Corporation, shall be entitled to the privileges of this title upon agreeing to comply with this title and upon subscribing to the same amount of stock as would be required if such bank or trust company became a member bank. The Corporation is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the further examination of such bank or trust company and fix the compensation of examiners employed for such examination. All the provisions of subsections (e) and (f) of section 301 and of section 303 shall apply to such State bank or trust company and to its holding of such stock as if it were a member bank. If at any time the board of directors of the Corporation is of opinion that any such State bank or trust company has failed to comply with the provisions of this title applicable to such State bank or trust company or that the continued participation by any such State bank or trust company is detrimental to the safe and economical carrying out of the duties of the Corporation under this title, the board shall give notice thereof to such State bank or trust company and, after hearing, the board may by order require the withdrawal of such State bank or trust company from participation in the benefits of this title, which order shall become effective at such time, not less than 30 days after the issuance thereof, as the board may fix, and the Corporation shall pay to such State bank or trust company the amount paid for stock held by it (and its stock shall be retired and canceled).

(b) In case any State bank or trust company, not a member of the Federal Reserve System, is prohibited by State law, or by the State authority, from complying with the requirement of subscribing for stock in the Corporation pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, it shall be entitled to the privileges of this title upon complying with the other requirements of such subsection, and upon making a deposit in lawful money with the Corporation equal to the face amount of stock which it would be required to subscribe for if it became a member bank. The Corporation shall pay interest on any such deposit to the bank or trust company making such deposit at a rate equal to the rate of the dividend paid on stock of member banks. Such deposit shall be adjusted in like manner as holdings of stock in the Corporation by member banks are adjusted under subsection (f) of section 301. Upon insolvency of the State bank or trust company making the deposit, such deposit and accrued interest thereon shall be applied in the same manner as cash-paid subscriptions and dividends are applied under section 303. The provisions of the last sentence of subsection (a) of this section shall apply to any bank or trust company making such deposit, except that in lieu of payments by the Corporation to the bank or trust company of amounts paid for stock the Corporation shall return to such bank or trust company the amount of the deposit.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, for the committee, offers the following amendment: Page 55, add a new sentence between what are now lines 3 and 4, as follows: "It is not the purpose of this subsection to discriminate in any way or manner against State nonmember and in favor of national or member banks, but the purpose is to provide all banks with the same opportunity to obtain and enjoy the benefits of this title. No bank shall be discriminated against because its capital stock is less than the amount required for eligibility for admission into the Federal Reserve System."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 54, line 2, after the word "condition", strike out the following language in lines 2 and 3: "after examination by and approval of, the corporation"; and on page 54, line 13, after the word "time", insert the following: "After 1 year."

NATIONAL BANKS HAVE ADVANTAGE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, under the terms of this amendment all State banks will automatically come into this insurance system in the same way and manner that national banks and member banks of the Federal Reserve System have come in.

When this law is passed there will be no examination of national banks or member banks. I see no reason why we should not permit the State banks to come in under the same terms and conditions, with the understanding that they shall have a year before any examination of any kind will be required. We are hopeful that during this period of time commodity prices will come back and other prices will come back and the State banks can qualify under this system the same as the national banks can qualify. If they do not, no bank will be any good. It is all dependent entirely upon this condition.

REASONABLE AMENDMENT

So I see no reason why this amendment should not be adopted. It is reasonable. We are using the Government's money in order to pay an insurance premium for banks. Should the Government spend money to pay two thirds of the insurance premium just to protect 6,000 banks or should we pay the premium for all the 18,000 banks in the country, the State banks as well as the national banks?

I invite your attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Saturday. I inserted a table which gives the number of State banks in each State in the United States and also the deposits in the banks of each State. This is shown at page 3841 of the RECORD.

There are 6,011 national banks and there are 12,379 State banks.

In order that you may know how it will affect certain States, for instance, the State of the gentleman from Wisconsin has 654 State banks that cannot go into this system unless and until they are certified by the supervisor and an examination is made and this board passes upon them. Until that time 127 national banks in the gentleman's State will have every advantage.

In the State of Kansas there are 209 national banks, but 625 State banks. Maryland, 140 State banks and only 68 national banks; in Kentucky 108 national banks, but 362 State banks; in Alabama 77 national banks, but 158 State banks; Texas, 483 national banks and 540 State banks.

Will it be right to say to the 77 national banks in Alabama, the gentleman's home State, that they shall automatically come into this system and the Government is going to pay their premium, except what the depositors pay, but that twice that number of banks, or 158 State banks, are going to be excluded unless and until they can qualify according to the rules and regulations that are laid down by this board of five members.

In the State of Arkansas there are only 52 national banks, but 220 State banks.

If you pass this bill as it is, you will use the Government's money to protect deposits in national banks aggregating $16,000,000,000, but you will exclude from any protection of any kind whatsoever deposits in State banks amounting to $25,541,000,000.

I should like to know what excuse can be given for using the Government's money to pay an insurance premium just for the protection of one third of the banks of this country.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOSS. If the gentleman's amendments are adopted, does the gentleman think the sum of $150,000,000 will be large enough?

Mr. PATMAN. It will be much more than that. It will be $150,000,000 from the Government, it will be $150,000,000 from the Federal Reserve banks' surplus fund, which really belongs to the Government, and then it will be one half of 1 percent of the deposits, which will amount to from $200,000,000 to $350,000,000, instead of just the $150,000,000, if you put in only the national banks.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you that in my State of Ohio the State banking department has not only the little bank to supervise but many of the large financial institutions as well.

But during the past 2 years no more sordid tales have been written on the pages of history than that of mismanagement, criminal blindness by the State bank departments in examinations of our banking and financial institutions.

In the campaign of 1932 the Governor of our State, George White, boasted that at last they had secured the greatest, most efficient State superintendent of banks in the world. They said that this man had not been selected for political preferment, but that his name had been suggested by the big bankers of Cleveland.

And that was true, but now the chickens have come home to roost. The failure that rocked the State was that of the Union Trust Co., of Cleveland, and the Guardian & Savings Trust Co., of Cleveland. These men had suggested the name of Ira G. Fulton as the man to be named as State superintendent of banks.

Woven into this tale is the story of the Van Sweringen brothers, owners of many railroads, and Cyrus K. Eaton, the man who started Sam Insull on the downward path—all dreamed of a world empire.

The projects of these super crooks of the twentieth century were financed by the Union Trust Co. That is typical of their selfishness and greed—they wanted a world empire which emanated in the minds of Eaton and the Van Sweringens—they wanted it to become their own little baby. They wanted it all, and after the crash, or rather before it, the holding company was born, known as the Western Reserve Mortgage Co. They pooled all their mortgages in that holding company—many of them of no market value and not worth the paper they were written on.

Thanks to the former Speaker of this House, JACK GARNER, and the present Speaker, HENRY T. RAINEY, publicity had to be given to all loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and these gentlemen borrowed $25,000,000 under the name of the Western Reserve Mortgage Co.

I want to tell you gentlemen that this company which robbed widows and orphans of trust funds which had been left to them were under the supervision of this banking superintendent, Ira G. Fulton.

When the gentleman from Kansas was talking about the State bank department of Ohio objecting to this provision in this bill it made me stronger than ever for the bill. I want to commend this committee for their labor on the bill, and for having the courage and the guts to at last recommend to Congress a bill that will guarantee deposits of people's money in these banks. [Applause.]

Gov. George White's indifference to the cry of robbed depositors of defunct banks was first registered when the Standard Trust Co. of Cleveland, Ohio, closed its doors in December 1931. This institution was founded upon the savings of the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers throughout the United States and Canada, and the savings of the members of kindred labor organizations in northern Ohio.

Shortly after the failure of this institution, through the influence of Governor White, one Maurice Bernon, an ostensible power in the Democratic organization of Cleveland was appointed liquidating agent in charge of this bank, despite the fact that the records disclosed at the time that Mr. Bernon and his brother had secured from the Standard Trust Co., shortly before it failed, the sum of $25,000 on a nonsecured note. As liquidating agent, this individual drew several thousands of dollars in fees before he resigned, about 6 months ago, not one cent of which was applied to offset his indebtedness to this bank.

A trail of ruined homes and suicides followed as a result of the defalcations of the president and officers of this bank.

During the process of liquidating a certain law firm in Cleveland, contrary to all established law, by court action set off certain fees due them for legal services performed for this bank against their double liability as stockholders due to this institution under the law.

This action was so reprehensible that protests from the newspapers and depositors were forwarded to Governor White urging him to cause an independent investigation of the action of this law firm. Instead of responding to the appeal of the robbed depositors, Governor White passed the buck by asking the Cleveland Bar Association to make the investigation. To date no report has been made.

At the present time the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and other depositors are eagerly waiting action by the prosecutor of Cuyahoga County looking to the indictment of those who were responsible for the failure of this institution, and who long ago should have been behind prison bars.

In Ohio the State banking department for the past several years has been nothing but a political machine for the Governor who happens to be in power. During the third term of Governor Vic Donahey, 1927-28, it was discovered that all was not well with the State banking department, and the resignation of the superintendent was "accepted." An efficient and faithful employee of the department was then elevated to the superintendency by Governor Donahey. With the retirement of Governor Donahey on January 14, 1929, the incoming Governor reverted to the spoils system and a political appointment was made. Governor Cooper's administration lasted one term only, being followed by Gov. George White, a Democrat, who was inaugurated in January 1931.

The political set-up in the State banking department under Governor White was intensified to the 7th degree for the sole purpose of building up a political vehicle in which Governor White could ride into a second term as Governor and thence to the United States Senate, George White, himself the head of a large banking institution in his home city of Marietta and a director of the Tidewater Oil Co.

During the first term of the Governor many State banks collapsed, but thanks to his political henchmen, appointed to positions of trust and responsibility, the mess was covered up so that a good front could be made in the election campaign of November 1932. During that campaign Governor White and his high priest of banking and finance, Hon. Theodore Tangeman, director of commerce, traveled around the State in State-owned airplanes and automobiles and boasted that in Ohio the banks had been saved—the crisis was over—the banking problem had been solved for all time because of the masterful judgment and unexampled executive ability of George White, the Governor, and Theodore Tangeman, the director of commerce, and Ira G. Fulton, the State superintendent of banks.

So great was the egoism of the first two named that they boasted in public addresses of the unique manner in which their scintillating jewel of all State bank superintendents, Mr. Ira G. Fulton, had been discovered. Admitting that practically all other appointments, including the cabinet members, had been named by the political bosses, Brunner, Gongwer, Pyke, Leonard & Co., they fearlessly asserted that Ira G. Fulton was selected by the big bankers of Cleveland as the outstanding bank expert in Ohio, the one man to bring light out of darkness, who could bring order out of chaos, and who could, as if by magic, clear the muddy waters of the tangled and stinking bank cesspool in Ohio.

So elated did the pair, White and Tangeman, become because of the glib mess of pottage that had been swallowed by the unsuspecting voters at the November 8 election, hook, line, and sinker; so swollen did the head of the governor then become and so pronounced his well-known asininity manifested itself, that forthwith and then did he declare himself to be a full-fledged candidate for President of the United States. No more amusing picture has ever imprinted itself on the pages of history, no more ludicrous was the attempt of Don Quixote to charge the windmill, than was the abortive campaign of George White for the presidency of the United States, climaxed by the now-famous caucus of the Ohio delegation in the Chicago convention after nomination had been made of the greatest President this country has ever known, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Now the chickens are home to roost, the biggest bank collapse in Ohio is that of the Union Trust Co., of Cleveland. The officials of this bank were among those who recommended Ira G. Fulton for State banking superintendent. With the collapse of this huge financial institution it now develops that no greater example of twentieth century piracy, no more shining illustration of banks' being looted by bankers themselves will ever befoul the pages of banking history than the looting of the sacred funds and trusts of fathers and widows to their children and their children's children than the sacking and pillaging of the Union Trust Co. by those who were supposed to be the watch dog of its funds.

Like a story from the Arabian Nights it unfolds: The Van Sweringen brothers, originally smooth-tongued real-estate operators, after successfully developing the Shaker Heights addition to Cleveland, like Napoleon, longed for new and bigger worlds to conquer. They directed their attention to two streaks of rust, a right of way, a few cars and antiquated locomotives, officially known as the Nickel Plate Railroad, and amazing though it seems, transformed this line into a modern, profitable enterprise. Then, commendable as it is, the Van Sweringen boys dreamed of a new and greater Cleveland to be known as the Union Terminal Development, the hub of which was a mighty skyscraper containing hundreds of offices. The Union Trust Co. was the white angel that made these vast projects of the Van Sweringens possible by financing the project with not only depositors' money, but those who had left their all with this supposedly Gibraltar of finance to administer safely, honestly, and wisely, their incomes to their posterity.

Then along came Cyrus K. Eaton, who in dreams of world power and wealth towered above the puny Van Sweringens, as Saul towered above his brethren. Eaton it was who conceived the creation of Continental Shares, Inc., a bucket shop extraordinary, having as one of its directors the young David S. Ingalls, Assistant Secretary of the Navy under President Hoover, and defeated Republican candidate for Governor of Ohio in 1932. Eaton, Ingalls, and their Continental Shares Co. started that supercrook of all times, Samuel J. Insull, on the downward path to ruin. They bought so many shares of Middle Western Securities, an Insull subsidiary, that Insull was forced to go into the open market and buy them back at enormously advanced prices.

Cyrus Eaton and David Ingalls controlled Otis & Co., the largest investment and speculative brokers in Ohio, who were also drawn into the net and now are compelled to confine their business strictly to the handling of legitimate investment securities. Eaton, still dreaming of a world empire, reached out his greedy hand and tried to corner the stock of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., but the directors of these two great corporations, craftier than Eaton, and guided by the great legal mind of the Hon. Newton D. Baker, immediately announced a coming merger with Bethlehem Steel Co. and Charlie Schwab. Eaton was forced to go into the open market and buy stock for as high as $180 a share to prevent the merger with Bethlehem.

During the melee and mad spree with other peoples' money, the Allegheny Corporation, a holding company, was formed to pool stocks and assets for the Van Sweringens' railroads, terminal development projects, and real estate. The point which interests us is the Union Trust Co., with characteristic hoggishness and greed of the big bankers, wanted this sweet little child of world empire, conceived in the minds of the Van Sweringens and Eaton, for their own baby. They financed these modern Captains Kidd to the limit.

In the meantime, directors of the Union Trust Co. had borrowed huge sums upon their personal unsecured notes. The financial institutions were milked and the depositors ruined.

The sequel to this gruesome story of frenzied finances is known to every American citizen who reads the newspapers. Insull fled to Greece with his ill-gotten millions, Eaton took what was left of Continental shares to Canada, where he has a holding company in the name of his wife and family. There his ill-gotten millions repose to enable him, like Insull, to live like a king upon the spoils stolen from broken-hearted men and women, who were once high in the financial and industrial world, and helpless widows and orphans who hold the bag.

Do not forget that the Union Trust Co., Guardian Trust Co., and more than 200 State banks have collapsed and fallen down under the administration of Governor George White and under the mismanagement of his superintendent of banks, Ira G. Fulton. Protests and complaints have poured in to the governor by hundreds. Demands for Fulton's removal reach him by the score. Threats of impeachment are heard freely, yet the governor moves on, unperturbed, serenely, apparently secure in the thought that is typical in the mind of all big bankers, namely, government of, by, and for bankers.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] does not want to destroy the results of the enormous labors expended in connection with this bill and which have brought us to this moment where victory and success seem about to crown our efforts. I am sure the gentleman understands that there have been many differing views as to the methods to be employed in setting up this plan for insurance of bank deposits. I desire to say to my friend that if we tear down the reasonable safeguards that are provided for the soundness and success of this plan, we shall endanger ultimate success. If this board, which is to be selected in accordance with the wishes of the gentleman himself and in accordance with the wishes of all of us who view this problem from the standpoint of utmost consideration for State banks, cannot be trusted to examine a bank honestly and fairly and decide whether it should be permitted to join other banks in the benefits of this corporation, we may as well abandon the undertaking. Who will say that a bank that cannot pass a fair examination, whether its difficulties were due to crookedness, or incompetency, or unavoidable insolvency, should be imposed upon others who are to bear the burden? Banks that come in automatically are examined now under Federal authority.

If the amendment were adopted, it would automatically exclude banks in a number of States that could not qualify at all and that the Board would have no right to admit, because some States have no examining authority. I cannot call the list now, but there are some.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. PATMAN. I wonder why the gentleman inserted in the bill the language:

With the approval of the State authority having supervision of such bank or trust company.

Mr. STEAGALL. We require that in States where they have examining authorities. Of course, any bank in a State that has examining authorities should prepare to submit a certificate of good character, but a number of States cannot submit those certificates and the banks of those States would be automatically excluded under the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. PATMAN. Would it not be all right then if this amendment—

Mr. STEAGALL. I did not yield except for a question.

Mr. PATMAN. Should provide, where they have no supervising authority, that then the board can pass upon them.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman ought to keep splitting hairs and chasing shadows in an effort to delay the passage of this bill. This House, if I know its temper, desires this legislation. This problem has been worked out as best it can be worked out. I do not say that claiming the credit to myself, but it represents the combined judgment of the men who desire an honest-to-God system of mutual bank-deposit insurance in this country that will admit every bank that is worthy of admission and that will give us a new start with a clean slate and dignify and elevate banking to a plane worthy of the banking system of this great Republic. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 20, noes 88.

So, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 54, line 6, after the word "bank", at the end of the sentence, strike out the period and insert: "Provided, That any State bank or trust company not a member bank of the Federal Reserve System which shall have been certified by the State authority having supervision of such bank or trust company as in solvent condition and which shall have agreed to comply with this title and have subscribed for the amount of stock required by this title, shall be entitled to the privileges of this title pending examination by and approval of the Corporation."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, under the existing language of the bill, there are three requirements for membership under the benefits provided by the bill. First of all, a bank must get a certificate from the banking authority of its State. Second, it must be examined and approved by the corporation set up by this act. Third, it must subscribe to its quota of stock under this act. The amendment I propose does not take away any one of those requirements. This amendment does require, first of all, the certification of the banking authority in the State; second, the subscription to the required amount of stock; and then provides that such bank shall be entitled to the benefits of the act pending an examination and approval by the corporation.

I am not insensible to the arguments against this amendment. It will be said that this is a proposal to bring banks within the provisions of this act and give them the benefits and privileges of this act before having been examined by the corporation herein set up. That is absolutely true; but I am just a little alarmed by this fact: The former Secretary of the Treasury indicates that it will take approximately 12 months or more for the corporation to make all the necessary examinations, before all banks that may apply can be properly approved. You can readily understand that in a town which has four or five banks it is quite possible to examine one bank and approve it and then go on to some other town and leave three or four banks in the first town that have not been approved under the provisions of this act. The result will be what? If you were a depositor in one of the other banks and the first bank was insured, you would take your money out of the uninsured banks and place it in the insured bank, because there is a transition period of 1 year, and perhaps more, before the corporation can approve banks that will come under the purview of this title. I say there is a bit of danger, and I am alarmed about it.

I confess that my dilemma is about the same as yours. I have a score of State banks in my district. On the other hand, I have 60,000 or 70,000 depositors who are clamoring for bank insurance. Incidentally, we have been using the words "insurance" and "guaranty" interchangeably. I think we should be more careful about that. I do not look upon this as a guaranty but, rather, as insurance. But I say here are depositors on one hand and State banks on the other, serving agriculture, serving mining districts in my district, and I like to be a little solicitous about the State banks in my district. However, I am more interested in this transition period which will be set up when they start approving the various banks under this title, because it is possible for depositors to rush from an uninsured bank to a bank that has been previously insured under this act and thereby possibly disrupt the banking fabric in a great many cities.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Has the gentleman's attention been called to section 311 of the bill on page 75, in which it is provided that surveys shall be made by the President before the act goes into effect?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is not very conclusive.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Well, that provision is made for a survey. It means a survey of State banks.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But it does not make it particularly mandatory to confer the benefits of this act on any bank that has met two requirements and is willing to meet the third requirement as soon as the corporation can examine that bank.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Does not the gentleman think the President will be fair to the State banks?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; but it is nothing more than lip service, as a matter of fact.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. McGUGIN. I hope the gentleman will give me an opportunity to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were ayes 28 and noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McGUGIN: Section 302 (a), page 53, line 22, strike out subsection (a) and insert in lieu thereof:

"(a) Any State bank or trust company, not a member of the Federal Reserve System, with the approval of the State authority having supervision of such bank or trust company and certification to the Corporation by such authority that such bank or trust company is in a solvent condition, shall be entitled to the privileges of this title upon agreeing to comply with this title and upon subscribing to the same amount of stock as would be required if such bank or trust company became a member bank. Such State bank or trust company shall thereafter continue to be entitled to the privileges of this title upon semiannually supplying the Board with a certificate of solvency from the proper State authority. All the provisions of subsections (e) and (f) of section 301 and section 302 shall apply to such State bank and trust company and to its holding of such stock as if it were a member bank. Any such State bank or trust company that fails or refuses to furnish such semiannual certificate of solvency from the proper State authority shall by the Board be ordered to withdraw from participation in the benefits of this title, which order shall become effective at such time, not less than 30 days after the issuance thereof, as the Board may fix, and the Corporation shall pay to such State bank or trust company the amount paid for stock held by it (and its stock shall be retired and canceled)."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I want to ask the gentleman if in reality the language of this amendment—

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. All debate on this section and all amendments thereto have been closed.

Mr. GOSS. Very well. I am reserving the point of order. I want to ask if this amendment—

Mr. BYRNS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is getting around just what the House did a moment ago.

Mr. GOSS. I am willing to make a point of order and take a chance on it. I make the point of order that the House has already passed upon this question, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] made a motion to strike out line 2, "after examination by and approval of the corporation"; and if I heard the reading of the gentleman's amendment correctly, it seeks to do the same thing by indirection which the House has already passed upon directly.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McMILLAN). The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is overruled.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 303. If any member bank shall be declared insolvent, the stock held by it in the Corporation shall be canceled, without impairment of the liability of such bank, and all cash-paid subscriptions on such stock, with its proportionate share of dividends not to exceed one half of 1 percent per month from the period of last dividend on such stock shall be first applied to all debts of the insolvent bank or the receiver thereof to the Corporation, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the receiver of the insolvent bank.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McCLINTIC: Page 56, add at the end of the section the following: "Provided, That in case of a bank failure no official connected with such institution shall in the future be eligible to obtain a bank charter or to be employed in any department that has jurisdiction over banking activities."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with banking matters. We are trying to place in the bill provisions that will safeguard the people's money. If this amendment is not germane, I do not see how one can be written that will be germane, because it deals specifically with the subject matter of this section and refers to insolvent banks.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LUCE. No, Mr. Chairman; I rely upon the good judgment of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that the amendment offered is not pertinent to the section under consideration.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 304. Upon the appointment of all the appointive members of the board of the Corporation, the Corporation shall become a body corporate and as such shall have power—

First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

Second. To have succession until dissolved by an act of Congress.

Third. To make contracts.

Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, State or Federal.

Fifth. To appoint by its board of directors such officers and employees as are not otherwise provided for in this section, to define their duties, fix their compensation, require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers or employees. Nothing in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment and compensation, as an officer or employee of the Corporation, of any officer or employee of the United States in any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department thereof.

Sixth. To prescribe by its board of directors, bylaws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed.

Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers or agents, all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this section and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: On page 57, in line 2, strike out the period after the word "employees" and insert the following: "Provided, That no such officer or employee shall be paid more than $10,000 per annum: And provided further, That in no case shall any such officer or employee receive a salary at a rate in excess of the rate of salary paid for like or similar positions which are subject to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the Civil Service laws and regulations."

LET US LIMIT THE SALARIES OF THE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment similar to the amendment offered on yesterday to limit the pay or salary to be received by the officers or employees of the corporation set up under title I of the Federal Reserve Board.

I want to call to your attention section 301 on page 50 wherein you are limiting the pay to be received by the officers of this corporation to $10,000 per annum, one of whom is a member of the Federal Reserve System, and to call your attention further to the fifth paragraph of section 304 on pages 56 and 57 of the bill, the authority under which the board set up herein appoints and selects officers and employees to administer the act.

Then I wish to refer you back to paragraph (L), section 248, of the United States Code, which sets up the same provision under which the Federal Reserve Board selects the officers and employees under the act under which you voted on yesterday by a close vote to decide against adopting this same amendment.

DO YOU FAVOR ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT?

Now, there is not any half-way ground about it, Mr. Chairman. If the membership is in favor of limiting the pay to be received by the officers and employees in the administration of this act, let them say so by their votes. Do not be misled. You are spending Government money. Many of the officers and employees under the Federal Reserve Act draw as high as $50,000 a year. I submit in all fairness that we ought to regulate the salary of these employees for that money comes out of the Treasury of the United States, and when they are paid exorbitant salaries it cuts down the profits that would go to the United States Treasury if we do not encourage the squandering of the people's money.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Is there any other place where a limitation can be put on salaries?

Mr. McFARLANE. This is the place where it should be done. There is no other place where it can be done. If you are in favor of paying these high salaries, if you believe these employees of the institution we are setting up under this bill should receive from $20,000 to $50,000 a year of the people's money, if you believe they are justified in having it, then just vote against this amendment, but do so fully realizing that you are saying by your vote that you are unwilling to fix the salaries of these employees, many of whom are receiving anywhere from $20,000 to $50,000 a year.

SURPLUS EARNINGS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD SHOULD GO INTO UNITED STATES TREASURY

Under the law, after the necessary expenses of the Federal Reserve System have been paid and the stockholders paid 6 percent on the paid-in capital stock, the remainder of the profits, under the law, should be placed in the Treasury of the United States as a franchise tax after a surplus fund of 100 percent of the subscribed capital stock has accumulated.

The bank records show they have accumulated about two hundred and eighty millions surplus, and this large sum, regardless of the reckless expenditure of the Federal Reserve System, which is annually expending about $27,000,000, salaries of officers and employees of the 12 Federal Reserve banks combined.

Officers	Number		Annual salaries
	Dec. 31, 1931	Dec. 31, 1930	Dec. 31, 1931	Dec. 31, 1930
Chairman and Federal Reserve agent.	12	12	$289,000	$278,000
Governor.....	12	12	360,000	355,000
Other officers.....	246.1	247	2,064,540	2,070,840
Employees by departments:
Banking department.....	8,366.7	8,623.5	12,947,313	13,112,875
Federal Reserve agent.....	236.4	233.4	695,692	691,833
Auditing department.....	190.5	192.5	436,055	439,400
Fiscal agency department.....	226.3	228.6	447,175	453,942
Total.....	9,340	9,609	17,239,825	17,401,890

This Congress has cut the disabled war veterans more than 50 percent, and the Federal employees, most of whom receive very meager salaries, 15 percent.

It seems to me we should take advantage of this opportunity to save the taxpayers money and to stop this flagrant and extravagant abuse of enormous salaries being doled out to these big bankers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH) there were—ayes 54, noes 70.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 305. The board of directors shall administer the affairs of the Corporation fairly and impartially and without discrimination. The board of directors of the Corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government. The Corporation with the consent of any Federal Reserve bank or of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, and facilities thereof in carrying out the provisions of this section.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 57, line 21, strike out the sentence beginning with the words "The Corporation" and ending with the word "Government", in line 23.

FRANKING PRIVILEGES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this corporation is a private corporation. It will be allowed to use a corporate seal. It will exist until dissolved by Congress, which makes it a perpetual character. It can make contracts, sue and be sued, complain and defend in any court, State or Federal, in the United States.

I believe that this will be the only donation that the Government of the United States will have to make to it. I think it will be self-sustaining by reason of the assessments on the depositors of the banks under this system. Therefore, it should not be allowed the franking privilege.

USE OF MAILS FREE

This bill gives this corporation the right to use the mails free of charge. At the same time it allows dividends to the stockholders. Can you defend giving dividends to stockholders and then allow the corporation to have the free use of the United States mails?

Certainly they should not be allowed dividends and the free use of the mails. The mailing privileges should be paid before dividends. Last year the Federal Reserve banks spent over $1,600,000 for postage. I venture to say that if this corporation is organized it would spend $1,500,000 for postage. The Federal Reserve banks are not allowed the franking privilege.

Are you willing to take $1,500,000 out of the taxpayers' pockets and pay 6-percent dividends to holders of the stock of this private corporation? I do not believe you can defend this.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Under this provision they could mail out the dividend checks in franked envelopes, could they not?

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly they could, and when they have a lawsuit they can communicate with their witnesses by using the mails free. They can use the mails free for any purpose on earth, defending lawsuits or suing people.

INVESTMENT TRUST

This is an investment trust. It is not just an ordinary corporation; it is an investment trust. It is going into the business of buying and selling stocks and bonds, and under this privilege it can use the mails to transport the stocks and bonds that they buy.

I do not think the Members of the House want to do this. The franking privilege has probably been abused too much already, and certainly we should not give them this privilege and pay dividends to stockholders on the stock.

Last year we had a postal deficit of about $200,000,000 by reason of the users of the United States mails not paying a sufficient sum for the use of the privilege. The postage on newspapers and magazines alone amounted to $102,000,000, and on third-class parcel-post matter it amounted to about $36,000,000.

Certainly we have extended the franking privilege too far already, and there is no excuse or reason why we should pay dividends to private stockholders on private stock in an investment trust at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States, and I ask that this section, which allows this privilege, be stricken out.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. Will not the Government of the United States make money out of this corporation?

Mr. PATMAN. If it does, it is entitled to it. It has stock in it, and while the Government would get 6 percent on the $150,000,000, all the private banks will get dividends on their stock, and I say do not pay the Government, the private banks, or anybody else any dividends if you have to take it out of the pockets of the taxpayers, because for every dollar the Government gets, the private bank also gets a dollar.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and on a division, demanded by Mr. STEAGALL, there were—ayes 88, noes 75.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. PATMAN and Mr. STEAGALL.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 90, noes 88.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: On page 57, line 23, after the word "Government", strike out all down to and including line 2, on page 58.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I request the committee to read the sentence that I desire stricken out. I should like the attention of the members of the Banking and Currency Committee. The sentence reads:

The corporation, with the consent of any Federal Reserve bank, or of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, and facilities thereof in carrying out the provisions of this section.

Mr. Chairman, this is wide open. If I understand the English language it means, whether you want it to mean it or not, that this private corporation can avail itself of the services and facilities of any Government institution or agency, if a Federal Reserve bank or any branch of the Government says so.

Do you think this is good business? If you think it is good business to turn over to this private corporation the services and facilities of all Government agencies, well and good. If this is not what the sentence means and someone can show me that it is not what it means, then I shall withdraw my amendment.

I should like for the chairman of the committee to advise us if he can make anything out of this sentence other than what I have just stated.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman that there is no provision for the corporation to avail itself of anything except with the consent of the Federal Reserve bank or any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is what I have just explained. In other words, if the Federal Reserve bank in St. Louis, a private institution under Government control, says to this corporation, "Avail yourself of the facilities of the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Commerce or any other Government department", under the terms of this sentence the corporation will have authority to do it.

Mr. STEAGALL. The purpose of the language is to try to supply the new corporation with the benefit of any information or aid that may be extended from other departments without attempting to set up a separate personnel to do the work.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Why should you do that? Let the corporation hire its own help and set up its own facilities.

Mr. STEAGALL. This is the customary language used in every bill of this type I have ever read.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Well, it should not be in any bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. It requires the consent of each separate agency and is the customary language employed in bills of this kind.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not see where there is provision for the consent of any separate agency. One agency can say, Use another agency. It even goes so far as to include the language "including any field service thereof." If any field service of a department gives its consent to this corporation to avail itself of Government facilities, it may do so. It also uses the word "services", and the first sentence of the section provides that—

The board of directors shall administer the affairs of the corporation fairly and impartially and without discrimination.

If the word "services" means anything, it means that this corporation can employ Government agencies to carry out the purposes of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I am in a peculiar position. I came here promising my constituents that I would not represent the bankers, big and small, and I am, therefore, opposed to the measure before us at the present time, for the reason that it is a bankers' bill pure and simple. In doing this I realize that I will be one of very few who will vote in the negative.

Before going into my reasons for opposing this bill generally I want to refer to a statement made upon the floor of this House yesterday by the gentleman from Maine which I do not think should be allowed to go unchallenged. He stated that every Member who had taken the solemn oath to support the Constitution of the United States before the bar of this House was in duty bound to serve both classes. I have better than a bowing acquaintance with the Constitution, and I reread it to ascertain whether there was any foundation for the statement made and I was unable to find anything to bear out that position. I for one have come to this Congress solemnly believing that it is impossible to represent all of the people. My position is that you cannot represent the oppressed and the oppressors, the robbed and the robbers, the poor and the rich, at the same time. It just cannot be done because of the absolute conflict of interests. I took the position during the campaign that there had been too many congressional representatives of bankers, power companies, and chambers of commerce, and that, if elected, I would not in any respect or particular represent them in any manner where it conflicted with the interest of the workingman, the farmer, or the small business man. I intend to do this and I hope that, contrary to the opinion of the gentleman from Maine, I will not be rendering myself an unconstitutional Representative in the Congress of the United States of America.

Some may think that one cannot be a good Representative taking such a position, but I would rather be a bad Representative, in their opinion, working for the interests of those who produce all the wealth, than be such a good Representative that I would enter the category of the man who was so good that he was good for nothing.

The bankers in my district took me at my word and believed me, for I have not received a letter or a telegram from any of them suggesting how I should vote on any matter. So in order to determine whether the bankers were for this bill I made inquiry among several other Representatives to ascertain whether or not they had received any protests against this measure from any bank of an appreciable size. I learn that no such protests were received, but that, on the contrary, they received many communications from their bankers asking them to vigorously support this measure. To my mind that is the best proof that this bill is not for the interests of the people, generally speaking.

I have tried to carefully study this measure, which is 76 pages long, and as a lawyer I must confess that I do not entirely understand its provisions, so, therefore, must depend to some extent upon my intuition and negative line of reasoning. In the first place, the whole measure seems to be drawn so as to fool the public into believing that all the wrongs of our banking system will be rectified as soon as we get branch banking. I am not so sure of this, for here are the results of our experience with branch banks in the United States.

I insert the following excerpt from volume 136 of the Financial Chronicle on page 51:

In Canada we have an undeveloped country, due without doubt to the banking system. The portfolios of the Canadian banks indicate that the major portion of their funds are invested in Government securities or in securities of industries controlled by the Government, leaving very little to loan to the individual and none for real-estate loans. The citizens of Canada do not use banks to any extent, therefore runs on banks are not common and after all, the real way to compare systems is to put them to the same test. Is there anyone who really believes that the Canadian branch-banking system could have stood the test to which our 19,000 banks have been subjected, and which are paying 100 cents on the dollar when a dollar has now the purchasing power of $1.30, whereas the Canadian dollar is worth about 90 cents and the English pound $3.30, when a year ago it was worth $4.85.

Is there safety in branch banking? Witness the closing of the branch-banking systems in the United States when they were put to the test. The most disastrous failures we had were branch, group, and chain failures, such as the following:

	Branches
Bank of United States, New York	59
Federal National, Boston	8
Banco Kentucky Group	7
A. B. Banks, American Chain	27
Manley Chain, Georgia	87
Bain Banks, Chicago	12
Bankers Trust Co., Pennsylvania	20
United States National, Los Angeles	8
Security Home Trust, Toledo	10
Peoples State Bank, South Carolina	44
Arizona State Bank	5
Foreman National Group, Chicago	6

To this rather impressive group, with deposits running into hundreds of millions of dollars, of branch and chain bank collapses, which were due to many of the same abuses that weaken unit banks, we could name important branch, group, and chain banking systems in Detroit, Boston, San Francisco, and other cities which got into trouble and merged or were supported by other banks or United States credit until the crisis was past.

The so-called "attractive" feature of the bill—yes, one may say the "enticing" feature—is the provision for bank insurance, the fund to be created to amount to approximately $2,000,000,000 to set up a private insurance corporation to insure the deposits of the depositors of the member banks against further loss. I confess that I am unable to see how you can insure against losses under our present banking set-up, for the deposits aggregate approximately $45,000,000,000 and all the money and currency and gold in the vaults of the private banks today amount to less than $1,000,000,000.

This statement has been made on innumerable occasions on this floor and has not been challenged. Even with a $2,000,000,000 fund in this insurance corporation, there would be only approximately $3,000,000,000 to pay off $45,000,000,000, and I am unable to see how that can be done, and I think that it is the worst form of deception to lead the public to believe that they will have security in the future and that the Government stands behind the security. Some may say that the people will know better, but I say that 95 percent of the people yet believe that the Federal Reserve System is a governmental institution and not a private bank for private bankers. I for one will not lend myself or become a party to such deception.

Another feature of this bill which I dislike very much is the further sanctioning by a Government measure high and exorbitant interest rates, for, in my humble opinion, high interest is one of the primary reasons for this depression. The total public and private debts of the country today amount to approximately $200,000,000,000. This sum at the modest rate of interest of 6 percent per annum brings the annual interest, without compounding, to the huge sum of $12,000,000,000 annually. The last estimate of our national income was approximately $36,000,000,000, which brings interest to one third of our national income. We talk about putting labor on a 6-hour day, 5-day week, and many other measures, but nobody seems to work to rectify one of these gravest of wrongs which still draws wages upon capital 365 days a year, 24 hours a day, and does not even take a Sunday off.

Another reason why I will not vote for this bill is that it provides for a $150,000,000 raid on the Treasury as a contribution to this private insurance company, which will have a few governmental officials to supervise it. We all know, or should know, that any time you start to supervise these legalized larcenists they immediately commence to supervise their supervisors in a very effective manner. Is there anyone here who will deny that the national bank supervision has been a farce and that the national bankers have had the determinative voice among most of our governmental officials, and particularly so in the framing and passage of legislation in their behalf?

I am thoroughly convinced that commercial banking, the issuance of currency and the regulation of its value are absolutely governmental business and that we will never approach the banking situation intelligently in the interests of the people until we remove private bankers from commercial banking and confine them to speculative and investment financing. This act merely gives the bankers a greater stranglehold upon the legitimate governmental business of banking and currency and control of credit, and will make it more difficult for us to bring about a safe and sane national banking system owned and operated by the Government for and in the interest of the people of the United States.

Another reason why I will not vote for this measure is that it is not a part of the President's program; and I, for one, will not vote for any measure which he does not ask for during this special session, particularly such a measure as this, which I am of the opinion is full of dynamite and might embarrass the President in the event of its passage; for I feel certain that he would not relish the necessity of exercising his veto power at this time, for this bill may not harmonize with his complicated emergency program.

Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I shall offer a motion to recommit with instructions to the Committee on Banking and Currency to limit the excessive salaries of the officers under this act.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 306. (a) The Corporation shall insure the time and demand deposits of all member banks which are class A stockholders of the Corporation as hereinafter prescribed. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever any national bank which is a class A stockholder of the Corporation shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the Comptroller of the Currency, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint the Corporation receiver for such bank. As soon as possible thereafter the Corporation shall organize a new national bank to assume the insured deposit liabilities of such closed bank, to receive new deposits, and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions provided for in this paragraph. For the purposes of this subsection the term "insured deposit liability" shall mean with respect to the owner of any claim arising out of a deposit liability of such closed bank the following percentages of the net amount due to such owner by such closed bank on account of deposit liabilities: 100 percent of the amount by which such net amount does not exceed $10,000; and 75 percent of the amount, if any, by which such net amount exceeds $10,000 but does not exceed $50,000; and 50 percent of the amount, if any, by which such net amount exceeds $50,000: Provided, That, in determining the amount due to such owner for the purpose of fixing such percentage, there shall be added together all net amounts due to such owner in the same capacity or the same right, on account of deposits, regardless of whether such deposits be maintained in his name or in the names of others for his benefit. For the purposes of this subsection, the term "insured deposit liabilities" shall mean the aggregate amount of all such insured deposit liabilities of such closed bank. The Corporation shall determine as expeditiously as possible the net amounts due to depositors of the closed bank and shall make available to the new bank an amount equal to the insured deposit liabilities of such closed bank, whereupon such new bank shall assume the insured deposit liability of such closed bank to each of its depositors, and the Corporation shall be subrogated to all rights against the closed bank of the owners of such deposits and shall be entitled to receive the same dividends from the proceeds of the assets of such closed bank as would have been payable to each such depositor until such dividends shall equal the insured deposit liability to such depositor assumed by the new bank, whereupon all further dividends shall be payable to such depositor. Of the amount thus made available by the Corporation to the new bank, such portion shall be paid to it in cash as may be necessary to enable it to meet immediate cash demands and the remainder shall be credited to it on the books of the Corporation, subject to withdrawal on demand, and shall bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum until withdrawn. The new bank may, with the approval of the Corporation, accept new deposits, which, together with all amounts made available to the new bank by the Corporation, shall be kept on hand in cash, invested in direct obligations of the United States, or deposited with the Corporation or with a Federal Reserve bank. Such new bank shall maintain on deposit with the Federal Reserve bank of its district the reserves required by law of member banks, but shall not be required to subscribe for stock of the Federal Reserve bank until its own capital stock has been subscribed and paid for in the manner hereinafter provided. The articles of association and organization certificate of such new bank may be executed by such representatives of the Corporation as it may designate; the new bank shall not be required to have any directors at the time of its organization, but shall be managed by an executive officer to be designated by the Corporation; and no capital stock need be paid in by the Corporation; but in other respects such bank shall be organized in accordance with the existing provisions of law relating to the organization of national banks; and, until the requisite amount of capital stock for such bank has been subscribed and paid for in the manner hereinafter provided, such bank shall transact no business except that authorized by this subsection and such business as may be incidental to its organization. When in the judgment of the Corporation it is desirable to do so, the Corporation shall offer capital stock of the new bank for sale on such terms and conditions as the Corporation shall deem advisable, in an amount sufficient in the opinion of the Corporation to make possible the conduct of the business of the new bank on a sound basis, but in no event less than that required by section 5158 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, for the organization of a national bank in the place where such new bank is located, giving the stockholders of the closed bank the first opportunity to purchase such stock. Upon proof that an adequate amount of capital stock of the new bank has been subscribed and paid for in cash by subscribers satisfactory to the Comptroller of the Currency, he shall issue to such bank a certificate of authority to commence business, and thereafter it shall be managed by directors elected by its own shareholders and may exercise all of the powers granted by law to national banking associations. If an adequate amount of capital for such new bank is not subscribed and paid in, the Corporation may offer to transfer its business to any other banking institution in the same place which will take over its assets, assume its liabilities, and pay to the Corporation for such business such amount as the Corporation may deem adequate. Unless the capital stock of the new bank is sold or its assets acquired and its liabilities assumed by another banking institution, in the manner herein prescribed, within 2 years from the date of its organization, the Corporation shall place the new bank in voluntary liquidation and wind up its affairs. The Corporation shall open on its books a deposit insurance account and, as soon as possible after taking possession of any closed national bank, the Corporation shall make an estimate of the amount which will be available from all sources for application in satisfaction of the portion of the claims of depositors to which it has been subrogated and shall debit to such deposit insurance account the excess, if any, of the amount made available by the Corporation to the new bank for depositors over and above the amount of such estimate. It shall be the duty of the Corporation to realize as rapidly as possible upon the assets of such closed bank, having due regard to the condition of credit in the district in which such closed bank is located; to enforce the individual liability of the stockholders and directors thereof; and to wind up the affairs of such closed bank in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the liquidation of closed national banks, except as herein otherwise provided, retaining for its own account such portion of the amount realized from such liquidation as it shall be entitled to receive on account of its subrogation to the claims of depositors and paying to depositors and other creditors the amount available for distribution to them, after deducting therefrom their share of the costs of the liquidation of the closed bank. If the total amount realized by the Corporation on account of its subrogation to the claims of depositors be less than the amount of the estimate hereinabove provided for, the deposit insurance account shall be charged with the deficiency and, if the total amount so realized shall exceed the amount of such estimate, such account shall be credited with such excess. With respect to such closed national banks, the Corporation shall have all the rights, powers, and privileges now possessed by or hereafter given receivers of insolvent national banks and shall be subject to the obligations and penalties not inconsistent with the provision of the paragraph to which such receivers are now or may hereafter become subject.

Whenever any State member bank which is a class A stockholder of the Corporation shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the appropriate State authority, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, the Corporation shall accept appointment as receiver thereof, if such appointment be tendered by the appropriate State authority and be authorized or permitted by State law. Thereupon the Corporation shall organize a new national bank, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, to assume the insured deposit liabilities of such closed State bank, to receive new deposits and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions provided for in this subsection. Upon satisfactory recognition of the right of the Corporation to receive dividends on the same basis as in the case of a closed national bank under this subsection, such recognition being accorded by State law, by allowance of claims by the appropriate State authority, by assignment of claims by depositors, or by any other effective method, the Corporation shall make available to such new national bank, in the manner prescribed by this subsection, an amount equal to the insured deposit liabilities of such closed State bank; and the Corporation and such new national bank shall perform all of the functions and duties and shall have all the rights and privileges with respect to such State bank and the depositors thereof which are prescribed by this subsection with respect to closed national banks holding class A stock in the Corporation: Provided, That the rights of depositors and other creditors of such State bank shall be determined in accordance with the applicable provisions of State law: And provided further, That, with respect to such State bank, the Corporation shall possess the powers and privileges provided by State law with respect to a receiver of such State bank, except insofar as the same are in conflict with the provisions of this subsection.

Whenever any State member bank which is a class A stockholder of the Corporation shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the appropriate State authority, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, and the applicable State law does not permit the appointment of the Corporation as receiver of such bank, the Corporation shall organize a new national bank, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, to assume the insured deposit liabilities of such closed State bank, to receive new deposits, and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions provided for in this subsection. Upon satisfactory recognition of the right of the Corporation to receive dividends on the same basis as in the case of a closed national bank under this subsection, such recognition being accorded by State law, by allowance of claims by the appropriate State authority, by assignment of claims by depositors, or by any other effective method, the Corporation shall make available to such new bank, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, the amount of insured deposit liabilities as to which such recognition has been accorded; and such new bank shall assume such insured deposit liabilities and shall in other respects comply with the provisions of this subsection respecting new banks organized to assume insured deposit liabilities of closed national banks. Insofar as possible in view of the applicable provisions of State law, the Corporation shall proceed with respect to the receiver of such closed bank and with respect to the new bank organized to assume its insured deposit liabilities in the manner prescribed by this subsection with respect to closed national banks and new banks organized to assume their insured deposit liabilities, except that the Corporation shall have none of the powers, duties, or responsibilities of a receiver with respect to the winding up of the affairs of such closed State bank. The Corporation, in its discretion, however, may purchase and liquidate any or all of the assets of such bank.

Whenever the net debit balance of the deposit insurance account of the Corporation shall equal or exceed one fourth of 1 percent of the total deposit liabilities of all class A stockholders as of the date of the last preceding call report, the Corporation shall levy upon such stockholders an assessment equal to one fourth of 1 percent of their total deposit liabilities and shall credit the amount collected from such assessment to such deposit insurance account. No bank which is a holder of class A stock shall pay any dividends until all assessments levied upon it by the Corporation shall have been paid in full; and any director or officer of any such bank who participates in the declaration or payment of any such dividend may, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

The term "receiver" as used in this section shall mean a receiver, liquidating agent, or conservator of a national bank, and a receiver, liquidating agent, conservator, commission, person, or other agency charged by State law with the responsibility and the duty of winding up the affairs of an insolvent State member bank.

For the purposes of this section only, the term "national bank" shall include all national banking associations and all banks, banking associations, trust companies, savings bank, and other banking institutions located in the District of Columbia which are members of the Federal Reserve System; and the term "State member bank" shall include all State banks, banking associations, trust companies, savings banks, and other banking institutions organized under the laws of any State, which are members of the Federal Reserve System.

In any determination of the insured deposit liabilities of any closed bank or of the total deposit liabilities of any bank which is a holder of class A stock of the Corporation, for the purposes of this subsection, there shall be excluded the amounts of all deposits of such bank which are payable only at an office thereof located in a foreign country.

The Corporation may make such rules, regulations, and contracts as it may deem necessary in order to carry out the provisions of this section.

Money of the Corporation not otherwise employed shall be invested in securities of the Government of the United States, except that for temporary periods, in the discretion of the board of directors, funds of the Corporation may be deposited in any Federal Reserve bank or with the Treasurer of the United States. When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall be a depository of public moneys, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the said Secretary, and may also be employed as a financial agent of the Government. It shall perform all such reasonable duties as depository of public moneys and financial agent of the Government as may be required of it.

(b) Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from making loans to national banks closed by action of the Comptroller of the Currency, or by vote of their directors, or to State banks closed by action of the appropriate State authorities, or by vote of their directors, or from entering into negotiations to secure the reopening of such banks.

(c) Receivers or liquidators of State banks which are now or may hereafter become insolvent or suspended shall be entitled to offer the assets of such banks for sale to the Corporation or as security for loans from the Corporation, upon receiving permission from the appropriate State authority in accordance with express provision of State law in the case of State banks, or from the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of national banks. The proceeds of every such sale or loan shall be utilized for the same purposes and in the same manner as other funds realized from the liquidation of the assets of such banks. The Comptroller of the Currency may, in his discretion, pay dividends on proved claims at any time after the expiration of the period of advertisement made pursuant to section 5235 of the Revised Statutes, and no liability shall attach to the Comptroller of the Currency or to the receiver of any national bank by reason of any such payment for failure to pay dividends to a claimant whose claim is not proved at the time of any such payment.

(d) The Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time in an amount aggregating not more than three times the amount of its capital, its notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations, to be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations, and to bear such rate or rates of interest, and to mature at such time or times as may be determined by the Corporation: Provided, That the Corporation may sell on a discount basis short-term obligations payable at maturity without interest. The notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations of the Corporation may be secured by assets of the Corporation in such manner as shall be prescribed by its board of directors. Such obligations may be offered for sale at such price or prices as the Corporation may determine.

(e) All notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by the Corporation shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

(f) In order that the Corporation may be supplied with such forms of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations as it may need for issuance under this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prepare such forms as shall be suitable and approved by the Corporation, to be held in the Treasury subject to delivery, upon order of the Corporation. The engraved plates, dies, bed pieces, and other material executed in connection therewith shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Corporation shall reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury for any expenses incurred in the preparation, custody, and delivery of such notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations.

(g) The Corporation shall annually make a report of its operations to the Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of January in each year.

(h) Whoever, for the purpose of obtaining any loan from the Corporation, or any extension or renewal thereof, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, or for the purpose of inducing the Corporation to purchase any assets, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Corporation under this section, makes any statement, knowing it to be false, or willfully overvalues any security, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

(i) Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any obligation or coupon, in imitation of or purporting to be an obligation or coupon issued by the Corporation, or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited obligation or coupon purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, or (3) falsely alters any obligation or coupon issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, or (4) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any falsely altered or spurious obligation or coupon, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(j) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to it or pledged, or otherwise intrusted to it, or (2) with intent to defraud the Corporation or any other body, politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiner of the Corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the Corporation, or without being duly authorized draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other such obligation, or draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(k) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words "Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation", or a combination of any 3 of these 5 words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do business. No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall advertise or otherwise represent falsely by any device whatsoever that his or its deposit liabilities are insured or in anywise guaranteed by the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation, or by the Government of the United States, or by any instrumentality thereof; and no class A stockholder of the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation shall advertise or otherwise represent falsely by any device whatsoever to extent to which or the manner in which its deposit liabilities are insured by the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporations violating this subdivision shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or both.

(1) The provisions of sections 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U.S.C., title 18, ch. 5, secs. 202 to 207, inclusive), insofar as applicable, are extended to apply to contracts or agreements with the corporation under this section, which for the purposes hereof shall be held to include loans, advances, extensions, and renewals thereof, and acceptances, releases, and substitutions of security therefor, purchases or sales of assets, and all contracts and agreements pertaining to the same.

(m) The Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department is authorized to detect, arrest, and deliver into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction any person committing any of the offenses punishable under this section.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair call the attention of the gentlemen to page 57, line 19, where there is a typographical error? Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make the correction.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Also, on page 73, line 19, the word "to" should apparently be "the."

Mr. STEAGALL. I ask unanimous consent that that correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make the correction.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, on page 62, line 17, I move to strike out the words "as rapidly as possible."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, that amendment was made in committee, but by oversight it was left in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. On page 58, I move to strike out the word "member", in line 4. It makes the meaning a little more clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, line 4, strike out the word "member."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. And I move the same amendment on page 63, line 18.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 18, strike out the word "member."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. On page 65, line 3, the same amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 65, line 3, strike out the word "member."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House I should like to call attention to one or two provisions. I think this is a matter all the Members should understand. I should like to call the attention of the chairman to one or two provisions of the bill and ask him to tell the House whether, in his opinion, this deposit-insurance corporation would not be obligated under the bill to insure deposits in every member bank in the Federal Reserve System now closed.

Before the gentleman answers, let me call these facts to his attention, because I think before the bill becomes a law some corrections must be made or the proposed insurance corporation will find itself in trouble.

At the bottom of page 51 in the bill, paragraph (e), it is provided that every member bank shall subscribe to the class A capital stock of the corporation in an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of its total net outstanding time and demand deposits on January 1, 1933, and so forth.

Suppose this bill becomes a law. Suppose at the time there are 50 closed Federal Reserve member banks. The moment the act becomes effective, as a matter of law they would be compelled to come into the system. They must buy class A stock, whether they are closed or not. Even closed banks have outstanding time and demand deposits. Any receiver or conservator of a closed bank would of course find it to his advantage to pay to the insurance corporation one quarter of 1 percent of his outstanding time and demand deposits and thus insure the deposits in the closed banks. Now let us turn to page 58, section 306:

The Corporation shall insure the time and demand deposits of all member banks which are class A stockholders of the Corporation as hereinafter prescribed.

Therefore, in the case of Federal Reserve member banks, now closed but which become holders of class A stock, the insurance corporation is obligated, under the mandatory provisions of this bill, to insure their deposits. I present this point of view because I think there is a good deal in it. I am interested to have the Chairman's explanation.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, there is not the slightest thought of attempting to insure deposits in banks that are closed. The provision applies insurance to all banks subscribing for the stock of the insurance corporation. Of course no bank in the hands of a receiver, a liquidator, or a conservator could subscribe for stock unless there were a specific provision authorizing such subscription.

Mr. BEEDY. May I interrupt at that point to say that there is not merely authority here, but that it is mandatory upon every member bank to purchase stock.

Mr. STEAGALL. A closed bank could not do that after it was in the hands of a receiver or liquidator or conservator.

Mr. BEEDY. Why not?

Mr. STEAGALL. Because it would have no power. The directors are supplanted in authority by the receiver.

Mr. BEEDY. The power is given it under the law, when they are compelled to act.

Mr. STEAGALL. It applies to class A stockholders, and no bank becomes a stockholder except as a bank. There is no provision by which a conservator or a liquidating agent or a receiver can subscribe for stock.

Mr. BEEDY. My thought is this. When a bank is closed, it is none the less a bank.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have no objection, if the gentleman desires, to an amendment which will provide that this title insuring deposits shall be construed to apply to deposits that are subject to withdrawal at the time the title becomes effective, though I do not regard it as at all necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am quite definite of the idea that no amendment is necessary, but I should not object to such an amendment if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. BEEDY. I think the insurance fund ought to be protected in that way.

Mr. STEAGALL. I know the gentleman understands the practical situation is such that this bill will never come from conference if there is the slightest danger that the language used would be construed to insure deposits in a closed bank. I do not think it is necessary at all.

Mr. BEEDY. I am not going to offer the amendment, but I wanted to get this into the Record, because I think it might be helpful, and I want to help the gentleman make this insurance provision effective.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 25 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he defer his request until we conclude the reading of the bill.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman knows that I have been tied up in the Ways and Means Committee morning, night, and afternoon.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not want to be stubborn about the matter, but there are several such requests, and I again ask the gentleman to defer his request until we come to the end of the bill, and if I can do it, I shall be very glad to take care of the gentleman.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Very well. I withdraw my request.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. In line 22, page 73, I suggest that the word "corporations" should be changed to the singular, "corporation", to conform to the rest of the language.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is quite correct. I ask unanimous consent that the correction may be made, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word from the section.

Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] said he would support this bill, but he reminded us that the bill was an administration measure, and if not a success the Democratic Party would be held responsible. The gentleman spoke wisely. He can support the bill, for if it is a success, he participates in the success, and if it is a failure it will be the failure of the Democratic leadership.

If we are to pass this bill, we might just as well take down the statutes of Benjamin Franklin throughout the country. We might just as well tell the youth of the country to cease saving. We might just as well tell the strong to load on their backs the weak and carry them, because this act seeks to penalize those banks which in the last few years have practiced sound banking and come through, in favor of those that did not, and who are now suffering.

On yesterday I asked the distinguished chairman of the Committee when he arose to make his opening statement if any of the strong banks of the country were in favor of his insurance plan. The gentleman seemed to be a bit surprised at the interrogation. He could not tell me of any banks that were in favor of it. Now, I would ask the Committee if they would be so generous as to permit me to read a resolution adopted by the American Bankers Association. It is as follows:

The American Bankers Association has long been opposed to the compulsory guaranty of bank deposits in any form, and is on record by the following resolution setting forth its position on this subject:

Resolved, That the American Bankers Association is unalterably opposed to any plan looking to the mutual guaranty of deposits either by a State or the Nation for the following reasons:

1. It is a function outside of State or National Government.
2. It is unsound in principle.
3. It is impractical and misleading.
4. It is revolutionary in character.
5. It is subversive to sound economics.
6. It will lower the standard of our present banking system.
7. It is productive of and encourages bad banking.
8. It is a delusion that a tax upon the strong will prevent failures of the weak.
9. It discredits honesty, ability, and conservation.
10. A loss suffered by one bank jeopardizes all banks.
11. The public must eventually pay the tax.
12. It will cause and not avert panics.

Resolved, That the American Bankers Association is unalterably opposed to any plan looking to the mutual guaranty of deposits either by a State or the Nation, believing it to be impractical, unsound, misleading, revolutionary in character, and subversive to sound economics, placing a tool in the hands of the unscrupulous and inexperienced for reckless banking, and knowing further that such a law would weaken our banking system and jeopardize the interest of the people.

I say to you as a lawyer that if a question came before a law court which an ordinary man was not familiar with, and if an expert witness was called, the witness would first have to qualify as knowing more about the subject than the ordinary man knows. In this matter I call as my witnesses the members of the American Bankers Association to testify as expert witnesses as to the worth in their opinion of the insurance features in this bill. On their testimony I rest my case and my vote. I accept their judgment in the matter. Hence I shall vote against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAIBORNE] has expired.

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEHR. My colleague [Mr. DINGELL] is unavoidably absent from this session, being confined to his home on account of illness. The gentleman has prepared an amendment to paragraph (a) of this section. My inquiry is, may I interpose that amendment at this time in his behalf?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CANNON of Missouri). Amendments may not be proposed by proxy. The gentleman may offer the amendment himself.

Mr. LEHR. I wish to offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEHR: Page 58, line 22, after the word "liabilities", insert "100 percent of the amount by which such net amount does not exceed $2,500. This provision shall take effect not later than July 1, 1933."

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Chairman, I may say in behalf of the gentleman who prepared and drafted this particular amendment that the purpose and intent thereof was to conform to a similar amendment which we understand will be presented in the Senate by Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan.

Those of us who came here with the idea and intention of supporting a bill insuring deposits in banks were hopeful that a real, 100-percent insurance deposit bill would be passed. I am not insensible to the argument that will be raised, that it will be physically impossible for an examination of the banks to be made by the 1st day of July 1933 in order to determine what banks may take advantage of this act; but I just want to make this suggestion to the members of this committee, that all the banks, so we have been informed, whether they be State banks or national banks, or State member banks of the Federal Reserve, have undergone during the past 3 months a very stringent examination, and I have been told by the Secretary of the Treasury and by other high officials of the administration that today there are no banks open except those which are sound and which are solvent. If that be true, then the policies of this bill can be put into effect by July 1. In that connection, I just want to say that with the upturn in business, with the increase in commodity prices, with the apparent return to happier days that seems to be the hope of all of us at this time, one thing remains, particularly in the State of Michigan, for us to attempt to accomplish to bring back this confidence 100 percent in the hearts of the people of this country, and that is to make it possible for these banks to be reopened; to make it possible for the people to place back their deposits in the banks.

In this connection may I read from a letter I received only this morning from the editor of a small-town newspaper in the State of Michigan in which he says this:

I am neither a banker nor a bank stockholder. I am only one of the small-depositor class who feels this great need.

I know that no amount of money will be returned to the care of the banks unless there is some form of guaranty. The guaranty may be restricted to a certain amount or to some certain class of deposits, but the small depositor, the man with active money and a little surplus, is just not going to use the bank until he can get this kind of assurance. All this takes money out of circulation and slows up the wheels of progress to recovery.

The purpose and intent of this amendment is simply to place into immediate effect on the 1st day of July 1933 this insurance provision insofar as it affects 100 percent of the deposits up to $2,500.

I submit that if this bill is the bill which we have been told it is, the sooner we do this the quicker we are going to bring back the confidence of the depositors of this great country. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas has very clearly pointed out certain of the chief defects in this amendment.

If a provision is inserted to make the bill immediately operative as to deposits up to a certain amount, it follows that banks that are in the Federal Reserve System and have their examinations by Federal authority down to date would probably encounter very little difficulty in securing admission. But State banks which have most of the small deposits would probably be delayed in securing admission, and hardships result. That is one reason why the amendment ought not to be adopted.

There is still another difficulty. I will say to the gentleman I am just as anxious as he is to bring the relief to be afforded by this legislation, but I have not the power to write a deposit guaranty bill and declare it law, nor has the gentleman on my left any such power.

It has been a task of major proportions to secure this legislation and to make the progress we have made down to this hour. The Treasury Department insists that there shall be time for a survey and for an investigation of conditions respecting banks that are to come into the system; and a further cleaning-up process may be had before this law is put into final operation. While I am anxious and impatient to have the law become operative, I can appreciate the reasons for the delay provided for.

The safe, prudent thing to do is to stand on what we have and await a time with patience, let the administration conduct its survey, set up the organization, and have the corporation prepare necessary rules and regulations and take proper preliminary steps to put the system into operation.

I know the views that will dominate and control this insurance corporation. We must trust these powers, we must trust the administration, we must trust the President of the United States to go along with this undertaking or it cannot be accomplished.

I should like to have the law become operative tomorrow. I should like to have done this 10 years ago and covering all deposits in every solvent State bank in the United States, but I have not been able to accomplish these results in my own time. Such things have to be worked out by consultation and conference and by agreed judgment. That is what has been done, and I beg the House not to disturb this provision of the bill, and if you will not, we will at no very distant day have an effective insurance-deposit system for banks in the United States.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield?

Mr. FULLER. In conversation with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, he stated that my objections were sought to be covered by the committee in section 311, which provides that "the foregoing provisions of this title shall take effect at such time as the President by proclamation declares that such surveys have been made" and so forth. Is it the understanding of the chairman of the committee that it is expected the President will see that such surveys are made not only as to members of the Federal Reserve System, but the State banks as well?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is the very purpose of the provision. The member banks of the Federal Reserve System are examined already under Federal authority, and there would be no delay so far as they are concerned, but it is desired that the cleaning-up process go further.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we are coming to the final stages of this particular piece of legislation. I am of the opinion that there are comparatively few Members of this House who realize what is going to happen when certain sections of this bill are put into operation.

I made some observations yesterday in regard to the open-market provisions of this bill and the authority that is given to the Federal Reserve Board in this connection. I stated there was a broadening of the uses of the open-market operations to the extent of the financing of millions of dollars' worth of foreign transactions in which the people of the United States are in no wise interested. Now we have a confirmation of this in today's papers. If you have noted them you have seen that they confirm what I stated here yesterday that Prof. O. M. W. Sprague, of the Bank of England, is back here again and is to be put in charge, apparently, of the inflationary program which was attached to the farm bill.

It is clearly indicated in press reports that what I stated yesterday is true, that the money to be issued under the inflation program is going to be handled under the direction of Professor Sprague, of the Bank of England, and the notes that are issued, instead of being circulated here freely, are to be used for the purchase of foreign open-market paper and for the so-called "purpose of stabilizing foreign exchange." These notes are to be shipped out of this country and held by the foreign countries as first mortgages against everything in the United States. These notes, whether United States or Federal Reserve, are obligations of the United States, and we are to get this open-market paper, representing British, German, or Chinese, or Japanese, or whatever bills they may be—any kind of paper that gets in the open-bill market.

I want to call your attention to the fact that notwithstanding the fact that many of these banks have been opened, there are hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of this foreign—mostly German—paper, frozen as solid as a cake of ice, in the banks of this country today. You are now going to put more of it in the banks under this authority.

I want to appeal to the Members of the House not to pass this bill, but to return it to the committee and have the House appoint a committee to study what has caused the situation that you are trying to correct by a guaranty of deposits.

On the opening day of Congress, when we passed the banking bill and when there was no opportunity given to men who were against it to vote against it, I stated I was against it, and I tried to vote against it; and I stated on the floor of this House at that time that I would never support a bill proposing to guarantee the deposits in the banks that have been looted by the bankers of this country unless you first fixed their responsibility and they were dealt with properly under the laws of the land.

You are now guaranteeing the deposits in these banks when the assets of the banks have been looted by these international bankers; and, today, at the other end of the Capitol, you have exhibit A. The members of the Morgan group are there. They are the ones who introduced a lot of these investments into these banks and they are now answering over there.

I want to now suggest to you that instead of passing this bill you wait until the examination of these bankers is completed. You are going to find, unless I miss my guess, much of the skulduggery unearthed, if this committee does its duty; and you are going to find how they have affected Federal Reserve operations and are now asking for an extension of the right to further use Federal Reserve credit to finance foreign obligations in the United States.

I beg of you that before you do this you look into the causes of the situation which you are trying to cover up by guaranteeing deposits in these banks. You are still dealing with results.

Of course, the bankers of the type of Albert H. Wiggin and Charles E. Mitchell want the deposits in their banks guaranteed. Of course they do, and you are not guaranteeing simply the deposits of the little banks of the country. You are guaranteeing the deposits of the Chase National Bank, the National City Bank, and the Chicago banks that hold Insull securities, as well as all the other banks.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, without any further discussion, in order to make assurance doubly sure that we do not wreck the insurance portions of this bill, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 68, line 2, after the word "country", insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The insurance provisions of this section and the right to subscribe to class A stock shall not apply to any bank closed by competent authority or whose deposits are not subject to withdrawal by reason of insolvency."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to that amendment, and I ask that it be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Yesterday afternoon, on page 28, line 25, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] offered an amendment reducing the amount of par-value stock which a director in a bank would be required to hold.

Now, I do not believe the House when it passed on that situation had in mind what the situation now is or what the effect of this provision would be, nor do I believe the committee understood what effect it would have.

The requirement to hold $2,000 par-value stock makes it practically impossible for the $25,000 bank, which we have permitted the organization of over the last 10 years, to continue. The requirement for a director in that bank was only $500. It makes it exceedingly difficult for a bank with $50,000 capital, which formerly required 10 shares to operate, to continue. I believe that this provision will result in the closing of thousands of small banks of the country. I hope when the proper time comes that the committee will permit a return to that section for a corrective amendment.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, in thanking the gentleman for his interest in the matter, I consulted with several members of the committee, and have drawn a modified amendment which several members of the committee have assured me they will not oppose, and I trust that I shall have unanimous consent at the proper time to return to that section.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 308. Section 9 of the act entitled "An act to establish Postal Savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1910, as amended (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 759), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That no such security shall be required in case of such part of the deposits as are insured under title III of the Banking Act of 1933."

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Michigan: Page 74, line 24, after "Sec. 308," insert "The second sentence of."

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to correct an error made in the drafting of this section. As the section now reads, the language after the "Provided", in line 5, page 75, is placed at the end of the paragraph. It should be after the second sentence in the section amended. This amendment is agreed to by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOEPEL: Page 75, after line 8, insert the following as an addition to section 308 of the bill: "Provided, That section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to establish postal-savings depositories', approved June 25, 1910 (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 754), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Deposits in any such account may be of two classes: (1) Savings deposits as provided for in this act prior to the date of the enactment of this paragraph; and (2) circulating deposits. Circulating deposits shall not bear interest, and no such deposit may be maintained except in amounts of $1 or multiples thereof. Receipts for any circulating deposit shall be furnished to the depositor in such denominations of $1 or any multiple thereof as the depositor may request. Such receipts, when countersigned by the depositor, shall be a lawful circulating medium and shall be negotiable in such manner as the Board of Trustees may by regulations prescribe, except that such regulations shall conform as nearly as may be practicable to the law governing the negotiation of express money orders or travelers' checks. Any such receipt shall be redeemable at any post office upon proper identification of the bearer under such rules and regulations as the Board of Trustees may prescribe, and upon redemption, the amount of the receipts redeemed shall be charged against circulating deposits of the depositor."

"Provided further, That section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the Postal Savings System, and for other purposes', approved May 18, 1916 (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 759), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Postal Savings funds shall be deposited in solvent banks to the credit of the United States Treasury, or remitted direct to the United States Treasury, under such rules and regulations as the Board of Trustees may prescribe, for the purchase of United States bonds or other United States securities and/or for deposit in a special fund for repayment to depositors."

"Provided further, That the first sentence of section 6 of such act, as amended (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 756), is hereby amended by striking out the figure '$2,500' and inserting in lieu thereof the figure '$5,000.'"

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. LUCE. Simply to say that because we amend one section of a law, I had not understood that we would amend other sections of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I do, on the point of order. This amendment is an amendment to the Postal Savings Act approved June 25, 1910, and is intended to give banking facilities to the American public where there will be guaranty of deposits which will result in the savings of millions of dollars to the American people and the Treasury. This section 308 is an amendment offered by the Banking Committee, which is framed primarily to protect the interest of the American banker. I am going to concede the point of order and I ask unanimous consent to present another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOEPEL: Page 74, line 24, strike out all of section 308 beginning on line 24, page 74, and continuing to include line 8 on page 75.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, when I took the floor a little while ago my banker friend from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] got up and berated me for speaking in the interest of the people. I admit that he has a perfect right to be a banker, but he brought out facts in his remarks which pertain to this section of the bill which I should like to call to your attention. First, let me preface my remarks with the statement that he criticized me for one time being a Republican and not supporting the administration. I have voted for the administration measures 50 percent, and probably shall vote for this measure. The gentleman's efforts to criticize me for one time being a Republican and today being a Democrat is ill-advised. No one can deny that the Republicans elected our President. Mr. Hearst in his editorial in today's Herald stated that the Republicans have the brains and the Democrats have a heart. I concede that the Democrats have a heart, but their heart is pulsating every day primarily in the interest of the bankers, so graciously provided for in this bill, and not in the interest of the common man, which is my concern.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. HOEPEL. I shall come back to the subject. This gentleman banker from Arkansas, Mr. FULLER, who berated me—

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I am speaking on this motion and bringing up his statements. The gentleman from Arkansas stated that the Postal-Savings business was not making any revenue for the bankers.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. HOEPEL. I am speaking to my amendment in furtherance to the statement which Mr. FULLER made in reference to the Postal Savings. He said they did not return any profit to the bankers. This is one point I should like to call attention to in this bill, to which Mr. FULLER referred. The present law makes it mandatory for the banks of America to put up bonds or securities whenever they receive deposit of Government funds. This section of this bill relieves the banks from depositing with the Government security for the postal funds they receive from the Post Office Department at 2½ percent and which they relend to us at 7 percent.

I have observed the gentlemen on the Democratic side, and I notice that is where all the noise comes from.

If you have ever been on a farm and saw them tie a hog, you know that the hog squeals. I am not tied. I am speaking my convictions. Some of you gentlemen may be tied, but I am not and am speaking as an American citizen. [Applause and laughter.] I am speaking on this amendment, and I am speaking specifically. The Government provides two thirds of the money which is to go into this guaranty fund, yet we are making it possible for the bankers to get over $1,000,000,000 of American funds without any security. I say it is unfair for the American people to put up a guaranty to protect their own money. That is the reason I have presented this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPEL] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPEL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOBBINS: On page 75, line 8, after the figures "1933", add the following: "Provided further, That no post office which has within its delivery limits a bank or banks whose deposits are insured under the provisions of said title III shall accept or maintain deposits for an aggregate balance of more than $500 from or to the credit of any individual who resides within the same delivery limits."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS] desire to be heard?

Mr. DOBBINS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. LUCE. I understand all debate on this section and all amendments thereto is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

MEETING OF WAR VETERANS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one half minute to make an announcement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. There will be a meeting of all war veterans of the House in the caucus room of the old House Office Building at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

REGULATION OF BANKING

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 309. A national bank, reserve bank, or other member bank as defined by section 1 of title I of this act, or any bank or trust company whose deposits are guaranteed in any respect under the provisions of this title, or any employee of any such bank, shall not either directly or indirectly act as an agent or broker for any partnership, association, or corporation engaged in the business of writing or selling any form of insurance. Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this section of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or both.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Insert the word "individual" between the words "any" and "partnership" in line 14, page 75; and on page 75 strike out the period in line 20, insert a semicolon, and add the following proviso: "Provided, That this section shall not become effective until 2 years after the date of the enactment of this act."

Mr. GOSS. Is this by direction of the committee?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. By direction of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, the first word, "individual", is inserted in line 14 in order to correct an omission.

The remaining portion of the amendment is a proviso which places the effective date of divorcing banks from the insurance business at 2 years and thus in this respect alone places them on an equality with affiliates. Section 309 divorces banks from the insurance business; and, in case this amendment is adopted, that provision would not become effective until 2 years after the date of the enactment of this act. In the light of other provisions of the bill, this seems right and consistent. To accomplish this reform suddenly might work undesired hardships.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is there anything in the section or in the amendment that would prevent the director of a bank from writing insurance?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. There is nothing in the section that would prevent a director. It applies only to employees actively connected with the bank.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Nor in the amendment?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. No, sir.

Mr. Sisson. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. Sisson. I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if it was not understood in the committee or in conversation between the gentleman and myself today that the effectiveness of this provision should be postponed for only 1 year?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I told the gentleman I would register no objection to such an amendment, but that I would offer my amendment and the gentleman could offer his as an amendment to my amendment and I would interpose no objection. Though I strongly favor the principle or reform sought in this provision, I felt we should approach it gradually, and especially in consideration of the problems facing the banks in small communities.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. At the danger of repetition I wish to ask the gentleman if the cashier of a small State bank, for instance, writes applications for insurance, is that practice prohibited by the language of this section?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I think it would be.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I should like to make an explanation to the gentleman preliminary to asking a question. I received a letter from the cashier of a small State bank who explained that during this depression he has been able to eke out a livelihood by writing applications for insurance, and thereby to some extent relieve the bank.

I wrote back to him for an elucidation of his views on this section, but have not had time to get his answer. Now, the question is, Would that man be prevented from writing applications for insurance?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That involves the meaning of the word "employee" as related to a bank's personnel. It is intended to cover him.

The reason this amendment has been offered is because there are a great many small banks in the smaller communities of the country which combine insurance with the regular banking work in order to supplement the meager salaries of their employees and augment the bank's income. They should have time to work out. That is the chief reason for the second portion of this amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, in the case to which the gentleman referred, was the bank itself an agent of the insurance company?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. It varies; sometimes the bank and sometimes an employee.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am just asking a question that fits the case where a bank employee or officer, merely as a side line, writes applications for insurance.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is the gentleman asking me a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; whether that is prohibited.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I think under the language of this section it would apply regardless, whether it was a side line or his main activity and especially if his success was due to the fact that he had the bank's support.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit a further question, To what abuses is this section directed?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. In the first place, there were some members of the committee who did not believe that insurance was a proper banking function. In the second place, they recognized that it was unfair competition because there is always more or less an element of credit coercion. There were other objections which all familiar with this practice admit. Of course there are isolated cases where it might work fairly and without abuses. They would seem to be exceptions, however.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And in the third place, is it not true that in many instances loans are refused unless the policies of insurance are written at the particular bank?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I have heard of such cases.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask what is the amendment now before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the Hancock amendment.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the House with a speech at this hour, but I hope the gentleman from North Carolina, for whom I have a very high regard, will agree to drop that portion of his amendment which would authorize a continuance, for 2 more years, of this practice by banks of selling insurance. We discussed it quite thoroughly in the committee and I think the majority of us felt that it is unfair to a poor man who wants to borrow some money on his home, to be very adroitly held up by the inquiry, "Where do you carry your insurance?" To this question the would-be borrower replies, "Well, I am insured in such and such a company." Whereupon the bank replies, "We are sorry but our bank is interested in such a company. If you should see fit to cancel your present policy and take out a policy through our agency, we shall be glad to talk over a loan to you."

All banks do not operate this way, but as the gentleman from North Carolina knows, a great deal of injustice has been worked, and much unfair competition practiced by banks which sell insurance. And it certainly is unfair to the man in the insurance business. It is just as reasonable to have insurance men authorized to do a banking business as it is to have the banks invade the insurance field.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. MORAN. In regard to the danger involved from the standpoint of increased income to the bank, the same argument might be applied to putting a filling station in front of the bank. Another danger involved that was not pointed out by the gentleman from North Carolina, in addition to coercion, is that the banker is putting the commissions in his own personal pocket. Therefore, the banker who loans the money might be induced to loan other people's money for the sake of a personal commission to himself. This is a reason why banking and insurance should be divorced in the interest of the depositors of the country.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, to save time let us consider a division of the pending amendment. There are two propositions involved in it. One is the inclusion of the word "individual." The other deals with a 2-year period of extension. Let us have this amendment divided so we can vote down the 2-year extension proposal but give the gentleman the other amendment he desires. I ask that the amendment be divided.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. May I call the attention of the House to the fact that if you make this provision preventing banks from doing business as agents of insurance companies effective at once, it will be the only provision in this bill that is effective immediately upon the enactment of the bill. Is not this right?

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, no!

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. In other words, we are extending the time for the separation of affiliates 2 years, holding company affiliates so many years. Why not extend the effective date of the insurance feature to 2 years? Would it not then be more in harmony with the other sections? If one is done now, all might be done.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question.

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. PEYSER. I merely wanted to state that the extension of 2 years in this particular class is not necessary because if an insurance man who is now connected with a bank is under contract he is not deprived of any commissions which he might have earned in the past. His contract continues.

There is nothing in there in my judgment that shows any reason why it should be extended 2 years for the same reasons that applied to other sections.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does not the gentleman agree that they should have some time within which to adjust themselves to the reform sought?

Mr. PEYSER. I do not think they should have any time.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is it not true that many of them will have a very difficult time disposing of their insurance agencies immediately under existing conditions?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, I should like to know whether we are dividing the pending amendment; and if so, what part are we to vote upon first?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment consists of two substantive propositions, either one of which would stand without the other.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. At the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], the vote will be on the first portion of the amendment and then the vote will come on the remaining portion.

The question is on the first portion of the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

First portion of the amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Insert the word "individual" followed by a comma between the words "any" and "partnership", in line 14, page 75.

The first portion of the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the second portion of the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second portion of the amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Strike out the period, in line 20, page 75, insert a semicolon and add the following proviso: "Provided, This section shall not become effective until 2 years after the date of the enactment of this act."

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer an amendment making the effective date of this section 1 year. It has been called to my attention by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] that this is unnecessary, because it does not become effective until 1 year after the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933.

As a member of the committee, I may say that I am not questioning the veracity or the good faith of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], but I think there was some misunderstanding when he said that it was agreed in committee that this should be deferred for 2 years.

From my conversations with insurance agencies and with their policyholders I believe it is entirely unnecessary, and even in fairness to the banks themselves, that we should postpone this prohibition for 2 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the second portion of the amendment.

The second portion of the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 75, line 13, after the word "any" strike out the word "such" and insert in lieu thereof the words "national bank or reserve."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would mean that employees of a State bank could sell insurance.

I do not believe it is good policy for the National Government or the Federal Congress to say that the employees of a State bank cannot sell insurance, and this is exactly what this section now provides so far as these banks that will come under the provisions of this guaranty provision are concerned, and I presume that practically all banks will hope to get some of the benefits of this insurance of deposits.

My amendment would limit the operations of the bill in this respect to employees of national banks and reserve banks. In other words, the employees of small State banks in the small rural communities could continue carrying on the business they have been engaged in during these years.

As a Representative from a rural community, I may say that there is no evil in connection with the selling of insurance by the small-town bankers. There may be some evils so far as the larger banks are concerned, but I am not prepared to say that there is or that there is not. I want to call your attention to the fact that we have a lot of small State banks capitalized at $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 and the employees of these small banks are necessarily working for a small salary. The cashiers who have the responsibility of these small banks are getting salaries around $125 or $150 or $175 a month. They are responsible business men of these small communities, and because of their experience many of the farmers, as well as other people in their communities, ask them to assist in providing fire insurance and other kinds of insurance, and I do not believe it is the intention of the Members of this House to say that the Federal Congress is going to prohibit these small bankers from carrying on this business and giving this service to their communities.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I gladly yield to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS. I know of towns of 200,000 inhabitants which have State banks. The gentleman's amendment would permit the State banks in towns of this size, as well as the smaller towns, to sell insurance while prohibiting a national bank across the street from having the same privilege.

Mr. BOILEAU. I want to make this distinction.

Mr. BYRNS. I think the gentleman should limit his amendment, if he wants it to go into the bill, to the small towns to which he has referred.

Mr. BOILEAU. I want to call the gentleman's attention, as well as the attention of all State-rights Democrats, to the fact that we have State banking systems and that we should let the State authorities have something to say about the system. I have no fault to find if the Congress wants to restrict the national banks, because that is within our province, but I do say that we should not restrict the operations of the small State banks. We should leave these banks to the banking departments and the State legislatures of the various States.

I would gladly move to strike out the entire section, but I know that would be futile, but I do ask, in behalf of these small-town bankers and in behalf of the small banks for this consideration, and I believe every Representative from every rural community in this country should vote for this amendment.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, just a word so that we may clarify the situation.

The law now forbids national banks to sell insurance on the ground that it is not a legitimate banking function. The evils that have grown up from the sale of insurance, and the complaints that have come to us is the result largely of this practice on the part of State banks, and in this bill we are trying to remedy it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Are all national banks prohibited from the sale of insurance?

Mr. BEEDY. All except those in places of 6,000 inhabitants or less. The provision in this bill would forbid all banks, State and national alike, to sell insurance.

Mr. BOILEAU. If you feel that the national banks should be prohibited that is the function of Congress, but I do not think that you ought to prohibit it in State banks—that is the function of the State legislatures.

Mr. BEEDY. Well, the House can decide for itself whether it is proper for us to forbid any bank which seeks to come under the insurance of deposits provision, to stop selling insurance. I think it is wise and proper for us to adopt such a provision.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 75, line 20, insert, after the word "both", the following: "Provided, That this section shall not apply to any bank located in a town or city of less than 5,000 population."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a substitute. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McGUGIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 75, line 20, insert, after the word "both", the following proviso: "Provided, That this section shall not apply to any bank located in a town or city of less than 5,000 population."

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I was in sympathy with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I think he is right. I realize from the argument suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that when you limit it to State banks it may go to those banks of $100,000 capital or more. My amendment, irrespective of whether it is a State or a national bank, provides that it shall not apply to towns of less than 5,000 population.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say that I am opposed to a bank going into the insurance business in either the large or small towns. [Applause.] My objection was due to the fact that the gentleman from Wisconsin was talking in favor of small towns, whereas his amendment would have permitted it in large cities. I am opposed to it in any event.

Mr. McGUGIN. Here is the situation: Why should gentlemen want to insist throughout the bill on putting in provisions that work a hardship on the small rural country communities of this country?

Mr. PEYSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. PEYSER. If it is an evil, and I believe it is, why have it in towns where small banks are, because these banks cannot fight the evil as well as the big banks?

Mr. McGUGIN. The answer is that the big banks create most of the evils.

I do not believe there is one country bank in a hundred which says to its customers, "You cannot borrow from this bank unless you buy insurance in this bank." It is a matter of convenience, it is a matter of business in these small communities.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman fails to recognize that in some of these small towns there is one man who is being paid as a cashier or employee of the bank who is making in addition to his salary these commissions on the insurance that he sells, and that at the same time in the same town there is some other man who is trying to eke out a business writing insurance, but who cannot compete successfully with the bank.

Mr. McGUGIN. In these small banks the cashiers are drawing small salaries, $75 or $100 a month, and if they carry on a little insurance business and add to their income in that way, it is of benefit to the community.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. This section will prohibit the employee of the small State bank from entering into the insurance business, but I can find nothing in the language that will prohibit the directors of a big bank from doing the same thing, because it prohibits employees and not officers.

Mr. McGUGIN. This bill will prevent the janitor of a little country bank from making a little on the side by selling insurance.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped it would be possible for me to offer a perfecting amendment. I realize that the temper of the House at this hour of the day is such that it is hardly possible to get any kind of an amendment adopted unless it be offered by a member of the committee. I appreciate the strategy of the chairman of the committee in asking that I refrain from asking permission to return to a section of the bill to offer an amendment until after the bill had been read and practically completed. I am in favor of this legislation, but I wanted to offer an amendment with the hope that it would prevent officials who might be termed crooked from absolutely destroying a bank from inside. I wanted to offer an amendment that had been adopted already in at least one State, but I realize it is practically impossible to get Members of the House to consent to go back 25 or 50 pages at this late hour of the day for the purpose of offering that amendment.

I have been interested in this subject possibly as long, if not longer than any other Member on the floor. Many years ago I introduced the first bill that was ever presented to either House of Congress providing a system for the guaranty of bank deposits. I see there the chairman of the committee, who granted me a hearing on that bill, and the hearing still remains in typewritten form, because there was no sympathy for a measure of this kind. However, year after year I have continued to introduce a bill, hoping the time would finally arrive when the people would realize that unless something is done to give people confidence in banking institutions they would not patronize them to the extent of putting their money in them. I hope this bill will cause money to cease going into Postal Savings, and thus be carried away to some sections of the country, denying legitimate institutions from having that which they should have to take care of normal business.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may include as a part of my remarks the statements that have never been printed, made by me before the Banking Committee 12 years ago. It will be interesting to note that some of the members of this committee participated in the hearing, and for the reason there has been a complete upheaval in banking since that date I am convinced that this legislation will do more to cause our citizens to take their money out of hiding than any other measure, if enacted into a law. On account of being otherwise engaged as a member of the Ways and Means Committee in holding a hearing on the so-called "public works bill", which caused the committee to remain in session morning, afternoon, and night, it was not possible for me to be on the floor during the early consideration of this measure. Therefore I have been denied the opportunity of offering an amendment that, in my opinion, would have caused further safeguards to be thrown around this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY,
Thursday, January 20, 1921.

The committee at 12 o'clock noon proceeded to the consideration of H.R. 15012, Hon. LOUIS T. McFADDEN (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen of the committee, Representative McCLINTIC wants to be heard for a few minutes on the bill he introduced in connection with the guaranty of deposits of banks and, if there is no objection, we will hear Mr. McCLINTIC at this time.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES V. McCLINTIC, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to respectfully direct your attention to H.R. 15012, a bill I have introduced, which provides for the protection of deposits in national banks. I take it that it is the object of every committee to legislate as much efficiency as possible in the various branches of government over which they have a certain amount of jurisdiction. I am not a banker, and yet it has been my privilege to serve as a member of a banking committee in the State Senate of my State, and I had a little to do with the present State laws which regulate and govern State banks in Oklahoma.

The subject of guaranteeing deposits in national banks is not a new proposition. A number of States already have this law and, up to the present time if I am correctly informed, no depositor in any State bank has ever lost one dollar because of a bank failure. If you will read the report recently made by the Federal Reserve Board, you will note that every Federal Reserve district has indirectly been carrying on a campaign to get as many member banks to join their System as possible. You will find that there is a certain amount—I do not want to use the word "jealousy", but there is a certain amount of rivalry between the national banks and the State banks.

In other words, the systems that are in operation at the present time bring about a great deal of duplication, in that the State banks maintain separate machinery in order to take care of their institutions, and the national banks do likewise. There are at present approximately 8,000 national banks in comparison with some 22,000 other banking institutions. There are 160 bank examiners which cost the Government approximately $750,000. In my opinion, the time will come when there will be no necessity for State banks. In other words, there is no more need for a separate system of State banks and national banks than there is for two street-car systems in the same city. But until that question has been solved, or until those interested in this subject can meet upon a common basis, we will continue to have this duplication which brings about a great increase of expenditures to the taxpayers of the country.

I have prepared a bill here which establishes a separate guaranty fund in each Federal Reserve district in the United States; yet I have placed the supervision of the same under one head so that uniform rules and regulations can be put into effect for carrying on the plan. The bill which I have introduced provides for amending the law which makes disposition of the profits made by the Federal Reserve Banking System. It would be amended so that after the dividends are taken care of to those who own stock in the various Federal Reserve banks, 10 percent of the profits each year will be set aside in each Federal Reserve district into a guaranty fund and this, with an additional assessment against each national bank, will provide sufficient money to take care of the needs of any bank that might be so unfortunate as to fail in the future.

In States where they have guaranty laws, when a bank becomes impaired to the extent that it cannot meet its obligations, instead of closing the door and waiting for a receiver to be appointed, the bank examiner quickly makes some kind of an arrangement with other persons to take charge of the bank and, instead of the assets being unloaded or forced to be sold at such a price as they will bring, the bank changes hands; the assets are collected in the regular manner and, as a rule, the loss is reduced to a very low minimum. In other words, in speaking before the House the other day, I made the statement that in Oklahoma, when there was a bank failure—that is, a State bank failure—there was no more excitement over the same than there was over an ordinary swapping of a horse. By having a law of that kind, we have reduced our losses to a very low figure, and at present we have a very large fund, which is sufficient to take care of the needs of all of those who are affiliated in that system.

It is my hope that this committee will feel warranted in allowing a hearing to be held at a later date so that those who are interested in this subject may have the opportunity to come before this body and offer such suggestions as they would care to offer in order to perfect the legislation. I realized that the bill I have introduced possibly should be changed in some places. In other words, national banks with whom I have talked and who have written me, have made certain suggestions which meet my approbation.

I am thoroughly of the opinion that whenever we can establish a guaranty fund for the protection of depositors in national banks, that it is only a matter of time when practically all of the State banks will feel warranted in becoming nationalized. And when that condition has been brought about, then we will have the trust companies, who will operate in a separate way and who are granted more liberal provisions than the national bank to go ahead and take care of certain kinds of business on the one hand and the national banks on the other. I am thoroughly of the opinion if a bill similar to the one I have introduced can be put into effect, that instead of having disasters brought about by the crash of a national bank, which seriously disturb every condition in every community when a happening of this kind occurs, that in the future we can reduce their heavy losses to a minimum and, at the same time, wind up the affairs of any defunct organization in such a way as to save to the depositors all the money they have placed in the bank.

Originally a bank was considered a private institution; but as time has rolled on the opinions of the people have become more liberal, until today they are declared to be public institutions. And it is for this reason the different States in the Union have come to the conclusion that banks, being public institutions, it is right to protect the depositors or to protect the public. And while this Congress may not have sufficient time to pass a bill of this kind, yet I am thoroughly of the opinion that it is only a question of time until a bill will be passed protecting depositors in national banks.

This bill provides that one half of 1 percent shall be levied against the average daily deposits of a national bank as an assessment fee when it goes in as a member or when it is entitled to participate in this fund. I am of the opinion that if we can assess the profits that are made by the Federal Reserve Bank System each year, thereby setting aside 10 percent to the credit of this fund, that this amount as carried in my bill can be decreased probably to one tenth of 1 percent. And if that would meet the approbation of the committee and those who are interested in this subject, then the expense of a national bank becoming a member or becoming a participant in this fund would be very, very small.

Mr. SCOTT. Then in the last analysis if it reached that Utopian stage where there were no bank failures throughout the country the amount of reserve carried in this guaranty fund might be taken out and utilized in other ways?

Mr. McCLINTIC. It was my intention to write a new amendment to this bill which would give the Comptroller of the Currency the right to decrease the assessments whenever he saw fit. The Federal Reserve Banking System made $55,000,000 in 1918 and some $80,000,000 in 1919. This money does not belong to the member banks, yet they are indirectly responsible for it. It is by the cooperation, support, assistance, and patronage they give to the reserve banks that made these results possible.

Mr. LUCE. The member banks are stockholders, are they not?

Mr. McCLINTIC. They are stockholders and, for that reason, they are entitled to participate in the profits that are made by the Federal Reserve bank. I cannot see how any person can say it would not be fair and right to take 10 percent of those profits, after the stockholders had been taken care of, and to put it into one of these funds in each Federal Reserve district to be used as a guaranty, so that when you put your money in a national bank you would know, if that bank failed, that your deposit would be safe.

Mr. STEVENSON. Should not you provide there that when that fund reached a certain figure, so many million dollars, there should be no more assessments made until there should be some impairment of it?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am very glad you made that suggestion. It meets with my approbation.

Mr. STEVENSON. We established the system of State insurance of all public buildings in South Carolina in 1899 and provided that all collections of premiums and all appropriations should go into a fund until it amounted to $2,000,000, and then there should be no further premiums over and above reinsurance—there should be no further profits accumulated until there was an impairment. It reached the $2,000,000 fund in about 6 years and the State insurance on all public buildings has been carried for practically nothing except just a small reinsurance since that time, and the $2,000,000 stands there as a guaranty.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The suggestion of the gentleman meets my approval.

Mr. KING. Suppose in some manner that Congress should wake up to the fact that all this money should be turned into the Treasury (this $2,000,000 you speak of is really nothing after all but a form of taxation of the people) and should limit those earnings, then where would we get your fund from, if legislation of that kind should be passed?

Mr. McCLINTIC. If the Federal Reserve banks of the country did not make any profits, then there is a provision in this bill which would allow the Comptroller of the Currency to increase the assessment, provided it was necessary to take care of the losses of any defunct bank. In other words, this bill provides that the Comptroller of the Currency may increase the assessment provided it does not reach any more than 1 percent of the daily average bank deposits, based upon the daily average in 1 year, not including the deposits of State funds and national funds.

Mr. LUCE. I take a personal interest in these proposals and am very glad to consider them seriously, because of a personal consideration. I am one of 80,000 citizens of Boston who, at the present moment, are deprived of the use of about $30,000,000 of money—my share of it being pretty small—by reason of the failure of four trust companies. My own deposit came to me; I did not put it in myself, but it came into my possession too late for me to pull out the money before they went to smash. Now those four trust companies were new, comparatively; they had been organized by men without much experience in banking; they were rashly conducted, their loans being tied up and not liquid, so that when depositors began to worry and to withdraw their accounts they could not get in their loans. Some of their troubles were due to that Napoleon of finance, Ponzi. Now, I should like to have that money right off. They tell me probably I will get mine sooner or later, but I should like to have it at once.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I should like to see the gentleman get his money.

Mr. LUCE. But there are a good many banking institutions in Boston that are safely conducted, prudently conducted, and honorably conducted; they are prosperous and make money. If I should vote for this proposal, they would ask me, "Why should we, who are cautious, who are prudent, and who have spent our lives in learning how to run this business and who feel we are trustees for our depositors and try to be honorable men—why should we be mulcted in order to pay somebody else who was foolish enough to intrust his money to men apparently unfitted to care for it?"

Mr. McCLINTIC. I shall be very glad to answer the gentleman. In the first place, this bill will not cost those national banks you refer to in Boston very much money.

Mr. LUCE. It will cost them some.

Mr. McCLINTIC. It will cost them some, for the reason they have all indirectly contributed toward a line of business which has produced a sufficient amount of profits in order to maintain this kind of protection. And, in addition to that, it is to their advantage, for this reason: Whenever their institutions comply with the provisions of this bill, according to section 6, which says—

"As soon as a bank has complied with the provisions of this section, the Comptroller shall furnish to said bank a certificate which shall recite that said institution has complied with the provisions of the National Depositors' Guaranty Act, and the bank receiving the same shall be permitted to advertise that its depositors are protected by the national depositors' guaranty law."

A bank's success, to a large extent, always depends upon the patronage it receives. A bank without any deposits cannot do very much business. It simply means its business will be increased to that extent that it will more than recompense them for the small amount they have paid in order to be protected by this fund; and their business will be so much larger than the ordinary trust company, who will probably not be allowed to participate in this fund, that the expenditure it costs them will amount practically to nothing.

Mr. STEAGALL. Is not this true, also, that bank failures often are brought about by periods of depression that nobody in the world can anticipate and by psychological developments that cannot be anticipated; so that really a big bank, a strong one, prudently managed, can never be said to be exempt from the dangers that attend banking as faced by the smaller institutions, all being in one inseparable system?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The statement of the gentleman is quite true, and I will cite you a condition that exists in the South (and I do not wish to draw any sectional lines, because this bill applies to every section of the United States), where during the last 5 or 6 months the spinners were out of the market, and while the price of cotton remained fairly high, yet the man who had 200 bales of cotton on hand could not find a market for it. The bank that advanced the money to the buyers, in order to take care of the farmers, was unable to collect its loans, and this situation caused some of them to fail. The same condition was true up in the Northwest with relation to the price of wheat. The object of this bill is to provide a system that will furnish this kind of protection to the banks located in every section of the United States, so that emergency conditions like the gentleman has spoken about can be taken care of in the future. And when you take into consideration a bill drawn along this line will practically cost the member bank only a very small amount, I do not believe that anyone engaged in this business would object to paying that small amount, when you take into consideration the added advantages it gives.

A short time ago a bank went broke in my own county. What happened? The banking department sent a man from away up in the northern part of the State that knew nothing about the situation in that part of the county to wind up its affairs. An attorney was appointed. A whole set of machinery was put in operation in order to wind up the affairs of that bank. They had to get their information relative to the assets from people on the outside. I have known a bank that failed to run along for 12 months before the business was finally settled up and all the cost of closing up the affairs of that bank had to come out of the amount of money that was collected and this caused the depositors to receive a correspondingly smaller amount. I might go back and give you some personal experiences, but I dare say every member here knows that whenever a bank fails in any community and the sign is put up on the door "This bank is in the hands of the Federal Government", then runs begin to be made on the other banks; and unless they stick together and furnish capital to take care of that situation, in many cases a great many of the institutions go down in a crash. Inasmuch as we have prepared a system which is working successfully at the present time and we have the money already in hand, why would it not be right to place a small percentage of that into a fund and thus charge each bank only a small amount for this kind of protection? You might reduce it to one twentieth of 1 percent. It simply means, gentlemen, in a few years from now, these State banks of the country would gradually come over and be nationalized and then we will only have two systems, thereby decreasing the cost to the taxpayers of maintaining these different kinds of businesses and, at the same time, furnish the kind of protection the people want.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. McClintic, is it not actually true that the failure of a large industrial enterprise in a community is a great misfortune; but the failure of a bank in a community is a calamity that reaches very much further than the failure of any particular concern in a community?

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is true. And it is further true that, as a rule, the person who loses money in a bank failure is the one who is not able to lose the money; it is the poor unfortunate, nine times out of ten.

Mr. McCLINTIC. In many instances it brings about runs on other institutions in the immediate centers and thereby affects every kind of business.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you mean no bank can fall without affecting some other bank in some certain degree?

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. And as I understand your argument, the well-managed banks could well afford to pay a small minimum amount of insurance against that sort of thing?

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is it exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. Because whenever any bank fails it affects some other bank?

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is it exactly.

Mr. PHELAN. How many bank failures have you had there in the past year in State banks?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I could not answer that question; not very many. We have had, possibly, about the same number as national banks; possibly a few more. But there is a section in the Oklahoma statutes which provides that "no person who has been convicted for a violation of the banking laws of this or any other State shall be permitted to engage in or become an officer or official in any bank organized in this State."

That section was put in the law in order to keep wildcat bankers who had failed in other States from coming to Oklahoma and engaging in the banking business. In other words, the guaranty law of my State has been greatly tightened up until we have done away with many of the risks we had to go up against in the early days following statehood. A guaranty bank law in a new State has to run many more risks than in an old State, for the reason that the people are not acquainted with the different characters who seek to engage in this kind of business, and oftentimes men who should not be granted charters are placed in charge of institutions.

Mr. PHELAN. There is a possible objection to a bank guaranty system that I think is of more importance than any I have heard mentioned here yet. The average man today endeavors, perhaps not always successfully, when he deposits money in a bank, to put it in a bank which he feels is well managed. In other words, he intrusts his money to men in whom he has confidence. In the long run, public opinion will, I think, pick out the men who are superior, rather than the men who are inferior, to handle their money.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I think that is true.

Mr. PHELAN. The better class of men, therefore, will be handling the banks that are doing the largest amount of business; and, since all industry and commerce depends on efficient management of the banks, it is extremely important that the institutions which grow and have more and more power and resources shall be managed by capable men. Now there is this objection—perhaps it is not fatal, but there is this objection—to bank guaranty of deposits, that when a guaranty system is evolved and put into execution, it takes away entirely from the depositor any caution as to where he deposits his money, because he feels secure in any bank, with the possible result that bank deposits will be made in banks through friendship, politics, or what not, and not on the judgment of the depositor—deposits will be made in banks managed by men of the type who ought not to manage banks.

That goes right to the essence of the whole banking system, and I think it is one reason why men who have been successful in the banking business, who can see something besides their own business, who can see the necessity for proper and efficient bank management to the whole community, to the whole country, object to a bank guaranty bank system.

Mr. McCLINTIC. But I do not think the public should be penalized because national or State bank authorities allow someone to engage in that business who should not have been granted the privilege. Under our present system, when an application is made, it is referred to an inspector in that particular section; and he makes an exhaustive report as to the financial condition of the men, their character, and all other facts possible to be obtained as to their business capacity.

Mr. LUCE. In the cities, these banks are often transferred from their original owners to other owners.

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is true, and that is the reason our present law provides that when an inspector finds any official connected with a bank who is not satisfactory, he has the right to remove that official and to place somebody else in charge who will be satisfactory to the Government. In other words, we have advanced from the old days up to the present time where we have adopted a sufficient amount of machinery to get the very best class of people in the banking business; and it is my hope, in the interest of humanity, in the interest of good Government, that some legislation like this can be put into law so as to take care of emergency conditions in the future.
